THE VAUDEVILLE QUESTION.

IN another column is printed a letter from Mr. Lew F. Cullins of The Dalles, Oreg., who protests against the condemnation of vaudeville in connection with pictures. He states that he has had a very different experience from that of another correspondent whose letter was printed in The Index recently.

Mr. Cullins is probably right from his point of view. It is possible that he caters to a patronage which will stand for cheap vaudeville; it is possible that he is playing a class of vaudeville that is better than that usually offered in picture theatres. Then there is the possibility that the better class of vaudeville does not play in The Dalles, which leaves Mr. Cullins' offerings the best the town will stand and consequently draws to his house those who like vaudeville. His case may be an exception and there may be others similarly situated in the small towns where the best vaudeville never appears.

Our opinions are based upon our own preferences and experience in part, and upon the testimony of others. With mighty few exceptions what vaudeville we have seen in picture theatres was stupid when it was not disgusting and aroused only derision. We must give Mr. Cullins credit for being able to discriminate, and we feel sure that he would never stand for the majority of acts usually seen in picture theatres.

Just as there are some so-called picture thetres that are poorly ventilated, dark and uninviting, but still money-makers, there are those which run vaudeville profitably. Such places are simply operated down to the level of their public. The fact that that class of houses is profitable does not alter the fact that the vaudeville offered by them is "cheap" and offensive to a large class of patrons of the picture theatre—the class which goes to see the pictures. Neither does it alter the fact that there are many people who would go to the picture theatre if they did not have to listen to the cheap vaudeville.

Pictures these days are so good and of such great variety that there is no necessity to vary the monotony with something infinitely worse. A wise manager who knows how to make the most of pictures will never have to go to extra expense to vary his program with questionably vaudeville.

THE BAITING OF LAEMMLE

From the awful squeal that went up from the camp of the Little Giant of Kenosho it is evident that the rapier thrust delivered by George Kleine found a crevice in the tin armour of the valiant knight of the "independents" and let loose the hot air in a copious malodorous blast.

It was a "dare-devil"-ish thing to do, for there is none so vulnerable as the bombastuous "Lemmel Man," and a serious puncture might result in an annihilating explosion.

How it must have hurt the "Lemmel" crowd to behold their patron saint so neatly spitted and then done to a turn over the fire of Klein's keen wit. In vain do they resort to ancient history; 'tis but an evasion, an attempt to "buffalo" the populace in hopes of making a safe getaway.

"President" of this, "president" of that and the other, it is still "the little, shrinking, fearsome man, who lingers in the marble hall" and watches the more fortunate ones roll by in the sumptuous band wagon and, "slowly, with a faltering voice, a voice unsteady as the sea, remarks: 'O, Lemmel? Why, that's me.' "

VALUE OF PICTURES TO CHILDREN

The Chicago evening "American," of June 16, had the following editorial on the value of pictures—moving pictures especially—to children, as they convey ideas to the mind directly, and by the easiest road:

Ruskin, who had painfully tried with his pencil and pen to reproduce the beauties of architecture and of nature, rejoiced in the discovery of photography. He realized that with photography a man might live and die in his own village and yet be a great traveler. For the photograph brings everything that is worth while in the world before the eyes of the stay-at-home. When the MIND travels the body need not travel.

Have you ever thought how much the photograph has taught you? You know the leaning tower of Pisa, or the great Pyramids of Egypt, or the Palace of St. Mark's in Venice, or the Falls of Niagara—hundreds of the world's wonders.

They are clear in your mind, although you may never have actually seen any ONE of those things.

Through the photograph we travel in our imagination, and by the photograph we are tempted to travel physically.

The moving picture—lending a semblance of life, multiplies infinitely the value of photography as a force in education.

And because the moving picture has such power—especially upon the immature minds of children—ALL MOVING PICTURE EXHIBITIONS SHOULD BE RIGIDLY SCRUTINIZED; every picture put in motion before the eyes of children should pass a severe censorship and be officially licensed before its presentation.

No man for profit should be permitted to exhibit any picture that a good father or mother would refuse to put before a gathering of children in the home.

Any picture that would not be exhibited in a well managed school should under no circumstances be open to the inspection of children—and of this rule there should be the strictest possible enforcement.

Moving pictures, teaching attractively the facts of history, industry, travel and nature, ought to be AND WILL be part of public education in every school.

But there should be the severest punishment for those that exhibit harmful pictures. Unfortunately, of such pictures there are many.

This is a valuable article on the moving picture, in showing its power for good or evil. It would be difficult today to find a single manufacturer in the licensed ranks who is not anxious for the highly moral character of every film turned out by his factory. Every true friend of the moving picture is in favor of having every moving picture exhibition rigidly scrutinized, and of having every picture subjected to a severe censorship before presentation. The surveillance of theatres lies with the police, and such surveillance is not necessary where licensed films are run, for the latter have been subjected to a rigid censorship before being officially licensed for exhibition.

The swift exposure of, and "the severest punishment for, those that exhibit that harmful picture" are devoutly to be wished; but in these days of rigorous censorship of films, before which censorship no film can be exhibited without a heavy fine or probable cancellation of the offender's theatre license, it is misleading to state that there are many "harmful pictures" exhibited in this country. If there be any theatres in this country where harmful pictures are exhibited, it is the duty of every supporter and lover of the moving picture to have them closed up. And the guilty maker of such films should have his product barred from exhibition indefinitely. The moving picture is a great educational force for good, and it must not be perverted to evil.

MR. H. A. BROWNE AGAIN

A few weeks ago The Film Index reprinted from the London Kinematograph an interview given that excellent journal by Mr. H. A. Browne on the subject of trade conditions in America.

We pointed out the fact that Mr. Browne was in error in many of his conclusions and intimated that the worthy gentleman had mistaken a small disorganized faction in the trade as representative of the whole and thus drew the disparaging conclusion that the American trade was in a state of chaos.

When the reply of The Film Index reached England a representative of The Kinematograph Weekly called Mr. Browne's attention to it. This is what he said:

"You will better understand," said he, "the reason for such an attitude when you remember that the Film Index is the organ of the licensed companies. Their views are consequently prejudiced in favor of the Patents Company as against the Independents. I admit that I was looking at it from the point of view of the Independents, and that is what interests us over here. I still maintain that picture shows and pictures in England are far superior to those in America, and one of the reasons for that is that the film market is limited by its high tariff, while the English market is open to all the world. Another reason is that the Patents Company practically boycott English films. That company is a close corporation. If the renters over there who hold a license from the Patents Motion Picture Company venture to buy from other companies their supplies are immediately cut off by the Patents Company. Quality for quality, the English made film is as good as, if not better than, those of the majority of American makers, and the reasons why 'English pictures are seldom seen in America' are those I've given you.

"As to the Independents being a small disorganized faction, however much the Patents Company may belittle them, they are to-day a very strong body, and a fighting force to be reckoned with. I would ask the Patents Company one question: 'Is your house in order?'

"With reference to non-flam film, when I was in New York in April there was, as I said, very little in use. It is only quite recently that it has been adopted in New York."

In conclusion, Mr. Browne said: "I went to America to find a market for English and European films. I found the only business I could do was with the Independents, and naturally I discussed the matter from their point of view."

Really, you know, we ought to be satisfied with that. It is an admission in toto that what The Film Index said was, and still is, true, for conditions among the so-called "independents" are in greater chaos to-day than they were at the time of Mr. Browne's visit.

The great trouble with Mr. Browne, and others occupying a similar position in the world's picture trade, is that they cannot, or will not, look over their own back yard fences. If Mr. Browne was a far-sighted business man he would appreciate the fact that, even though English pictures have been eliminated from the program of the Motion Picture Patents Company that organization in supplying 80 per cent. of

Exchanges Join General Film Company

New Organization Receives Many Offers and Accepts Seven of Them

At a meeting of the General Film Company, held at the company's offices, 10 Fifth avenue, New York City, last Wednesday and Thursday, June 22d and 23d, it was announced that a number of offers to sell had been received during the past two weeks.

After considering these offers the company announced the purchase of the following exchanges:

Actograph Company, New York City.
Actograph Company, Albany, N. Y.
Pittsburg Calcium Light and Film Co., Rochester, N. Y.
Motion Picture Supply Company, Rochester, N. Y.
Buffalo Film Exchange, Buffalo, N. Y.
C. A. Calehuff, Philadelphia, Pa.
Electric Theatre Supply Company, Philadelphia, Pa.

Beyond this announcement no further details regarding the transfers have been given out by the General Film Company.

American picture theatres and in making 90 per cent. of the pictures used in America comes pretty nearly being representative of the picture trade here; and, prejudiced or not, The Film Index stated only the bare facts regarding the situation.

If Mr. Browne meant his strictures to refer to the "independents" only why didn't he say so at first. Now that he admits such to be the case we accept his apology.

A LITTLE MORE ON "CAMERA DODGING."

In acknowledging the correctness with which the editor of The Film Index grasped the question of "Camera Consciousness" raised by Mr. Herbert Waterbury in a letter to this paper published recently, the M. P. editor of the "Dramatic Mirror" propounds a question:

"How can a player convey the impression that he is looking away from the camera, or, as Mr. Waterbury puts it, conspicuously avoiding it, unless by some furtive glance he first betrays the fact that he knows the camera is there, which in itself is the thing 'the Mirror' has criticized? Can the Index editor or Herbert Waterbury elucidate on this point?"

The editor is not holding a brief for Mr. Waterbury; neither is he prepared to say that the M. P. actor has not been known to "dodge the camera" or become, as Mr. Waterbury explains, "camera shy." For ourself we are compelled to say that we have never known an actor to "shy" at the camera in a manner distressingly conspicuous. Our judgment was that "if" the actor did conspicuously "shy" the fault was as bad as to everlastingly "gaze."

Now that we have thus given our tentative support to Mr. Waterbury's contention, we must ask him to come forward with the documentary evidence in the case.

This matter of controversy does, nevertheless, suggest that there may be grounds for Mr. Waterbury's contention in the manner in which some pictures have been put on. Just at this moment we do not recall a case in point, but there have been pictures in which we have observed the movement of the players to be mainly up and down stage, so to speak, thus presenting a full rear view too frequently. Possibly it is such a situation that Mr. Waterbury had in mind. We recall nothing of recent issue illustrating that fault and despite the "Mirror" critic's constant pounding of the "camera gazers," we do not anticipate that M. P. players will develop the fault of "camera dodging" to any alarming extent.

JUSTICE TO MOVING PICTURE MAN.

Editor of The Globe:

Sir—The fact that certain moving picture shows are immoral is, to a great extent, due to the management of the houses. I have been in certain shows on 125th st and have been a witness to the actions of boys and girls who frequent the buildings. The shows consisted of two murders and the always present cracksman. Only two blocks from these shows is a theatre in which for 10 cents one may see as clean a show and hear as good a lecture as any one might wish. The reason for that is the employment of capable men and a capable woman to see that all within the theatre is kept as it should be.

I believe that the growing popularity of clean picture shows is tending to the uplift of every class of people. This theatre produces pictures of great celebrations thousands of miles away. Why, then, should the city direct attention to all those places and classify them as immoral? Like certain theatres and even streets, some of the picture shows, where children without proper protection are admitted, should be closed, but why do the parents themselves permit the children to enter them? H. A. D.

New York, June 12.

The above letter appeared in a recent issue of the New York "Globe" and is a fair statement of the conditions as the writer saw them. He might have gone farther and have said that any leaning toward immorality in the picture show is entirely due to the management of the house.

There is no necessity for picture theatre managers resorting to sensationalism to gain business. The class of pictures now made by the best producers do not depend upon commission of crime to arouse interest. There is enough in life to supply comedy and drama of the clean, the safe and sane sort, for all the needs of either legitimate or picture stage. Then, too, there are the educational subjects, which command the attention of everyone, great or humble. The range of subjects is wide and readily obtained.

The picture and the picture theatre as a form of amusement as an institution should not be condemned. Each individual theatre is just what its owner makes it. If he is a man of good character he will reflect that character in his business. He will keep his show clean and observe the law.

Unfortunately, the exhibition business is beset with men devoid of moral character, whose only aim is to get the money. There are too many who pander to the evil that is in mankind. Many, lacking in character themselves, run their businesses down to their own level; thus we see the low, suggestive picture that gets a laugh, set up as the standard of what a picture should be. Along with that class of pictures goes naturally all the depravity of the neighborhood, for the manager who will stand for the one will permit the other.

The attempt to correct the evil in the pictures by censoring them was all right as far as the pictures censored were concerned. But that did not entirely correct the evil. The corrective effort should be applied to the theatre and the owner or manager who permits questionable pictures to be shown in his house. By this sign there are some managers who would and should be "censored" out of business.

IS AGAINST VAUDEVILLE.

Louis Gerarini, manager of The Empire motion picture theatre, at 1519 Second avenue, New York city, reports that business on the East Side is better then he expected for this time of the year. His business has so increased that in the near future he intends adding 100 more chairs. At the present his theatre seats 150 persons.

Mr. Garbarini is another manager who believes that pictures are the only thing for such theatres and that vaudeville, unless it is the very best, does more harm than good. He has a small orchestra to furnish music for the illustrated songs and believes that good music is one of the chief attractions for popular songs.

Fire Chief's Daughter, Out This Week, Splendid Example of Realism.

Many attempts have been made to secure fire runs and conflagration scenes and in fact for a time the market was fairly flooded with pictures of this class, but all gave the impression to the patron as a framed-up affair and assumed the atmosphere of picture posing, too much to savor of the real. In this respect Selig has produced a picture so true to life, so real in the heart interest, and the attending excitement prevalent at big fires that the slightest doubt as regards public opinion has been swept aside, and those who have been fortunate enough to witness the sample copy of this truly wonderful picture, have pronounced it the pinnacle of success and bespeak for it the popularity accorded the most noted films of the times.

The story embodies a theme of intense interest and proves the oftimes repeated phrase, that "many a manly heart beats beneath a shirt of blue." The fire chief has a beautiful daughter whom he is desirous of marrying to a wealthy clubman of political influence—but the fates and her heart had willed it otherwise. She had met and loved a fire lieutenant in her father's employ and sought only that love that is balm to the seathing emotions of true womanhood. The chief, incensed at the choice of the daughter, reduces the lieutenant to the ranks, and later forbids him the home. But "Love finds a way." So did Ellen—the humble little home of Jack Graves, with only his widowed mother as a companion, holds more in store for her than all the riches her father's choice could offer. She was at the parting of the ways—the future held her happiness in the balance. She followed the instinct of her own heart and is happy in her choice. The father casts her from his shelter and refuses to become reconciled.

One day a fire is reported while Jack is at home—on ascertaining that it is the chief's own home, he is the first on the ground and fights the deadly flames with all the power within him, and risks and almost loses his life in saving the home and Ellen's mother. There was no mistaking to whom is due the credit and as a devoted wife and mother watches carefully over the sick bed of Jack and as the sultry days drag slowly on, a new spirit has awakened in the chief's heart and he goes to the young couple and gives his hand to the one he had turned from his door.

Because Julius Both and a few selfish merchants of Huntington, W. Va., are under the impression that motion picture theatres in that ctiy are prospering, they have appeared before the city commissioners asking that there be no licenses granted to motion picture men, claiming it is hurting their business.

The matter was discussed at a meeting of the board, June 18, when J. A. Burns, one of the oldest showmen known in that section applied for a license. Mr. Burns is not only a citizen of Huntington, but is also a large property holder. When the meeting was over Mr. Burns was told his application had been turned down and there was no possible chance of him doing business in his own city.

EXTRA SPECIAL RELEASE.

The editor of The Film Index has received the following important announcement:

"Mr. and Mrs. J. Stuart Blackton announces with pleasure the birth of Violet Virginia on Wednesday, June 22, 1910, at 9 a. m. Weight, eight and three-fourths pounds. Licensed by the Motion Picture Patents Company; approved by the National Board of Censors; but reserved for private exhibition only."

The Index herewith extends heartiest congratulations to Mr. and Mrs. Blackton and best wishes for the new "Vitagraph Girl."

J. C. SHULL OPENS NEW THEATRE.

J. C. Shull, of Dowagiac, Mich., opened his new theatre on North Front street, June 18. The house was crowded and gave every evidence of the business that could be done with a first-class house giving first-class pictures.

The ground upon which the building stands was purchased by Mr. Shull from the Scott brothers.

Detective Picture Story

Essanay Puts Over a "Sherlock Holmes."

OUT at the Essanay manufacturing plant last week, through the courtesy of S. P. Hamilton, superintendent, I was treated to a view of a drama that is bound to raise still higher the reputation of the product bearing the Indian head trade-mark. It was the negative that was run off for me, there being no prints made as yet, the release of the film not yet being fixed. Nor, indeed, has the title been decided upon; so I shall refer to the subject as the "detective story," and by that designation it will be readily recognized, when it comes out under its proper name; for there is not the slightest doubt that it will create a stir and a "sit-up-and-take-notice" feeling in film circles and among picture theatre patrons.

I had never before seen a detective story of complicated plot told in moving pictures, although I understand the Edison Company turned out the "Livingston Case" some time ago, and this reel, therefore, impressed me more strongly than ever with the great dramatic potentialities and possibilities of the moving pictures. Of course, the success of making clear to the spectator the inner-mind workings of the principals in such a film story depends chiefly on the producer, when, by rapid change of scene, he keeps the attention alternately on the actions of each of the principals and enables one to follow the moves and counter moves made by them. But it must not be forgotten that clever acting plays an all important part in the unraveling of the story, as a look, a gesture, or an attitude may each convey more than many sentences could express in the spoken drama.

With the exception of the opening scene, where the highly-bred thief and the celebrated detective of the story accidentally confront each other, the action is confined to interior views, and these include among them a high society reception in New York, where smart costumes, well-bred ease, grace of movement and elegance of manner are all indispensable to a correct and pleasing depiction of the scene. To the credit of the Essanay Eastern stock company it must be conceded, with ungrudging praise, that every member sustains his or her part with becoming dignity and effect. The photographic quality of this scene is excellent, and, indeed, this applies all through the reel.

Detective Bramwell of the story has been ably and realistically portrayed by Brinsley Shaw, a well seasoned and capable actor, who, just now, is making a big hit in his part with "The Fortune Hunter," at the Olympic, this city. Indeed, I could see from the easy and natural run of action throughout the enactment of the story that much careful rehearsal and clever stage management has been done to bring out with proper effect the telling points in Mr. Shaw's characterization. I refer, of course, to that support which must be given by the minor characters in a cast to the work of the principals, and, in this respect, the Essaney stock company merits praise.

The same well-balanced support was given Marshal Stedman, who took the part of the society thief. Mr. Stedman gives a strong, clear, snappy impersonation and centers attention on the purloining society man whenever he comes into the camera's field. His training with several of Charles Frohman's companies and with the Viola Allen company has made him a polished and forceful actor.

SCENE FROM ESSANAY'S "THE HOLLOW CANE"—THE HOSTESS EXHIBITS HER COLLECTION OF CURIOS.

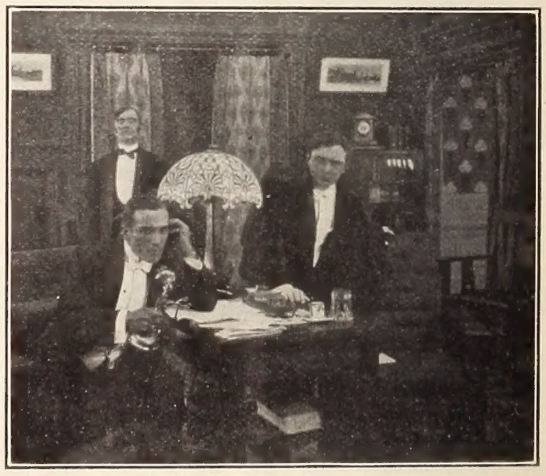
But I have referred to the clever stage management, and to the skillful manner in which the scenes of this film subject are rapidly changed to bring out clearly the continuity of the story. That veteran producer, Tom Ricketts, can claim responsibility for both and, when picture theatre goers see the reel run off, much of the fascination that it works in the mind of each will be due to the careful, intelligent planning and keen-sighted supervision of Mr. Ricketts.

A brief outline of this detective story will be in order at this juncture. Bramwell, the detective and the society thief, who shall be nameless, run into each other by accident on the street. The thief's hat falls off and the detective politely lifts and hands it to the owner. As he does so, he scrutinizes the stranger's face closely. Walking along, after the incident, the detective is convinced that the man is a criminal and that they have met before.

The thief, in turn, has recognized the detective, but soon banishes from his mind all fear of discovery. Meanwhile the detective has reached his office and begins to rummage through a pile of old photographs. After long search, he discovers a photograph of the man in question. The mustache formerly worn has been shaven off, hence the difficulty of identification after many years.

THE THIEF SEES THE JEWELS.

The thief, who has extensive society acquaintance of the best class, attends a reception given by a noted society leader. She has a splendid collection of jewels, which the thief contrives to steal almost before her eyes. The theft is discovered almost immediately afterwards, and before any of the guests have left. Bramwell is called up and requested to come immediately. This he does, and has himself announced as a foreign nobleman. The thief, however, recognizes him at once. The detective also espies the thief. The ladies are requested to leave the gentlemen alone for a short time to discuss a question not suitable for delicate ears. The detective searches all the men guests, leaving the thief to the last, confident that the jewels will be found on him. But he is disappointed. His brain working quickly, he maps out a plan to find the jewels, which he is certain are in the thief's possession. He is successful, and turns the trick in about five minutes.



BRAMWELL, THE DETECTIVE, IS NOTIFIED OF THE ROBBERY.

How it was done must be learned by seeing the film, as to tell it here would spoil the interest of the story.

ESSANAY NOTES.

The Essanay Company's Saturday Western release of this week, "The Bad Man's Last Deed," is an exceptionally strong human interest drama, picturesque in its scenic surroundings and splendidly photographed. It tells of a Western bad man who has won the title of "undesirable citizen" and is requested, after a shooting up affair, to get out of the community, with a warning that he will be instantly dispatched should he cross a certain boundary line fixed by the sheriff. Arizona Pete, the bad man, later accomplishes a good deed when he accompanies the son of one of his enemies, across the dead line, when he had found the boy in a gambling dive in a neighboring city, drunk and fleeced of his money, but pays the penalty of death later when the sheriff shoots him down.

The two comedies coming next week are typical of the Essanay's Chicago product and of an ascending standard "The Other Johnson," tells of a chap who receives word that he has fallen heir to an immense fortune. He is immediately oppressed by creditors, "touching" friends, beggars and charity solicitors, who make his life so much like a nightmare that he is only too happy when at the end of the day he receives a dispatch that he is not the right Johnson. "A Darling Confusion" which accompanies "The Other Johnson," is short but overflowing with the stuff that laughs are made of.

SELIG'S LATEST SENSATIONAL WAR SPECTACLE.

The Selig Company is engaged in producing a big feature film at the present time that promises to hit the high places in the favor of picture theatre goers. The picture will reveal hand to hand conflicts and the clash of large bodies of men in mortal combat on the Sahara sands. The following excerpts from the evening "News" of Chicago, June 7, has reference to the new Selig film, and will give an inkling of what may be expected in the realism of the settings and encounters, and the accuracy of the costumes and uniforms of the contending British and Arabian forces:

Residents of Dune Park, near Gary, Ind., are recovering from an exciting experience—that of seeing an entire British army annihilated by a band of merciless Arabian warriors, in real moving-picture style. The shimmering stretches of sand in Indiana for a time were transformed into what appeared to be a real desert, including all the essentials of typical Sahara surroundings. The camels, palm trees and a herd of prancing Arabian horses, all were there. Dusky travelers—of the deep-dyed species—with black beards, and carrying curved Oriental swords, rode the Arabian chargers and played important parts. The occasion was an excursion of a company of moving-picture actors from a Chicago concern in search of a setting which would make sufficiently realistic a desert scene destined for presentation in picture theatres.

The climax of the unique outing of the Chicago actors came when the tired band rushed for the train just twenty minutes before its departure. This, however, was not included in the picture, and was not taken on the film.

NEW FALL RIVER HOUSE.

When the new Palace Theatre, of Fall River, Mass., is complete, July 15, it will not only be one of the largest in the Bay State, but will also be one of the prettiest and most modern in the country. The theatre, which will be located at the corner of Bedford and Third streets, will seat 800 persons, each person having a chair that will give him plenty to feel comfortable during the performance. It is the intention of the management that every patron will be at ease and not feel crowded in the least.

The theatre will be artistically decorated. There will be marble statues in front of the building and in the lobby, and electric lights will stud the building on all sides. The fire exits will be so arranged that the house can be emptied in three minutes. The house will also have a new $500 picture machine capable of giving the best results in showing the films.

Manager William B. Stecker is looking after every detail of the building and assures his patrons that everything for their comfort will be looked after.

BUYS THE PICTURE SHOW.

Joe Accommasso, one of the proprietors of the Elite theatre at No. 23 West Main street, Carterville, Ga., purchased, on June 2, the half interest of his partner, A. Cuomo, and is now sole proprietor of the cosy little theatre. Mr. Cuomo and family will return to Rome, and Mr. Accommasso will remain in charge here. The Elite is a nice, clean and handsome little moving picture theatre and is doing a splendid business. Some of the best pictures that can be obtained are being run nightly.

IMPROVING SHELBYVILLE THEATRE.

The management of the Lyric theatre, Shelbyville, Ill., has arranged for some extensive improvements which will be finished some time before the summer ends. The ceiling in the back of the house will be torn out and a new large picture screen installed and elevated about six feet.

There will be six hundred new seats put in and more standing room provided just inside the entrance. The cost of the improvements will be over $500.

THE VAUDEVILLE QUESTION.

Western Manager Gives The Other Side—Successful In His Town.

The Dalles, Ore.

The Film Index, New York City.

Dear Sir:—I have been reading from time to time the many different letters sent to the Film Index condemning the so called "cheap vaudeville acts," run in connection with moving pictures; also editorials saying that the straight picture shows are the real winners. Now what I would like to know, what right has any one manager to d—n vaudeville acts just because it did not prove to be a winner for him? It may be the fault of the acts, again it may be the inability of the manager. I think any one should only send in their own experiences and not try to make people believe that the same thing exists throughout the whole country.

As a manager, with 27 years experience in different lines of the amusement profession, I wish to say that I try to give my people what they want, and I know that I am in a better position to know what my people want, here in my city, than some one a thousand miles away. If my trade demands vaudeville acts and pictures that is what they'll get; if they want straight pictures all well and good whatever suits my trade, suits me so long as I am getting the dimes. I am now in my third year in this city; was the first house here, and have seen about a dozen different managers, come and go since I opened; but my house is still running and playing to S. R. O., every night.

The first six months here, I ran straight pictures, but business was not big then, so I put in vaudeville acts and for over two years they have proven a big success. Therefore I have tried the straight pictures and the combination and I know what is best for me. There is another house here which runs pictures only, I know some were close to the business they do and I am very glad that I own the house I have.

Why, then, should I be trying to condemn another man's house that I know nothing about. Why don't these parties write what they think about it, and not try to put themselves up for authority for the world. If vaudeville does not pay any manager, let him cut it out, and not keep trying to knock some one else that is making money by using vaudeville. The Index says in an item, in issue under date of June 18, that vaudeville has no place in a picture show, and the manager who insists upon running it is driving and keeping away his best business. Now I wish to say that my trade consists of the very best people in Dalles, which proves that the above-mentioned item is not a fact everywhere. The Index may mean well, but such items do not read well to managers who are making a success by using a mixed program, and I think that my bank statements will show up very favorably along with any straight picture house in any part of the country.

With the same seating capacity, same admissions and size of city, without a doubt the mixed program has proven to be the best for me. So let the other fellow say what he knows and not what he thinks.

Yours truly, Lew F. Cullins.

COVERING A NEWS EVENT

How the Vitagraph Got the Picture Story of Roosevelt's Return

THERE is a wonderful similarity in the methods employed to cover a big news event by a metropolitan newspaper and up to the minute motion picture manufacturer. This fact was splendidly illustrated upon the occasion of the return of Colonel Roosevelt to New York, June 18, which event was the occasion of a considerable demonstration. It was previously announced by the Vitagraph Company that the event would be covered for pictures in the usual Vitagraph completeness, and the result, now known to most of the picturemen, is said to be one of the most successful efforts of the kind.

For the reporters of the newspaper the Vitagraph Company substituted motion picture cameras and camera men who were stationed at advantageous points. The newspaper tug was represented by two fast motor yachts, and the "copy" was the negative film. Throughout the event the picturemen exercised the same alertness to catch and record each event that is common to the newspaper reporter and it is doubtful if the exhaustive reports of the affair published in the several New York dailies are more illuminating than are the Vitagraph pictures.

SECTION OF FILM PICTURING ROOSEVELT.

The skirmish line of the picture men deployed at a very early hour Saturday morning. It consisted of the two Vitagraph motor yachts, the Ethel May II, Captain A. E. Smith commanding, and the Paula, Capt. J. Stuart Blackton commanding. Besides the crews each boat was equipped with a battery of two motion picture cameras with operators and assistants.

Making an early start the Vitagraph yatchs were the first to sight the SS. Kaiserin Auguste Victoria in the offing at about six o'clock. Salutes were exchanged and pictures of the big liner coming up the lower bay were taken. Later the faithful eyes of the cameras recorded the approach of the official boats, the Manhattan and the Androscoggin; the first of which received the distinguished traveler from the liner and later turned him over to the Reception Committee on the Androscoggin. Having recorded these events the negatives were delivered to a waiting automobile at the Bay Ridge landing in the lower bay and rushed to the Vitagraph studios for development.

On land the operations were conducted by five camera outfits; three at the Battery where Colonel Roosevelt was formally received by Mayor Gaynor and from whence the parade proceeded up Broadway; one at Washington Arch, where the parade turned into Fifth avenue, and the fifth at Central Park Plaza, Fifth avenue and 59th street, where the Colonel reviewed the procession as it dispersed.

MR. BLACKTON'S YACHT, THE PAULA.

As soon as each camera squad completed the work allotted to it the exposed negative was taken up by a waiting automobile and hurried to the studios where the work of developing and printing was proceeding with despatch and precision. Altogether between 4,000 and 5,000 feet of negative film was exposed and developed. From this fund of material was gleaned 415 feet of corking pictures, the first prints of which were delivered and exhibited in New York on Sunday, June 19—just about 24 hours after the big event occurred.

When it comes to picture making, guess you will believe that is "Going Some."

KALEM'S NEW BULLETIN.

The Kalem Company has abandoned its plan of issuing an extended descriptive lecture with each subject and adopted a simple bulletin leaflet giving a brief description of the picture. Accompanying this bulletin will be another sheet carrying a half-tone engraving from a strong scene in each picture with the cast of the principal characters in the picture. This sheet is 8½x11 inches and will be convenient to post on bulletin boards in theatre lobbies.

OPPOSING PICTURE TAX

New Orleans Item Argues Strongly Against Additional Burden On Picture Theatres.

Now that the appeal of the motion picture men of New Orleans, La., has reached the press, it is gratifying to know that the principal dailies of the "Crescent City" are going to help the managers of the small theatres to fight the bill of Representative Harold Moise, who proposes the placing of an additional tax of $25 on second, third and fourth-class motion picture theatres.

The New Orleans Item, one of the leading papers, has come forward and given its views on both sides of the question. It congratulates Mr. Moise for the attitude which he takes to give the additional tax to charity, while at the same time it condemns him for attempting to take away innocent pleasure from hundreds of people who can't afford high-class entertainment. An editorial from The Item is as follows:

We trust that Representative Harold Moise of New Orleans reckoned up the consequences when he proposed to raise the tax on certain classes of moving picture shows, second, third and fourth—which, of course, means the cheaper and smaller shows, more or less remote from the center of things in this city.

We have already heard a wail from the vast and motley audiences who feel their rights invaded; for an added tax will mean, for them, either a higher price of admission or fewer attractions.

The moving picture show is not a bit different from the rest of us. It will pass the tax along; and the "consumer" (in this case the kid with a nickel or the homebound mother with too many children and too little money to go far afield for pleasure) is always the ultimate goat, as nature intended the "consumer" to be.

Now, The Item respects Mr. Moise's courage and is willing to attribute to him the most worthy motives. The tax will go to the use of the Charity Hospital, and the young statesman's enthusiasm for that estimable institution is most commendable. But, Mr. Moise is making for himself that sort of trouble which the ambitious statesman usually avoids. He risks stirring up the potential women's vote, the ire of the juvenile, or the hate of the horny-handed son of toil, for proposing to curtail their five- and ten-cent sandwich of film with interlarded vaudeville.

We have spoken somewhat in levity; but there is a serious side to the matter, too. Without having gone deeply into the merits of the case we may safely ask Mr. Moise and his fellows to consider at least one phase of it.

The moving picture is the sole summer amusement of thousands of people whose purses do not reach as far as West End. The small shows scattered about the residential or minor commercial centers of the town give the mother who can not leave home long a chance to get a bit of pleasure and interest and save the price of the children's admission on carfare. The moving picture is nearly always entertaining. Often it is instructive. At any rate it is the sole amusement of many people and the chief amusement of many more. The shows have cut out, too, the "Jesse James" and "other man's wife" films almost entirely and cater especially in these smaller outlying places to what is technically known in all retailing as the "family trade." Pictures of a romantic, moral or semi-educational theme have the vogue. Industrial processes are popular. Comfortably seated, we may follow the milk from the grass, through the cow and the can, to the ultimate consumer's coffee cup. Cotton picking, or the wonders of foreign lands we may likewise view without getting beyond the odor of the Magazine Market. All this is worth while. We see and enjoy, and forgive the girl who sings "The Polar Bear Man," or the Hebrew or Dutch comedian.

We all need the moving picture show, and there are others who may need it more than we do. Taxes are necessary—and inevitable. Let us tax justly always. But we must never lose sight of the fact that the power to tax is also the power to destroy, and it is seldom wise to begin to levy a tax from the bottom or to put a greater tax on the necessities or the pleasures of the poor man and his family.

ELKHART THEATRE OPENS.

The opening of the Bucklen Theatre, Elkhart, Ind., June 7, was one of the features of the summer show season. The boys' band, a well-known local organization, played several selections during the evening and attracted a large crowd.

Owing to failure of the proper lenses to reach the theatre in time, the pictures on the opening night were not up to all expectations, but the following day showed a great improvement as the lenses arrived in time for the evening performance. The patrons of the house are well pleased with the class of pictures the management is running, and the theatre is now doing a good business.

PREPARING FOR BIG FIGHT

Vitagraph Camera Corps Starts for the Scene of Battle—Ten Cameras On the Job.

On Sunday, June 26, the Vitagraph camera corps consisting of ten cameras, camera men and attendants, under the direction of Mr. J. Stuart Blackton, left New York by special car for Reno, Nev., the scene of the great contest for the World's heavyweight championship between James J. Jeffries and Jack Johnson. The party will go via Chicago where a number of Chicago film men will join, and continue on with all speed to the battle grounds.

It is stated that the cameras will be placed in multiples of three, thus giving three negatives for each position. Every possible precaution to insure good pictures will be taken.

Regarding the negotiations being conducted by Mr. W. T. Rock, final word has not been received in New York. At a conference with Jeffries and Rickard on Thursday, June 23, the deal was closed for the interests represented by those gentlemen for which $75,000 was paid. Johnson and Gleason have, at this meeting, still to be closed with.

PLANING PLAYGROUND PICTURES.

There is a movement on foot among those interested in the welfare of No. 9 school playground, Rochester, N. Y., to make it one of the best places of the kind in this country. A new departure is the matter of securing a moving picture machine so that the children of that vicinity may receive instruction and pleasure as well from the pictures which could be shown, with a machine at the disposal of those in charge of the playground. At the recent convention of the playground league of America, held in Rochester, there was a demonstration of the value of motion pictures in connection with the work of playground instructors, generally, and a moving picture entertainment given for the benefit of those educators present convinced them that the idea is an admirable one.

POOR CHILDREN GUEST OF LYMAN HOWE.

Shubert's theatre, Kansas City, Mo., was filled with children from the various Kansas City institutes, June 17, to witness the motion pictures given by Lyman Howe. Mr. Howe who gave the performance free, also lectured to the young people in a most interesting manner. He gave them full descriptions of all the foreign cities and towns shown on the screen and also told them of how the motion picture machines were gotten up the dizzy heights of mountain peaks, where some of the prettiest scenes were taken.

To make the event more of a success the management of the Schubert theatre gave the theatre free of charge, while the two taxicab companies gave the little ones free transportation to and from the theatre.

According to those in charge of the institutions the motion picture entertainment was one of the biggest treats the children could have. They also praised the pictures and said they were most instructive and elevating.

PICTURES FOR CITY PARKS.

Councilman Michael Mullen, of Cincinnati, O., has offered to purchase a moving picture machine for Lytle Park, if the Park commission would operate it. The offer was accepted by that body at its meeting June 16. It is expected that there will be three or four shows a week for the entertainment of the children of that neighborhood, when plans are perfected, though it may be that a performance will be given on Sunday evening only at the start.

It is estimated that on Sunday, June 18, 300,000 persons visited Coney Island, that popular resort of New York City. All day long great crowds of sightseers passed up and down the beach, visiting all the resorts and places of amusement. Motion picture theatres reaped a harvest during the day and managers report they were surprised to see the way their places were patronized when taken into consideration all the other attractions there were.

It is now getting a fad with bathers after coming out of the water to run up to the motion picture theatres, see the show, then run back and finish their swim. This means that during the time a person is taking a good bath he sees at least two good shows. If the warm weather continues many managers will attempt to enlarge their houses as last Sunday showed signs of more business than the theatres would accommodate.

DELEGATES TO I. A. T. S. E. CONVENTION.

At a meeting of No. 35, Operators' Branch of the International Alliance of Theatrical Stage Employees, of New York City, June 20, John Finnety and A. Goldberg were chosen delegates to represent the local branch at the annual convention to be held in Washington, the latter part of July.

This years' convention is expected to be the largest attended in the history of the organization, representatives from all over the United States will be in attendance.

THINGS WE LIKE TO HEAR.

If you've got anything to say about a fellow, say it to his face. Never hold back the truth; let it come out good and strong. It doesn't do a fellow any harm, and it does the other fellow a whole lot of good. This sounds good; it has a ring to it that sounds clear and to the point:

Vitagraph Company of America.

Dear Sirs: I have fought a hard battle trying to hold it in but I can't hold it any longer. I have just got to say a few things about your Life Portrayals. Your Vitagraph Girl is "IT"; your Leading Man is alone in the field of pantomiming. The lady who played "Elektra," the student in "The Peacemaker," and Davy Jones are all great. There are others in your company who deserve mention, but I can't describe them; the two little children, of course, have no equal.

I have a show in a town that is a health and summer resort, and we have people here from all over the world. I am about to open what I consider for its size, the finest picture theatre in the state of Michigan, so for Lord's sake don't stop making pictures unless you want me to go broke.

Respectfully, R. G. PELTIER,
Bijou Theatre, Mt. Clemens, Mich.

CHICAGO LETTER

By James S. McQuade

THE Alliance ruled predominant at the Cincinnati meeting, held June 18 and 19. There was no discordant element present, from all accounts, as no invitation had been given any member of the Sales Co. to attend. Twenty-two exchanges—a gain of two since the Detroit meeting—were present, in person or by proxy, and all the members of the Associated Independent Film Manufacturers were represented in like manner.

During the two days' session very little was transacted in the line of business, most of the time being devoted to social festivities, at which the strengthening of the Alliance as an organization was the uppermost and persistent theme. The only new questions of importance considered were: an agreement on the part of the Associated Manufacturers to sell their product to members of the Alliance only and that the said manufacturers would refuse to sell to any exchange unless it purchased their program exclusively; also the Alliance, on its part, agreed to use the program of the Associated Manufacturers exclusively, until such time as the product of other independent manufacturers was placed in the open market.

The members of the Alliance, as will be seen from the foregoing, seek to strengthen their position and preserve their organization by refusing to tie themselves to any particular organization of manufacturers. If new manufacturers spring up in the future, whose product has merit, the Alliance reserves the right to purchase from them. So, too, if any manufacturing member of the Sales Co. is willing to ship his product direct to a member of the Alliance, it is optional on the part of that member to purchase from him. The perpetuation of the open market and the independence of the Alliance are the chief ends sought.

To prevent weakening or indecision on the part of any member of the Alliance, frequent meetings will be held throughout the year in various cities. At these meetings will be discussed all the new phases affecting the Alliance owing to a change of conditions, and due provision made to protect and fortify it against the encroachments of the enemy. The next general meeting of the Alliance is set for July 9 and 10 at Niagara Falls.

The Actophone Co., a member of the Associated Manufacturers, was recently reorganized and will be henceworth known as The Champion. The latter's representative announced at the meeting that the firm will be ready to release films in two weeks.

OUT! OUT! THOU DAMNED SPOT.

"Would that mine enemy would write a book!" wrote someone with an ax to grind. He, as aptly, might have applied that wish to a letter—a circular letter, for instance.

Whenever you see, or hear of, a man blowing his own trumpet loudly, blaringly and insistently, you can always bet your bottom dollar, that at some time or other, between blasts, he will say or do something that will re-act like a boomerang. That something may not come back as the echo of a windy trumpet note; more often it comes unexpectedly, like the whirling apex of a cyclone.

Some time ago, I received from an exhibitor—never mind who he is, or where—a circular letter which had been mailed him, over a year ago, by the ardent president of a licensed exchange. Thousands of copies of the same letter were mailed broadcast to other exhibitors throughout the country at the time; and, doubtless, many in the "independent" camp will recognize it at a glance. Here it is, punctuation and all, except the address of the exhibitor to whom it was mailed:

Chicago, Feb. 5, 1909.

Here are some COLD FACTS I want you to consider for ALL YOU ARE WORTH:

First:—YOU are the Mainstay of the Moving Picture Business. Without you the Manufacturer and the Renter wouldn't last as long as a snowball in Hell. (Moral:—Therefore when anyone tells you that the Manufacturers or the Renters are trying to put you out of business, he must have an Ax to grind. Don't let him use you as a grindstone.)

Second:—Certain people, styling themselves "Independents," are urging you to fight Thomas Edison, the man who invented the very apparatus that gives you and me a chance to make a living. The REASON why they want YOU to put up the fight is that they cannot do it themselves. Furthermore, they cannot get a license from Thomas Edison. (Moral:—If Thomas Edison refuses them a license, there must be a damned good reason back of his refusal. If Thomas Edison thinks these people are a detriment to the Moving Picture Business, can YOU afford to do business with them? There's a Nigger in the Woodpile. Be sure you know what it is before you accept any jackass advice.)

Third:—If you have any confidence in ME—if you believe I am on the square—WHY do you suppose I decided not to join the so-called "Independents?" LISTEN to the answer:—It's because THEY HAVEN'T GOT A SINGLE LEG TO STAND ON. Their ONLY hope is that they can get their fight into the Courts and do business for perhaps half a year or so before they are thrown out by law altogether. They are banking entirely on the law's delay—one of the biggest fool schemes that was ever devised. They expect you to help put up a losing fight, and in the meantime submit to all sorts of annoyance and nuisance. (Moral:—DON'T pull another man's chestnuts out of the Fire, because it is going to be about the hottest little fire that ever happened.)

BAKERONIAN THEATRE, PORTLAND, OREG.—Thomas McGuire, Proprietor. One of the Popular 5c. Theatres of Portland.

Fourth:—You KNOW from experience that Europe has already taken a back seat in the production of good money-making Films. America is in the lead, after a long battle, and it is a cinch that she will not let go of her advantage. If you do business with the so-called "Independents," you'll have to use European stuff exclusively, and you'll have to take whatever you can get. You won't have one-tenth as big an assortment of subjects to choose from as you will if you deal with me—and I can PROVE it. (Moral: Don't let a Dog in the Manger keep you from getting what you want.) CARL LAEMMLE, President, THE LAEMMLE FILM SERVICE.

How like the Laemmle effusions of today—only they were written on the other side of the fence! The same loud trumpeting egotist, who, as the I AM, sought to lead men in the only way by appealing to their vanity and cupidity, and by inoculating them with the belief in his own inviolate rectitude. THEN his business faults were those of poor method and egotism; misrepresentation could not be charged against him. NOW, sitting with impish glee on the trident formed by all three, he brazenly asks for a continuance of confidence from the men he has befooled. "If you have any confidence in ME" has been and always will be the burden of his song, until his dupes find him out, and then it will be his "swan" song.

Mr. Laemmle, how is your backbone? Or, more properly where is your backbone?

A WILD AUTO RIDE.

Geo. K. Spoor, who returned safe and sound the other day from his flying visit to Europe, narrates a humorous incident that happened during his sojourn there. That is, it turned out so that it can be viewed in a humorous vein, although it nearly proved a tragedy.

Mr. Spoor made the trip from Paris to Berlin in Martin Beck's 90-horse power Renault, in which were seated Mr. Beck, Wm. Passport, the chauffeur and himself. As everyone knows, Mr. Beck is vice-president of the Orpheum Circuit and, what is not so well known, Mr. Passport is the Orpheum booking representative at Berlin.

The auto trip is about 980 miles, and the chauffeur was relieved at intervals by Mr. Beck. When about 300 miles or so from Berlin, Mr. Beck was driving, and the machine was going at such a clip that Mr. Spoor expostulated. The next instant a rough place in the road caused the car to jump, and Mr. Passport fell out.

"Stop! Stop! Passport has fallen out," yelled Spoor.

"We'll get it on coming back," replied Beck, not catching what was said, and again hitting the high places.

Again Spoor yelled that Passport had disappeared.

"Good God!" ejaculated Beck, "I thought it was his overcoat."

"Yes, his overcoat; but Passport is in it," said Spoor.

The car was turned about and, when a mile was covered, Passport was discovered in the offing ambling towards them with a woe-begone look. The latter was caused by the fear that he might be forced to tramp it to the next stopping place, several miles away. He had fallen fairly on his shoulders, and the breath was crushed out of him for a time; but he was uninjured.

Autoing in Europe, over good roads, in flying demon cars of the Renault type, with Martin Beck at the helm, is considered risky traveling by Geo. K. Spoor.

FILM QUALITY AND VARIETY.

C. E. Van Duzee, manager of the Twin City Calcium & Stereoptican Co., of Minneapolis, Minn., wrote recently to George Kleine complimenting him on the high quality of the Gaumont product. Among other pleasing references, Mr. Duzee stated: "I want to congratulate you on the magnificent production of "Esther" you are now using, as it certainly rivals anything that the Pathe Co. have produced in their art films."

Manager C. D. Matting, of the Mitchell Film Exchange, Memphis, Tenn., has also words of good cheer for Mr. Kleine, as his letter and enclosure of June 15 show:

"We beg to hand herewith a letter from one of our customers containing a little compliment for your releases. As the opinion expressed therein is the same as held by at least 90 per cent. of the exhibitors we serve, it may contribute its part towards broadening the field of knowledge for any manufacturer who is ambitious to produce goods of merit."

The letter referred to was written by W. L. Mack, of Bleich & Mack, owners and managers of the New Grand theatre, Jonesboro, Ark. As it is the honest opinion of a man who has observed carefully and who evidently reflects accurately the feeling in his community, the letter is well worth the printing and space:

I have nothing important to relate at this time, but am writing for personal reasons, and, incidentally, to call attention to the enclosed editorial, clipped from the Memphis Commercial, which is exactly like the views our people have on the subject of motion pictures. Motion pictures, no doubt, occupy the most prominent position in the public mind of all forms of amusement or education, and for that reason are receiving more criticism at the hands of the people and press than any other amusement. While the most talk is in their favor, there are always those in every community who look for the bad in every issue, and can always be depended on to give a "black eye" to everything, no matter what it is, or what its worth may be to individuals or communities.

However, the inclosed clipping contains serious food for consideration, and is every whit true, and if there is much demand for pictures of the character herein censured, there are other places where they work against the standing of the picture theatres, and that is the condition in this place.

THE HOUSE OF MELIES

Making Rapid Strides in the Race of Quality

PICTURE men who have been long in the business, have watched with considerable interest the entrance of the house of G. Melies into the field of American picture productions. Sufficient progress has been made by this time to assure the friends of that old picture concern that the venture is already an artistic success, and that time alone is needed to place its product securely on the market.

In times past Melies was a name to conjure with among picture men. After the first furor, when the public began to tire of mere representations of moving things, it was G. Melies, of Paris, who conceived the idea of presenting spectacles and dramas, with actors in make-up, as on the legitimate stage. It was Melies who made the first long film. He originated and was for long time the past master of the art of making trick pictures and illusions. There are many who still remember that famous film, "A Trip to the Moon," and another equally popular, "Cinderella." These were at once the cause of wonder and despair of the film makers of their day and there is now no secret in the fact that Melies pictures were stolen, pirated, duped and imitated on every hand. But their excellence and character served as a type to be emulated and set a goal toward which all producers strived.

It is fitting, therefore, to render unto Melies such credit as is due him and his house for the prominent part he played in the origin of "the silent drama."

While the "trick picture" is no longer the great cause of wonderment that it once was, and the tabloid drama now forms the greater part of the multitude of subjects released by motion picture makers of the present day, we have still to reckon with the house of Melies, which has passed successfully through the evolutions of the trade and is a live and progressive factor.

Melies American studio was established some months ago under a license of the Motion Picture Patents Company, but difficulties in the manufacturing processes and with the organization of the producing department compelled a suspension of releases until April 7th of this year, when "Cyclone Pete's Matrimony," a pictured version of a whimsical feature of Western life, was the subject of the first offering.

G. MELIES SUBJECT, "THE LITTLE PREACHER."

G. MELIES SUBJECT, "THE RULING PASSION."

This picture was taken by the Melies stock company of experienced performers on a ranch near San Antonio, Tex., amid a wealth of "local color" heightened by the presence in the company of a large contingent of real cowboys, Mexicans and Indians. This "true to life" idea emphasized by the wholesome comedy of the story and the excellent photography of the picture, commanded instant attention for the new product of G. Melies, which set a new standard for Western pictures.

A week later came the "Branding A Thief," another distinctly Western phase of life, handled with great care for the idiosyncrasies and localisms which give value to such subjects, and the artistic merit of the new Melies pictures were fairly established.

Since then the subjects have been coming out with regularity. "Speed Versus Death" was a photographic gem and has been widely commented upon for its good qualities.

A specialty of the Melies company has been the Mexican dramas released from time to time. These started with "The Seal of the Church," a stirring story of Mexican life, which depicted love, hatred and revenge in many interesting ways. It was followed later by "The Padre's Secret," which was well received and carefully followed by audiences all over the country. The scenes of adobe houses and mission churches were particularly interesting to persons who had read of them, and it was like having Mexico brought to their very doors in all its varying picturesqueness.

The release of June 30th, "The Ruling Passion," is another of these Mexican plays. The ruling passion of these people is undoubtedly gambling, and in this picture is told a pleasing story of how a young "Vaquero" staked all he owned upon the outcome of a horse race and eventually won the girl of his choice with the race.

The race scenes are particularly stirring in this picture, and the scenes of Mexican village life, of work in the cactus fields, of the adobe houses, of the patios, haciendas, and missions are good enough to be released as scenic or industrial films.

The length of the Melies reels are limited to 950 feet, and "The Ruling Passion" was trimmed from 1,350 feet of negative to this regular length, so that there are never long-drawn-out exits, or monotonous scenes which contain nothing of interest.

The Melies stock company is operating on a ranch near San Antonio, Texas, under charge of a competent director, with plenty of scenarios written to order, so as to utilize the best scenery of the famous Pan-Handle country. The company has first call upon the services of fifty Texas and Mexican cowboys, who furnish their own horses, saddle and equipment, so that everything is realistic and correct to the smallest detail. More pictures of life in this interesting corner of the world may be looked forward to.

WHEELING THEATRE RUNS PICTURES.

The popular Virginia theatre, of Wheeling, West Virginia, will run motion pictures during the summer months. Manager Charles A. Feinler wants to give the Wheeling people a place to witness the best pictures and for that reason has decided to keep his house open during the hot months.

Besides adding new machines and making arrangements for only the best pictures Mr. Feinler is having a cooling plant put in. New pictures will be shown every day.

"OUT OF THE NIGHT"

Future Edison Subject from a Rex Beach Story

THE problem of getting a delicate or obscure suggestion "across the footlights" is the thing that troubles and keeps awake every dramatic producer. In the "spoken drama" a word may be used to do the trick where nothing else seems to suffice. With the picture producer there may be used no spoken word to convey or illuminate a subtle meaning upon which the picture depends, and without which illumination or "getting across" of the main idea or keynote of the picture, the entire efforts seems to the audience to be the merest nonsense.

It was this problem that confronted the Edison producers when they essayed a pictured interpretation of Rex Beach's gripping little story, "Out of the Night." Briefly the story is this: A young man, who has literally fought his way from the ranks to commercial success, finds himself at middle age possessed of little more than his hard-earned fortune. A friend persuades him to enter society and to see what it has in store for him. He is duly introduced to the charmed circle and there discovers the one woman.

In the preliminary stages of his courtship he is injured in a runaway accident while out horseback riding with the girl. The injury results in total blindness. Feeling that his affliction is a bar to matrimony the man decides to withdraw himself from the girl's presence and forget that he had hoped to win her affections. He also seeks to conceal from her the fact that he is blind lest she might feel inclined to marry him out of pity, for the injury he received was really the result of his attempt to save her life.

Before he gets away the girl discovers the state of affairs and voluntarily yields her future to his keeping.

The story possesses fine dramatic qualities with a climax that offers excellent possibilities. What puzzled the Edison producers was how to convey to the audience through pictures the fact that the man was blind and to establish that fact beyond doubt; and not only that, but to show that the girl did not know he was blind up to the proper time for her to discover that distressing fact as required by the story, and to make clear by the manner in which she made that discovery that she had no previous knowledge of the fact and that she really did make the painful discovery when she appears in the picture to have made it as the story requires.

In the "spoken drama" this process is one of the easiest tricks of the producer. By occasional conversation it can easily be shown that the blindness of the man is not known to the girl, and so on, but the pictures do not talk—at least not yet.

It is an easy matter to convince the audience by pictures that the man is blind and that it is the result of the accident. The accident occurs, the man is picked up, and carried to his bed. Next we see the doctor indicating that the patient's eyes are affected. Later a visit to the specialist led by a valet and an inability to read print settles that question; it might have done in fewer scenes, had the producer so desired.

EDISON SUBJECT. "OUT OF THE NIGHT."—A CHARMING COMEDY SCENE.

EDISON SUBJECT. "OUT OF THE NIGHT."

This brings us to the nice situations: The invalid is convalescing and the girl is calling upon him occasionally. The fact that he is a convalescent excuses him for keeping his chair in her presence at the first meeting and helps him to conceal his blindness. When she departs he mentally gets the measure of her tread and counts her steps to the carriage, at the same time groping his way to the window where he stands waving his hand and bowing a "good bye."

The poor fellow manages to keep up this deception until the last visit the girl makes before the time he has set for his departure. On this occasion she leaves her hand bag on the table and, instead of going directly to her carriage, she returns for it to discover the man bowing and smiling and waving his hand before the window.

For a moment she stares at him in surprise and wonderment; in the next his brave but pitiful deception is revealed to her, and in another she flings her arms about his neck, which is the picture version of the story, which never grows old.

Aside from this trying problem there are two interesting features in this picture. There is a bit of comedy in the scene where the man is introduced to society at a reception that is delightful. It also contains an illustration of the method of showing an accident by "suggestion," which is preferable to the method of "simulation," which has been generally used by picture producers. In this case the girl's horse runs away; the man pursues and, in attempting to save the girl, both are thrown, the man being trampled by the horse. This could scarcely be simulating in the picture, but the fact that an accident has occurred is conveyed with convincing effect by the actions of the spectators after which the picture shows the victims lying on the ground and the horses running off riderless.

This picture is also remarkable for its excellent photography. Right here it may be mentioned that, what ever adverse criticism Edison pictures have merited in the past on this point, no complaints can be made of recent pictures for that reason. In respect to photography the Edison producers are getting excellent results.

By the way, don't forget to take a good look at the lovely little leading woman in this picture. If there's to be an Edison Girl, she gets our vote.

EDISON NOTES.

The flip of a coin in the hands of a messenger boy is responsible for the screamingly funny climax in "The Tale of Two Coats," to be released July 5. A tall, thin and very angular public figure dispatched a typical, "fresh" messenger "kid" to the railroad station with a suit case containing his dress suit, which he instructs him to express to a hotel in a nearby city, where he is to be the principal speaker at a banquet in honor of the Governor of the State. On his way to the station the "kid" is waylaid by a very short and very fat clerk who commissions him to ship his dress suit case, also containing a dress suit, to a suburban home, where he is to meet his "best girl" at a house party. The suit cases are identical in appearance, which fact escapes the messenger's attention until he reaches the baggage-room. Here he is nonplussed for a moment—only for a moment, however, for he quickly cuts the Gordian Knot with the toss of a coin.

The outcome of the resulting mix-up is shown in four scenes—two dressing rooms, the party, and the banquet, and it's hard to say which is the funniest. Possibly the last scene in which the two studies in physical contrasts are brought face to face, where mutual explanations are offered, will draw the most laughs. The picture is a howling short comedy with our old friend "Jones" in the role of the fat clerk.

"Equal to the Emergency" is the charming little comedy which completes the reel of the 5th. It is a jolly little story which deals with a pair of "newly weds," the even tenor of whose first few days of housekeeping is interrupted by the enforced absence of the bride. The husband gets lonesome, calls up some of "the boys" and starts a little poker party which so scandalizes the cook that she quits in a dudgeon. Then comes a message from Uncle Whatawad who is coming on only because he knows that "wifey" is away; for Uncle Whatawad objected most emphatically to his nephew's marriage, although he had never seen the girl.

The situation is saved by the wife's return and her impersonation of the cook, but an embarrassing contretemps is precipitated by the Uncle's sudden infatuation for the pretty cook (?) and his attempt to steal a hug and a kiss. The clever little wife is again to the rescue, however, and finally happiness reigns supreme.

A novel, up-to-date plot in which the quickest and most modern of scientific methods of communication, the wireless, is employed, is one of the distinguishing features of "A Wireless Romance," the dramatic release of July 8. Another feature is the wonderful photography, which is easily understood when it is explained that the picture is one of the numbers recently produced in Cuba, and still another feature, novel and fascinating, is a thrilling race at high speed between a yacht and a racing launch. This is an absorbing story with some very strong dramatic situations, made all the more interesting by the element of novelty that surrounds the theme.

"A Vacation in Havana," release of July 15, is not an educational film in its entirety, as the title would seem to indicate, for a dainty love story with some laughable comedy is cleverly interwoven with the scenic views of the City of Havana and places of historic interest in its vicinity.

The next comedy of the "Bumptious" series will be released July 15th. It is entitled "How Bumptious Papered the Parlor," and is said to be the funniest yet of the series.

The Edison Model "B" Kinetoscope and Edison films have figured prominently in several educational demonstrations of late, one of which was held in Rochester, N. Y., before the Playground Commission of that city. The Model "B" was also used for the several demonstrations given in the public schools of Rochester under the supervision of Mr. John Collier, Educational Secretary of the National Board of Censorship.

The Model "B" was also used for demonstration at an exhibition of Educational films in Franklin Institute, Philadelphia, Pa., on Wednesday evening, June 15th, under the auspices of Mr. Chas. A. Calehuff, the Edison jobber of that city.

In connection with the demonstration a lecture on animated picture photography was delivered by Mr. F. H. Stewart, traveling representative of the Edison Company. Using the Model "B" as an example of the present day perfection obtained in the projection of pictures, Mr. Stewart gave an interesting description of the evolution of the art from the old stereoscopic camera of 1850 to the present style of machines. Mr. Stewart was followed closely throughout his lecture by the large audience present.

The directors of the Institute were so impressed by the demonstration that they immediately placed, through Mr. Calehuff, an order for a Model "B."

CAUGHT IN THE RAIN.

An Episode In the Life of a Motion Picture Actor.

"It was Roosevelt luck," everybody said when the big storm of Saturday last, that raged about New York and vicinity, held off till after the ceremonies attending the reception of Colonel Roosevelt in that city. But if Jupiter Pluvious entertained a wholesome respect for the "big stick," he had no such regard for the convenience and comfort of a company of Kalem picture people who, under the direction of Mr. Ralph Olcott, were improving each shining hour over on the Kalem Indian farm that promising day.

The picture folks had been hard at work all morning and were getting ready to go home when the storm burst upon them in all its fury. There were seventeen different kinds of Jersey lightning with accompanying peals of thunder, and buckets full of rain uncomfortably frapped with hail the size of hickory nuts. As the actors were well on their way toward home when the storm burst, they were unable to avail themselves of the shelter of the log cabins and block houses at the farm, so they made a dash for cover through the thick of it. Everything that would shed rain was quickly used to protect the negative film, and one of the young women was fortunate to have the use of a bit of tent canvas to keep out the wet. The rest of the company took things as they came and were drenched to the skin.

Having no desire to go to town looking like a parcel of drowned rats, they finally resorted to a stock of costumes kept in store at the "farm" and rigged themselves out in motley. It was certainly a nondescript crew that came trooping back to New York that Saturday afternoon.

WOODRUFF LEASES MAJESTIC.

Guy M. Woodruff, proprietor of the Bijou theatre, Lansing, Ill., has leased the Majestic theatre, owned by Mrs. H. B. Vickary, for the term of one year. It is the intention of Mr. Woodruff to keep both theatres running at full blast during the summer months with only the best of pictures. During the time Mr. Woodruff has been in Lansing he has given the patrons of his house the best kind of entertainment and they are anxious to see what surprise he will spring on them at the new house.

SPOOR BACK FROM EUROPE.

Essanay President Pays Visit to London Office—Also in Paris and Berlin.

George K. Spoor, President of the Essanay Company, returned last week from a month's sojourn in Europe, looking after his business interests there. Mr. Spoor spent several days at the Essanay's London office, which is under the management of Mr. Harry Spoor, then continued on to Paris and through to Berlin, where he spent several days in consultation with his Berlin agents. This agency has now arranged to handle the major portion of the Essanay Company's European business, covering all the Continental states, except Norway and Sweden. Concerning this trip Mr. Spoor said that outside of certain business with his London office, his tour had nothing to do with the moving picture business and that he was merely on pleasure bent.

Mr. Spoor expressed himself as highly pleased with the progress made by the Essanay London office.

"Our office in London," said Mr. Spoor, "is doing a big business as are the other leading American manufacturers. Our business is steadily growing and we have found it necessary to again move into more capacious quarters. The agency has extended its field to both the Australian and South African market and is selling a large amount of film to these buyers.

"Our agency in Berlin will handle the majority of the Continental European trade, excepting Norway and Sweden," he said. "They expect soon to open offices in St. Petersburg and in Barcelona. I am highly pleased with the foreign market outlook and with the arrangements which have been made with our Berlin agents."

Mr. Spoor had nothing to say about his impressions of the moving picture industry in Europe, as he made little inquiry or investigation of foreign picture work during his trip.

LUBIN NOTES.

The Lubin release for July Fourth will not be a patriotic subject. It will offer the first-run exhibitors with a valuable heart-interest picture that we regard as one of the prettiest child stories we have turned out in many moons. "His Child's Captive" is a really unusual story of an errant father who is brought to a sense of his wrong doing by his little son. There is no forced sentiment, just the simple, heart-gripping appeal of real life.

"Ferdie's Vacation" gives a new twist to an old story, a twist so new that you'll forget that the foundation situation is not entirely new when you see it July 7th. Ferdie wants a vacation and he arranges to receive a telegram that his sister is seriously ill. The other chaps in the office agree to share his work between them and Ferdie is delighted with the success of his scheme until his sympathetic employer wires that he will stop off to see how the sister is getting along—and Ferdie never even had a sister! The rest is where the most fun comes in.

Most of the heads of departments of the Lubin company are spending their spare time in the projection room watching the product of the new studio which brings the interior scenes to a par with the splendid outdoor work of the Lubin photographers. For an experiment the other day the studio was set to its full capacity and it was found that twelve big sets could be in position at once, enabling two of the directors to complete their interior scenes in a single day and the other two the next. This will greatly expedite production while improving it.

One of the cowboys attached to the Lubin stock company offered a scenario the other day in which the story carried so much funny roping and buck jumping that only a star cowboy could play it. There were numerous intense love scenes and the cat slipped out of the bag when the puncher offered to play the leading role himself and mentioned the leading woman he thought he would like to play opposite to.

That was not the only freak scenario of last week, for a man wrote in that he could play the cornet beautifully and that he had written a story about his playing that would be very effective if he could go along with the film and play behind the screen. He appeared to be under the impression that but a single print had been sent out.

One of the recent additions to the decorations of the Lubin offices is a bill in Chinese extoling the merits of one of the Lubin films exhibited in Australia by the West enterprises. With bills in French, German, Russian, Italian and Spanish the collection seems rather complete.

LITTLE JOURNEYS IN PICTURELAND

Being an Account of the Travels of Bilkalem

LEAVING New York about ten days ago on a business getting junket to the cities of Pittsburg, Toledo, Chicago and Cincinnati, our old friend Bilkalem Wright reached New York on Monday morning, June 20, having come through from Chicago on the regular M. P. Flyer, the 20th Century limited. On the same train was W. N. Selig, of the Selig Polyscope Company, who came to New York to transact some business which illness compelled him to postpone upon a former visit.

Within an hour after his arrival Bilkalem was busy clearing up his desk at the Kalem offices and was ready to respond to a luncheon call when the editor of The Film Index dropped in on him. "Bill" was prepared for the demand for information and had the story of his peregrinations all doped out in advance, so we have only to give it in his own words.

Pittsburg, Pa.

The Duquesne Film Exchange, Pennsylvania-Columbia Exchange and the Pittsburg Calcium Light and Film Exchange of Pittsburg all report business as good. The exhibitors whom I saw had the same story to tell. The exceptionally cool Spring we have had has meant a lot of profit to the exhibitors. The sudden change in temperature that occured recently is having a more or less bad effect on business, but as soon as people become accustomed to the high temperature the exhibition business will undoubtedly come b[illegible].

While visiting one of the Pittsburg offices who [illegible]pearance but that good old [illegible]d, Mannie Mandelbaum, with [illegible]mile indicative of his naturally [illegible]ition. He reported conditions in Cleveland from the licensed standpoint as excellent and was enthusiastic over the contemplated trip of the members of the F. S. A. from Detroit to Cleveland by boat at the time of the coming July Convention. Mannie said that the Cleveland contingent would give the boys the time of their lives.

Wilkinsburg, Pa.

This town near Pittsburg has a very nice motion picture theatre, The Colonial. This house seats 600 and runs moving pictures only. The Manager, Mr. Paul B. Jones, spoke in high praise of "The Castaways," one of Kalem's recent productions. He informed me this picture made an exceptionally big hit in his house.

The question of the relative merits of vaudeville and motion pictures was brought strongly to my attention in this city. The Colonial theatre runs motion pictures only. The night I visited the house there were at least 500 people, possibly more, witnessing the performance. Directly across the street from the Colonial is a very good vaudeville house running at ten cents and they had on an exceptionally good bill, but strange to say there were only about fifty people in the theatre. Patrons of this house undoubtedly considered it too warm to attend a vaudeville show. The fact that the Colonial opposite had about 500 people in at the show indicates that the weather was not too hot for them. From the above you can draw your own conclusions.

Braddock, Pa.

This hustling manufacturing city has an excellent motion picture theatre, The Family, operated by the Crystal Amusement Co. One of the great hustlers in the business in this section of the country, Mr. Ben Burke, is the local manager. This theatre always does a nice business and draws the best people in town.

Toledo, Ohio.

The licensed exchange business and the licensed exhibitors are doing a good business in this substantial town. The Valentine Theatre is one of the good paying houses. This theatre runs pictures and vaudeville and seats 1,400 charging ten cents admission. Mr. George H. Ketcham is the proprietor.

The Royal theatre seats 300 and charges five cents admission, runs pictures exclusively and is presided over by O. L. Brailey, Proprietor. Business they say is good. There are in addition various other picture houses in Toledo. The licensed exhibitors as a whole report business as excellent. The warm weather however has caused the receipts to drop temporarily.

Cincinnati, Ohio.

This city has quite a number of very successful motion picture theatres. In the center of town to be more exact, Fountain Square, there are two big money makers. The Bijou Theatre operated by the Lisbon Amusement Co., I. Lisbon, Manager, charges five cents and has a seating capacity of 299. This theatre is a big money maker and always has been. Film service is supplied by the Pittsburg Calcium Light and Film Exchange of Cincinnati.

The Gayety Amusement Co. operates the Gayety Theatre in Fountain Square, admission five cents and the Gayety has 299 seats. Harry Hart is the Manager. This excellent motion picture theatre also runs pictures exclusively. It is a very attractive theatre and a money maker. The Magnetic Film service Co. supplies the film.

Columbus, Ohio.

This is a good picture town and the requirements of the licensed exhibitors are well taken care of by our old friend Melchior, proprietor of the Ohio Film Exchange. The day I was in town Mr. Melchior, Sr., was out at the horse show spending some of his film money. Mr. Melchior, by the way, is a great lover of fine horses. I had the pleasure, however, of meeting his son who looks after the exchange during his father's absence. He is a bright young man and knows the film business from start to finish. He tells me that neither the exchange or the licensed exhibitors have anything to complain about as regards business, although he stated the sudden warm spell was hurting the exhibitors temporarily.

Chicago, Ill.

Chicago has always been a big money making motion picture center. This expression applies to the exchanges as well as the exhibitors. Probably Chicago contains more high class motion picture theatres than any other city in America, and the true western spirit prevails.

I called on all the exchanges and, without exception, was advised that business was excellent. All the exhibitors I saw made the same statement, although, as in the Ohio towns I visited, they said that the sudden upward tendency of the thermometer was hurting them more or less. They believed it would only be temporary and that business would improve as soon as the people become accustomed to the warm weather, though of course they do not expect to do as much business during the Summer as in the Winter.

Mr. I. Van Ronkel, of the American Film Exchange, made a trip into the country last Sunday, June 19, to look over a farm proposition that has been presented to him. Van is one of the Chicago exchange men who has made good money out of the film business and has saved most of it. A part of his surplus he is wisely putting into a high-class improved farm. Believe all Film Index readers will concede that Van is a wise man. I personally have been aware of this excellent quality of our friend for a good while.

Fred. Aikens and Scates, the hustler, are continuously on the job at the Theatre Film Exchange. Fred told me that business was constantly increasing. The enterprise shown in his exchange room and the constant crowds coming and going indicates that this statement is a fact.

The H. & H. Co. are well pleased with business conditions and told me they had materially increased their film leases from the manufacturers in order to keep pace with their increased number of customers. Both Mr. Hutchison and Mr. Hite are continuously on the job.

When asked how business was Joe Hopp, of the Standard, quoted to me how many reels he was leasing from the manufacturers and said he had been obliged to constantly increase the number of reels that he might take care of the new business coming to him weekly. Joe is making a specialty of hustling for "independent" exhibitors and from all appearances is meeting with success.

I had the pleasure of a short chat with Mr. A. M. Kennedy, Manager of the Geo. K. Spoor Film Exchange and Mr. Frank Redfield who handles the booking of films at this old standby in the film industry. They both expressed satisfaction with the prevailing situation as regards the licensed film industry and look for a satisfactory business during the entire Summer.

The Calumet exchange recently acquired by our old friend Freuler, of Milwaukee, is experiencing a continuous improvement in business. New customers are being added to the list weekly. Freuler is one of the best liked men in the film business in the Central States. This will count for him materially.

The General Film Co.'s Exchange, formerly the Kleine Optical Co. reports business as very satisfactory.

And there you are.

But a lot of things happened which Brother Wright did not mention in his story. Among others he managed to get some good pictures of the houses of Messrs. "Jim" Clarke and "Dick" Rowland of Pittsburg, Pa.

PATHE FRERES.

"CAESAR IN EGYPT."—Ancient Egypt has fallen into the hands of the mighty Caesar, who first meets Tagra and her daughters drawing water in their pitchers from the sacred river Nile. At the sight of the beauty of one of the daughters, Tsit by name, Caesar commands that Tagra and her daughters shall appear at the feast to be held that night in the palace. In the home of Tagra the Egyptians bitterly lament that they dare not disobey the tyrant's will, and in the evening the mother and the other daughter set out for the feast. Tsit remains behind, but Caesar, irate that his will should be thwarted, sends messengers to her to repair immediately to the palace. She obeys the command, but the Egyptians incensed resolve to burn the palace. Within the palace revelry runs high, and Tsit dances before the all-conquering hero and his guests. Suddenly an Egyptian glides in, the gleam of a lighted torch is seen, and the palace is fired. It soon becomes a burning furnace, the glowing walls fall and crush the hitherto victorious Romans, while the Egyptians save Tagra and her daughters. So ends the picture. The miseen scene bears the hall-mark of a consummate knowledge of the art and science of staging, and we present this film in the conviction that its indusputable merits will assure for it warm praise and a ready welcome.

"SAVE US FROM OUR FRIENDS."—A village wedding is being celebrated in the garden of the hotel, and when the fiddlers strike up for a dance the bride and bridegroom retire to the quietness of one of the rooms to exchange confidences. Unluckily the best man detects them and calls upon the guests assembled to assist him in bringing their hosts back to the garden. What tricks are now played on the luckless couple you will have to look at the film to see; commencing with throwing cabbages at them down the chimney and directing water on them through a hose put against the window up to the time when they are taken to jail for assaulting the village constable the film is one continuous roar from beginning to end.

"NAPOLEON."—It would be an impossibility even in three reels to give the complete history of this most wonderful man. In presenting this picture we have selected a few only of the best-known and most famous scenes in his life.

Commencing the story with a summer evening at Malmaison we see in progress one of the most magnificent fetes of the kind that took place only in France, during the height of Bonaparte's power, and at which are present Napoleon and Josephine.

Following this is the well-known scene when Napoleon on his rounds discovers a sentry asleep behind a haystack, takes up the latter's gun and continues his duties to the astonishment of the soldier when he awakes.

We next come to the battle of Austerlitz and the incident of the guard who was decorated by Napoleon for refusing to allow him to pass without the watchword. The battle itself is shown very vividly in all its varying phases.

The following scenes show the little King of Rome; Napoleon endeavoring to compel the Pope to sign an agreement annulling the latter's temporal power; the abdication of Napoleon and his subsequent farewell to his guards. Then follow scenes in connection with his imprisonment in St. Helena and finally his death in May, 1821.

The film is staged with the greatest accuracy as to detail in costume and setting. The magnificence of some of the scenes is marvelous, and where practicable the pictures have been taken on the spot. For instance, Napoleon bids farewell to his guards at Fontainebleu Castle, where the event actually happened.

"REBELLIOUS BETTY."—We have already advertised the fact that Betty was coming, and now she is here and appears before you in the first of a series of comic films which should be a big feature in any house. Betty's antics and pranks are distinctly fresh and laughable, she is a mischievous and willful tomboy, who shrinks at nothing so long as she can get her own way. In this first film she succeeds in upsetting half a dozen people, destroys an artist's masterpiece, jumps upon and rides away with somebody else's bicycle, which she afterwards abandons for a horse, and finally knocks off the head of a butler. All these things she does simply because she has been refused the privilege of accepting an invitation to go for a motor ride.

"INSIDE THE EARTH."—A couple of Englishmen reach the middle of the earth accompanied by their guides. Here they find huge caverns covered with stalactites with gigantic mushrooms springing up spontaneously. Elephants innumerable, huge frogs, crocodiles and other monsters appear suddenly, and the travelers flee in terror. After passing through streams of molten lava and fire they manage to return as if by miracle to the face of the earth again.

"MAX FOILS THE POLICE."—With the aid of two friends Max carries off a damsel whose parents wish to force her into a distasteful marriage. Thereafter he checkmates the police at every turn, and finally penetrates into the office of the chief of police. Here a struggle takes place between the two men. Max underneath his opponent is forced into a large chest, the struggle continues, the chief presently emerges, locks the box upon his captive, and gives instructions for the chest and the man inside to be incarcerated. The moment his subordinates have left the room to carry out his instructions, he removes his wig, and, lo, and behold, it is Max, who calmly makes his way to the cell and turns the key upon the police and the real chief of police inside the box. To inveigle his rival into stabbing a lifesize dummy of himself is Max's next act, and then having scared the guilty man pretty well out of his senses by his sudden apparition, this imperturable outlaw finds time to turn his attention to the delights of lovemaking.

"RIDING FEATS BY COSSACKS."—A brilliant and thrilling display of equestrianism, during the course of which seeminly almost impossible feats are executed with astonishing nerve power.

SELIG POLYSCOPE CO.

"THE LONG TRAIL."—The sure and unswerving justice of the frontier is thrillingly told in this story. A renegade Meti who has killed an old Indian in the attempt to rob his traps, is pursued through summer and winter by two voyagers. Finally, after seemingly unsurmountable obstacles have been overcome, Meti is captured and brought back to the post for punishment.

Interwoven with the main incident is the very beautiful and touching story of Natoosha, daughter of the Indian killed by the renegade Meti, whose devotion and gratitude to the avengers of her father, forms a theme of heart interest.

No attempt at overdrawn ideas of the great land of snow but actual scenes taken from the true situations presenting one of the best film stories issued by the Selig Co., this season.

"THE FIRE CHIEF'S DAUGHTER."—The Chief of the Fire Department has a beautiful daughter, for whom he has hopes of a wealthy and advantageous marriage. But contrary to pre-arranged plans of this kind, Ellen has given her heart to a young fire laddie, and much against her father's will, marries Jack Lowney. This so enrages the old fire fighter that he turns his back on his daughter and son-in-law and will not be reconciled.

Now the unexpected happens. Jack is put to a test and proves his worth. The chief's residence burns and he and his wife are saved from a fearful death by the heroism and self-sacrifice of the boy whom they have despised. Reconciliation follows and complete happiness prevails.

The situations are thrilling and wonderfully real. The fire department of a great city was enlisted for the production and the hazardous life of a fireman is vividly portrayed in this wonderful film story.

VITAGRAPH CO.

"WHEN OLD NEW YORK WAS YOUNG." — Love found a way years ago in old New York just as it does today. Knippenhauser, the old Dutch Doctor, is wrapped up in materia medica, and incidentally keeps an eye on his pretty daughter, Marie, and her lover, Dolph, who is also the Doctor's poor apprentice. Dolph is wise to the "Doc's" little game of referring to the "Pharmacopoeia Medica" whenever a patient calls for treatment, compounding all his prescriptions from the same box, and the apprentice becomes a valuable assistant to his employer; but he considers the young fellow impossible as a son-in-law.

One day a tenant of "Knipp's" sends him a letter saying that the house he has rented from the Doctor is haunted, and he cannot live in it. The Doctor immediately posts a notice that he will give ten pounds to anybody who will sleep in the house over night and rid it of the ghost. Everybody is afraid until "Dolph" comes along and decides to take a chance and win the money. The old Doctor and the tenant agree to go to the haunted house with the apprentice, feeling confident that if he can stand it they can. The three watchers crowd into the one bed and wait the coming of his spookship.

At midnight he appears upon the scene, and one glance from the Doctor and the tenant is enough. They hurriedly and squeamishly take a sneak, leaving Dolph to see it out in fear and trembling. The spook sits down to count the golden contents of a bag, then beckons Dolph to follow him, leading him to an old well which by gestures he intimates has something to do with his unrest in the spirit world, then he disappears.

Disturbed in mind, Dolph hastens back to the laboratory and busies himself with his work and thoughts. While looking through an old book he discovers a picture which resembles the ghost, and inscribed with a note pertaining to his death. Dolph tells Marie all about his experiences, and together they go to the old well and unearth an iron-bound box, which, upon opening, they discover contains many jewels and great wealth. Carrying their treasure home, Dolph makes bold to ask the Doctor for his daughter. The father is enraged, but calmly and blandly consents when he sees the well-stocked coffer which makes the poor apprentice a wealthy man.

"SAVED BY THE FLAG."—In the hot sun of South America the hands employed by Hampton, an American ship owner and planter, are lazily whiling away their time when the planter unexpectedly appears upon the scene and reprimands the foreman for neglecting his duty and not urging the men to get the cargo aboard the boat that she may start her voyage on scheduled time. The foreman answers back angrily and is at once discharged by the planter.

Embittered and embarrassed, the foreman decides upon revenge, which is more fully aroused when he sees his sweetheart talking to the planter, who seems to be attracted by the pretty Creole. While watching the loading of the vessel, a messenger arrives and hands the planter a message from an old friend, Captain Gillet, of the United States cruiser, stating hat he has just landed his steamship in port and vill take dinner with him.

The captain and the planter are seated in the lat-er's garden, and while smoking and talking, Paola, he pretty Creole, whom we saw in the first scene, asses by the house. The captain urges his friend to o speak to her while he waits for his return. Hamp-on goes to her and they walk out in the grove for ome distance. The discharged foreman, with murder n his heart, is watching the lovers from behind a ree, and unobserved shoots the girl in the back. While the planter goes for help, the foreman rushes orward and throws the pistol beside the prostrate irl; then runs for the guards, with whom he returns nd accuses the planter of having shot her, pointing o the pistol as evidence.

The planter is arrested and put in jail. Paola is arried to her home and placed under the care of a urse. The foreman spreads the news of the at-empted murder by the American planter and then rouses his countrymen to hatred and vengeance gainst him. He then leads the mob to the jail, here they overcome the guards and take the Ameri-an out to shoot him.

Paola hears from her nurse of the plight of her ver. She insists upon getting out of her bed and oing to his rescue. Sick and weak, with tottering eps, she hastens to tell Captain Gillet of Hampton's nger. The captain sends a messenger in all speed the American consulate, who gives orders to the ptain to save the planter at all cost. With the nerican flag the consulate jumps into his automobile nd starts for the place where the mob are preparing shoot their victim.

The captain of the cruiser with a company of ma-nes goes to the rescue, two able bodied seamen car-ing Paola. They arrive in time to place the flag ross the breast of Hampton and defy the mob to loot at their own peril. The crowd falls back in ve and before they can recover themselves they are iven off by the captain and his men. Hampton is leased and clasps Paola in his arms amid shouts of e boys in blue and white.

"WILSON'S WIFE'S COUNTENANCE." — Wilson ances at his wife, who returns his greeting with an pression like a piece of cheese. He takes his seat the dinner table, opens his newspaper and reads th much excitement about a terrible explosion. Again e looks at him with jack o' lantern stare and blank ze. He becomes frantic and tells her if she does t change her face he will put an end to himself.

e inanimately stops his hands, but retains the in-ne glare. He hurries from the room and sends a te to his old friend, Dr. Jackson, asking him to nd something to relax his wife's fixed features and ve him relief, a stimulas and nerve tonic to stir her normal activity.

A messenger from the doctor brings a box of pills, th directions how to use them as a sure cure for . Wilson's ailment. Wilson is delighted and mmunicates his joy to his wife, who idiotically rec-ognized the cause of his ecstasy and agrees to submit to his ministration. Wilson thinks if one pill is good, three will be better and quicker. One, two, three and then he awaits results.

The pellets begin to work, so does his wife's face. Oh, horrors! The man with a thousand faces would hide them all in shame. Wilson's wife's face has them all beaten a mile for rapid changes and funny grimaces until gradually her countenance assumes a sweet, natural smile and normal flexibility and intelligence. Wilson is jubilant and radiant in his joy, and the restoration of his wife's health. A parting glance at the smiling face of Mrs. Wilson shows us that she shares her husband's happiness.

"OLD GLORY."—This is a series of historical and allegorical pictures which tell the story of the birth of the American flag and its triumphs and progress in the cause of Freedom and Liberty. "The Declaration of Independence," where we see Thomas Jefferson and all the signers of the Declaration in conclave assembled, each character true to life and recognizable, taking us back to the actual scene of 1776 which called for the Standard of the Nation.

Benjamin Franklin is seen in deep study trying to evolve a suitable design for the banner, when he dreams he sees Freedom pluck the stars and stripes from the skies and lay them at his feet. With this inspiration he gives the design to Betsy Ross, who makes the flag and presents it to Washington and his staff. It is accepted and adopted as the standard of the struggle for Independence.

Again we see "Old Glory" floating triumphantly after the surrender of Cornwallis to Washington at Yorktown, waving its graceful folds in acknowledgment of the greetings and cheers of the people. In the War of 1812 nothing could be more inspiring than the capture of the British frigate "Macedonia" by Commodore Decatur. The scene presents a picture most realistic, the boom of the cannon and protruding bodies of the seamen from the port holes, the lopping of the ship's hull by the restless waves as Decatur and his men scale the sides of the vessel and take possession of the prize.

The Mexican War brings the American flag prominently before us as the American Army storms the heights of Chapultepec, hauls down the Mexican flag and raises "Old Glory" above the conquered turrets of the stronghold of Santa Anna, who was President of Mexico. Upon the addition of each state to the Union we see the stars twinkle in the new constellation of the flag.

Abraham Lincoln signing the Emancipation Proclamation strikes deep into the spirit of "Old Glory," the emblem of Freedom. This is a marvelously realistic and impressive scene which presents the martyred President signing the Emancipation Proclamation, surrounded by Seward, Stanton, Johnson and all the members of the cabinet with a vision of slavery suggestive of the spirit of the motive which leads us up to the surrender of General Lee to General Grant at Appomattox "The Union Forever," and the reunion of the Blue and the Gray under the protecting folds of "Old Glory" and the brotherhood of man.

Once more we are reminded of "Old Glory's" progress and power at the storming of San Juan Hill with Teddy Roosevelt in command, the surrender of the Spanish outpost and the hoisting of the Grand Old Flag on the summit of the hill, a beacon of hope and cheer. At this point we are brought to the grand climax, the Star Spangled Banner waving in all its majesty and glory o'er the land of the free and the home of the brave, calling forth responsive thrills of inborn patriotism that can only find relief in an outburst of irresistible and uncontrollable applause.

BIOGRAPH CO.

"A CHILD'S IMPULSE."—Many are the occasions where we are impressed with the egregious power of the little child in the affairs of life. They are indeed God's greatest representatives, for no agency has worked more good. The tiny hand of the child has ever pointed the way along the path of righteousness, and has ever been the powerful influence in our high standard of morals. In this Biograph subject is shown how a little child saves two souls—one from moral destruction, the other from mental anguish. Mrs. Thurston, a socially ambitious widow, is holding one of her famous Bohemian parties. To these functions are invited the leading lights of the several professions—actors, artists, musicians, etc. Surrounded by these men and women of art and letters, she was at first entertained, but they soon palled and bored. On this evening in particular, she is especially possessed of ennui, until the appearance of Raymond Hartley, a wealthy young bachelor, who is introduced into the circle by a newspaper man. An attachment immediately springs up between the widow and Raymond, and it must be said that the latter is more sincere than the former, for Raymond calls upon her and proposes marriage, which she is only too willing to accept. His friends, however, upon finding out the seriousness of the situation, go and warn him against her, accusing her of being a flirt. He, of course, will not believe until he, himself, later finds their accusation true. His friend and chum suggests a stay in the country to cure him of this ominous infatuation. Selecting a quiet out of the way place they go enjoining the valet to keep secret their whereabouts. Almost upon their arrival, he meets Grace, the daughter of the farmer. Her simple, artless manners, with her rustic beauty, fairly captivate him, and make him forget the widow entirely. He now experiences a higher and holier love, so he sends word to his valet to send on his trunks as he intends protracting his stay indefinitely, and later proposes to Grace and gains consent. The widow, meanwhile, has waxed uneasy, as she is most anxious to make this rich match, realizing what Raymond's wealth would do for her. At his residence she gets little information from the valet, but espying the trunk tagged, she slyly notes the address. Off she goes in her auto, and finds Raymond on the roadside in a state of elation over his prospects. Feigning illness, she elicits his sympathy, and soon the old infatuation possesses him. Back to the city he goes with the widow, after dispatching a note to Grace of his departure. What a shock this is to the poor girl, and her little sister, while she doesn't quite understand why, feels that the return of Raymond is urgent. The trunks have arrived and the little one finds the return stub still intact. Getting her toy bank, she extracts her savings and finds she has sufficient to pay fare to the city, Surreptitiously she starts, and when in the city a policeman directs her to Raymond, whose valet states he is at the widow's. Here the child enters into the midst of a Bohemian gathering. One look into the child's sweet face, so much in contrast to the features around him, and but the sound of one word of her pleading, is enough to decide him, so picking up the child in his arms he dashes from the place, hurling aside the widow, who would detain him. Back to the farmhouse he rusnes and throws himself appealingly at the feet of the poor heart-crushed Grace.

"MUGGSY'S FIRST SWEETHEART."—The most important age of the seven ages of life is the third—"the lover, sighing like a furnace, with a woeful ballad made to his mistress' eyebrow." This is the period at which we dare not call our soul our own. Love is life's game of draughts, with Cupid as vis-a-vis, and though we play with poignant perspicacity, we are sure to succumb to the unerring skill of that little unclothed postmaster. Muggsy has arrived at the third station, and of couse is in a susceptible mood when little Mabel Brown passes. Kids together, they always experienced an attraction one for the other, and now, before he realizes it, Muggsy is in love, as is also Mabel. He braves the derision of his youthful companions, who have not as yet been stung by Cupid's dart, and escorts her home. Arriving at the Brown domicile, Muggsy asks if he might call in the evening; to this she gives consent. During the afternoon Mr. Brown, Mabel's father, has varnished a chair and put it in the reception room, he thinks, out of harm's way. At Muggsy's home there are great doings dressing Muggsy up in his new spring suit. He is mother's own dear boy and she wants him to look well. The fates conspire against poor Muggsy, for he is ushered into the sitting-room and, of course, sits on the varnished chair, so when he arises he leaves his coat and a portion of his trousers glued thereto. The father helps him out with a suit of his clothes, which are about three times too large for him. Thus attired, he reaches home gloomy indeed, for he feels that he has lost Mabel forever. However, there is a ray of sunshine in a letter from Mabel, for she sees that Muggsy has been cruelly victimized. On his way to the house he meets Mabel, and together they enter just after the National Uplift Committee has called. This committee is on a crusade against all things that are degenerating, vulgar or harmful to the young, and Mrs. Brown joins the movement and consents that they remove anything of that character from her home. They have just started the uplift when the young lovers enter. Seeing these strangers packing the tabooed articles into baskets, they are mistaken for burglars, and Muggsy throws them out bodily. When he learns the real identity of his victims Muggsy feels he is in bad again, but the Browns upon looking through the baskets and finding some of their most treasured articles lifted in the uplift, consider Muggsy the hero of the day.

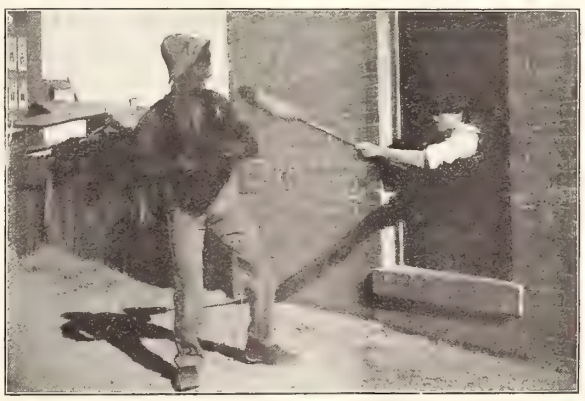
"C-H-I-C-K-E-N SPELLS CHICKEN."—This short comedy picture completes a reel of exceptionally laughable comedy. It tells of the adventures of Rastus, a colored gen'man, with abnormal taste for chicken.

Rastus wanders by a chicken store one morning and stops to admire a box of beautiful pullets. Immediately his appetite for chicken sets in to speculating as to how he could obtain one of the broilers Rastus looks about cautionsly and when he believes no one is looking he stoops to pat one of the birds on the head and his temptation is increased. Carefully lifting the lid, he is about to snatch the prize when the proprietor of the store dashes out, and kicks him into the street.



Rastus limps away, heartbroken, and when suddenly his interest is aroused again as he passes a young woman, who has purchased the fowl that he had contemplated for himself. He turns about and follows her, steadily thinking "Maybe dat chicken will break away." The young lady stops to chat with a neighborhood policeman, who, seeing Rastus loitering near, orders him on his way. Disappointed but hopeful, Rastus turns up an alley and stops just outside a high board fence, when he hears the faint clucking which sounds suspiciously like chicken talk. He peers through a knothole in the fence and turns back slowly when one of the young pullets flutters up to a perch on the fence, then flops down at his very feet.

Fortune has smiled on Rastus at last. He makes a wild scramble for the bird but it flutters out of his hands and starts widely out of the alley with Rastus at its heels. The chase is a hot and furious one, and in the end Rastus corners his quarry, grabs it by the flapping wing. With a smile of triumph he holds it in his hands when suddenly as though by magic it disappears. The frightened colored man stares in amazement. Evidently "Dat chicken was congered." He turns and runs out of the alley anxious to leave this witch-ridden neighborhood.

"PAT AND THE 400."—This farce comedy is one of the most humorous character pictures we have ever released. It is also full of keen, rich satire on modern society, treating specifically the subject of slumming.

The household of the fashionable Bradely-Larkin's is suffering an extremely bad attack of ennui, due, no doubt, to a lull in social activities. Mrs. Bradely-

Larkin racking her brain for some new method of excitement, is about to give up in despair when the following paragraph from the morning's paper catches her eye:

"SLUMMING IS BECOMING MORE FASHIONABLE.—Members of the Four Hundred are being kept busy making calls upon and ministering to the poor of Carnegie Alley."

"Ah, just the thing," exclaims Mrs. Bradely-Larkin. And that afternoon, having enlisted a number of her fashionable friends and with the auto loaded down with hot house grapes, sofa pillows, and other unnecessary luxuries, they alight in front of the dingy shanty which is the property of one Patrick Murphy.

Now, Pat and his family, despite their poverty, are happy. They have plenty to eat, a place to sleep, while Pat gets his customary "can" and his pipe o' tobacco every evening. Pat is happily engaged in blowing off the "suds," with the children romping about him, when the door opens and in burst on this happy scene Mrs. Bradely-Larkin, Mrs. Pink-Pinkley et al.

Mrs. Bradely-Larkin, assuming leadership of the party, offers her presents, then sees the beer on the table, and, reprimanding poor Patrick for the use of the vile liquid while his children are in want, throws the contents out of the door. She also finds a sprinkling of dust on the mantel-piece and lifts her eye-brows questionably to Mrs. Murphy. Then reminding the Murphy family of how thankful they ought to be, the slumming party sweeps majestically out.

"Well, I'll be——," Pat begins.

"Did yez iver see the like?" Mrs. Murphy interjects. Again the door opens and a crowd of Pat's curious friends enter. After much discussion one of the crowd offers a paper which contains the following notice:

"Grand musical given in honor of Mr. Compannisky, the celebrated pianist, at the Bradely-Larkin mansion, at 2 P. M. tomorrow."

A happy thought comes to Pat. He suggests that they go slumming to the home of Mrs. Bradely-Larkin. This scheme is eagerly agreed to and Pat's guests depart to arrange for the swell affair.

The next afternoon, while Mr. Compannisky, seated at the grand piano in Mrs. Bradely-Larkin's drawing room, and thrumming out crescendos and ear-splitting fortissimos, a strange caravan, composed of dump carts comes driving up the driveway and pauses under the port cochere. It is Pat Murphy and his delegation from Carnegie Alley on a little slumming expedition of their own.

The scene which follows is ludicrous to the extreme. Pat and his friends, paired off in neat couples, stroll into the drawing room, the rear being brought up by the younger members and a goat. Straightway Pat turns over the hot house grapes, sofa pillows, etc., to Mrs. Bradely-Larkin, adding a few presents of his own choice. They forcibly persuade Mr. Compannisky to drink beer out of the pail, while the goat, happy and contented, munches the music sheets which have dropped from the piano. Then Lizzie Murphy, pride of the alley, seats herself in the seat of the vanquished senor and rattles off a little Irish rag while Pat and his friends dance happily.

Then, satisfied their revenge is complete they bid Mrs. Bradely-Larkin, Mrs. Pink-Pinkley and the others a fond adieu and go out.

"THE BAD MAN'S LAST DEED."—The Western releases, described in this Guide, are noteworthy in their strong plots and intensely dramatic situations. This story is keenly interesting from the first foot to the last. Like the others it is picturesque in its scenic settings and is superbly photographed.

Arizona Pete, typical bad man, is the hero of this story. The first scene shows him leaving his shack, after adjusting his pistol. He rides into town enters a saloon and orders drinks for the crowd. A young chap, just out from the East, refuses to drink with him, but is finally persuated by the cracking of Arizona's pistol, aimed at his heels.

Pete, now happily inspired by a liberal quantity of "Old Henry," hearing that there is a dance in town, mounts and rides around to the dance-hall. Here are gathered the young men and women of the town, dancing merrily to the tune of old Uncle Eb's squeaky violin. Pete enters and breaks up the dance, but during the melee that follows Pete is shot in the pistol hand and deprived of his weapon. A young girl, feeling sorry for the misguided fellow, offers to bind his wound and he consents. She is the sister of the young Easterner of a few scenes before.

The sheriff who has been apprised of Arizona's latest misconduct, resolves that the bad man has held sway long enough in his county, so, organizing a posse of citizens and armed with a petition and plenty of horse-pistols, he rides off to Arizon's shack to inform the latter that there is one too many bad men in Mariposa County, and that he will find it healthier on the other side of the county line. In short, Arizona is threatened with instant death if he dares get in range of the gun of any citizen residing in the county. Arizona sees he is beaten and consents to leave the county. Accompanied by the sheriff and posse he rides to the boundary line, waves his hand and rides out of view. The boys congratulate themselves on having rid themselves of such a miscreant and turn about to ride back to town.

A few days later old Jim Wayman, the uncle of the two young Eastern people, asks Bob, the boy, to drive a herd of cattle across the county to the nearest market. Bob disposes of the cattle and is persuaded by a pal, accompanying him, to enter a gambling dive and take a hand at poker. Of course, he is fleeced out of the entire roll which he obtained from the sale of the cattle and is about to leave despairingly when Arizona Pete enters. The bad man recognizes the boy and understands the situation, then forces the gambler who had fleeced the boy to return the money. In the exchange of the money, a locket which the boy had is turned over and Arizona recognizes in the face of the ornament the picture of the girl who had bound his hand when he had been shot at the dance hall. The boy explains that this is his sister.

Bob is thoroughly intoxicated and Arizona resolves to take him home.

An hour or two later they cross the boundary line and the bad man, aware that he is on deadly ground, trusts to luck to take him through without being seen.

They arrive at the ranch house and Bob is taken into the tender hands of his sister, who comes out later, followed by her uncle, to thank him for rescuing the boy.

The girl and her uncle, after shaking hands with the bad man, enter the house and Arizona turns to leave. Just then the sheriff, stopping in the road, outside the yard, see the trespasser and, raising his revolver, fires. Arizona whirls on his heels and falls in the dust. A moment later the girl runs out and is joined by the sheriff. She explains why the bad man broke his promise.

"I am sorry, Pete—I didn't know," he says, taking the dying man by the hand.

"That's all right, sheriff," he answers, "It was comin' to me an' I got it. I was a bad man and you were a better shot."

Then he turns to the girl and says he will be happy if he can take just one good thing with him. She bends over and kisses him and he dies with a smile on his lips.

until she is observed by the wealthy Jean Dubois, who is immediately enamored and soon commences a series of investigations to obtain information regarding her.

He even attempts to make her acquaintance by introducing himself when he meets her on the street.

After meeting so many rebuffs that he is assured of her being worthy of his attention, he finally contrives to become acquainted in a proper manner. He later marries the heroic girl, and gives her two little sisters a pleasant home with his wife and himself.

The little drama is impressive in that the acting of the children is very convincing.

"THE UNLIMITED TRAIN."—Suppose a seamstress should sew a bolt of cloth to the back of your skirt and you wore the array. Would it excite some comment on the street? Yes it would.

This happens in the film. Everything is fearfully exaggerated, but it surely is funny all the way through.

"ON THE THRESHOLD."—This is a pretty story of the kindness of a child. She offers some food to a rough looking man who comes to the house, but her nurse drives him away without it and rebukes the child. In the night the child goes downstairs for her doll and finds the visitor of some hours before in the drawing room. He has come with intent to commit a burglary. 2. A Meeting of the Christians.
3. The Woods near the City.
4. A Roadway in the Forest.
5. On the Banks of a Stream.
6. Orders Arrive from Nero.

8. The Hillside Meeting of the Christians.

The Story.—Metella, the daughter of the Centurion Vincinius, loves one of her father's slaves, Caius by name. This youth is a Christian and in the habit of frequently visiting the meetings held by them in the hills outside the city walls. Paul has gathered about him a small body of the faithful and preaches to them often in this secluded part of the forest.

Metella, encouraged by her natural curiosity as to her sweetheart's secret excursions, one day follows him and learns her first lessons in Christianity.

She leaves her hiding place and hastens to her father's palace, where she finds Vincinius, her stern parent, in great rage because Caius is absent from his task.

Vincinius now orders the slaves to take Caius to a nearby woods and there flog him.

After the cruel chastisement Caius is left lying alone in the forest where soon after Metella finds him. She assists her sweetheart to the camp of his friends, where she is so impressed by their lives that she accepts the belief and is baptized.

When Caius has sufficiently recovered from his punishment he returns to his master and dutifully takes up his work in the household.

Soon Vincinius, the Centurion, receives orders from Nero to arrest all the Christians who have been meeting in the hills outside the city.

The soldiers are now called together and move upon the Apostle and his little band of followers. Although warned in due season, Paul refuses to flee, but engages in prayer while awaiting the arrival of Vincinius and his soldiers.

Caius and Metella join their Christian friends, fully expecting to be imprisoned with them.

When the attack is made upon the unarmed worshippers they are astounded to see the soldiers stop with their weapons suspended while they listen to the divine words. Gradually the swords and spears are lowered and the entire company with their leader drop to their knees.

KALEM CO.

"THE MINER'S SACRIFICE."—Here is a great story of a young man who starts out from the East, a tenderfoot. At Gold Bluff he is given a warm reception, but he makes good by giving the Bad Man of the camp the beating of his life. This starts the story and the friendship of the two men.

They start together for the goldfields, make a stake and think fortune is ahead of them, when they are accused of claim jumping. The Bad Man, thinking to get out of a predicament, takes the accumulated gold and skips, leaving the young Easterner to bear the brunt of the accusation of claim jumping, in those days one of the worst crimes a man could commit. The case looks clear and the Vigilance Committee captures the young Easterner and decides to lynch him.

In the meantime the Bad Man hears of his former partner's peril. Tho' wounded unto death in a saloon brawl, he rides to the scene of the lynching, and with his last breath, says the words which place the blame on himself and restores his old pal to life and freedom.

"THE COLONEL'S ERRAND."—The Kalem Company in its effort to produce Indian themes of a higher order has hit upon a subject in "The Colonel's Errand" which for pathos and thrills is one of the best things the Kalem producers have done in this line.

The story is laid at a frontier post during an Indian uprising. As it opens we see several wounded troopers being brought in after a skirmish and we get a very good idea of military life at one of the smaller western stations. The Colonel in command of this port, a splendid type of the United States Indian fighter, is of course, greatly worried over the Indian uprising, but at the same time his heart is full of anxiety over the illness of his little girl. This child, a winsome little lass, is evidently the joy of her father's life and as the Colonel lifts the frail little form to his arms we see him asking the child if there is anything he can do for her and we see her whispering into his ear a request. What is it that the child wants, the getting of which is to involve the Colonel in the peril of his life? This question is unanswered until the final scene of the play. The Colonel's wife endeavors to dissuade him from his dangerous errand, but he persists and alone rides through the Indian country to the nearest trading post. On the way he is attacked by redskins, but escapes unscathed, and at the trading post secures the coveted article. On his return the Indians get him in ambush. The Colonel again rides through them unharmed but loses his precious package. When he discovers his loss he determines to go back after it for it means that he must encounter the savages single handed. With the reins in his teeth and a heavy army 44 revolver in each hand he rides back and the fight that ensues is one of the most spectacular ever shown on a screen. The Colonel is badly wounded and is only rescued by the timely arrival of a squadron of his own men, but the package, tattered and torn, is recovered, and with it clasped in his arms, the wounded man is taken back to the post and to his home. There the package is opened and the grizzled Indian fighters of the Colonel's command are astounded when they find what is in it.

To give the secret away would be to spoil the excitement and anticipation of one of the best films of the year. It is needless to say that any father will appreciate the Colonel's motive in making his wonderful ride.

"APACHE GOLD."—John Mills, a young prospector, takes advantage of an accident to Spring Blossom, the daughter of an Apache chief, to win her affections and get himself adopted as a member of the tribe and is married to the Chief's daughter. His interest in the woman is on account of the apparently inexhaustible store of gold the Apache possess and when as a member of the tribe, he is shown the location of the placer mine he loads himself down with the precious metal and returns to his own people, forgetful of the little Indian girl who mourns his going. Some years later Mills, his money gone, secretly returns to the mine to replenish his store and is overseen by a member of the tribe. He is captured and with true Apache cruelty he is tied to a tree with water and food within reach of his one free hand. But to take food or water will result in the discharge of a gun, giving him his choice of quick or lingering death though the Indians know that he will suffer as long as possible in the hope of rescue. A little Indian boy sprains his ankle so badly that he cannot move and in response to his piteous pleas Mills reaches for the water knowing that his action will cause the discharge of the gun and enable the boy to approach the water with safety. At that moment Spring Blossom appears and releases her husband, telling him that the sacrifice that he was about to make was for the sake of their child. The now repentant Mills takes them away with him and they settle upon a farm bought with Apache gold far from the Apache Camp.

"FAITH LOST AND WON."—Don Devereaux, returning suddenly to the home of his fiancee for a pair of forgotten gloves, is shocked to find her in the arms of another man. His faith in women destroyed, he becomes a woman hater and his dislike of the sex causes him to seek the west where an the ranch of his friend Jenkins he feels certain that the hated sex will not be seen. He is delighted to find that even the cook is a man on the Jenkins ranch and he is enjoying himself mightily until he encounters Emily Grey who owns the ranch adjoining the Jenkins place. Several times incidents force Emily upon his attentions and at last when he loses his footing and slips over a precipice it is Emily who discovers the body of the unconscious man on a ledge far below and when she had summoned help it is Emily who, because of her lighter weight, makes the descent and fastens the rope about the still form. Shock and exposure have brought on a fever and again it is Emily who nurses the sick man through the weary watches of the night and brings him back to health and strength. And finally it is Emily who brings back to him his faith in love for he finds that he is again assured that true love is the most precious gift if only love be true. It's a pretty western story with beautiful scenic settings done in splendid photography.

"THE RULING PASSION."—Undoubtedly the ruling passion of Mexico is love of chance. Your average Mexican will gamble upon anything, take any chance, and stake his total belongings on a horse-race, cock-fight, bull-fight or the turn of the dice. Tony Valero, a lusty young vaquero, is enamoured of Clarita Montez, whose father is fairly well off, as the middle-class Mexicans figure. Clarita prefers Tony to her numerous admirers but the father has selected for his future son-in-law, a young dandy called Jose Rodreguis, who has a certain amount of money which allows him more ease than his neighbors.

Jose trades upon this fact and presses his attentions upon Clarita. He bitterly resents her preference for Tony and does all in his power to belittle his rival.

Tony is the proud possessor of a pie-bald horse, whose fame is known throughout the province, so that none will race against him; as his prowess has been tested on several occasions, hence he is deprived of the source of revenue which might accrue from bets made against this animal.

One day Tony and Jose have an encounter in the cactus field, where the former is engaged in preparing this product for the use of cattle. Manuel, the father, separates them and orders Tony away, while he condoles with Jose upon his discomfiture. That evening, when the day's work is over, the rivals meet again in front of Clarita's house. Tony demands to know why Manuel prefers the indolent Jose to himself, and is told that it is on account of the former's money. Tony gains permission to call upon Clarita if he succeeds in making enough money to outshine his rival, whereupon he challenges Jose to a race.

Jose is well aware of the success of Tony's horse and is afraid to bet, whereupon the latter is in despair.

One day, when he is nearing his home, he is accosted by Clarita, who has been planning their mutual happiness. She tells Tony that if his horse was disguised that he could easily get a race, and suggests that they paint it black. Tony agrees to try the plan and secures a can of paint, with which they mark out the white spots upon the animal, after which he is entirely changed, so that none knows him.

Jose, seeing the strange horse, taunts Tony with his appearance and offers to bet his money in a race against the animal. Tony appears to be reluctant, but finally agrees and rushes off to pawn his silver-mounted saddle—a Mexican's dearest possession—so that he may obtain money with which to bet. He also sells his sombrero, and is surprised and pleased when Clarita gives him money which she has raised on her jewels, in a like manner.

The race is run and Tony's horse wins. Jose is disgraced and disgusted, particularly as he has bet all he had upon the result. He tries to injure Tony, but is ordered off the track.

Tony is not certain of his reception at Manuel's house, and so he plans an elopement with Clarita. This is consumated, but Jose happens along and sees the ladder at Clarita's window. He arouses Manuel and they set off in pursuit of the lovers. They arrive too late, however, as a friendly priest has just united them, and, after some arguing and a display of Tony's recently acquired wealth, he is forgiven and the father gives them his blessing.

"THE LITTLE FIDDLER."—This picture is played in a sad sweet strain which ends in a triumphal anthem of victory over sin and shame, and strikes a note that is sure to reach the heart chords of all those who have the slightest bit of human sympathy in their nature.

"The Little Fiddler" plies up and down the street by day, playing his simple melodies and receiving whatsoever the passersby choose to bestow upon him, and at night comes home to his mother with his day's earnings, tired and worn but happy in her tender love. Far into the night the brave young mother sits sewing at her machine till her eyes ache and human strength gives way to the call of sleep. With weary head bent upon her arms she slips into dreams of the past.

Slowly the room fades into another in the luxurious home to which she was brought a bride. She is singing a cradle song over a baby's crib when her husband comes in drunk, and here follows that sad scene which is enacted in hundreds of home every day. A woman's strong, brave love is pleading for

Among the Exhibitors

Motion pictures will be run in Wilson's Hall, Griffin, N. Y., during the summer. As only the best pictures are shown the townspeople are patronizing the place every night.

Lewis Thompson, of Mt. Savage, Md., was in Frostburg June 14 looking after his picture interests. Mr. Thompson also has a picture theatre at Mt. Savage.

W. F. Horne, of Hailey, Idaho, is now in Salt Lake City, Utah, where he is purchasing supplies for the Opera House, which will be transformed into motion picture theatre July 1. Mr. Horne and his partner, William Sharp, also expect to run motion pictures in the Elite theatre, which is connected with their store.

Arthur Smith, proprietor of the Glenn motion picture theatre, Mountain View, Cal., has sold out his business to Fritz Campbell, Jr. Mr. Campbell will take charge of the business July 1.

Twenty-two hundred newsboys were the guests of the Buffalo News, June 10. The big Buffalo paper entertained the boys by taking them to see Lyman H. Howe's latest motion pictures. The newsies were much pleased with the performance and have been talking about the show ever since.

The Cofer motion picture theatre, of Seabright, N. J., will open at 7.30 o'clock in the evening during the summer months and will close at 11 o'clock.

A large ventilator has been placed on the roof of the Casino, Bay Shore, N. Y., and another will be in place before July. During the summer the management will make a reduction in price to school children every Saturday afternoon.

William Hunt, of Delevan, spent a few days in Depew, N. Y., last week assisting the Nause-Pratt Co., in opening its new picture theatre.

P. L. Harrington, of Albuquerque, New Mexico, is having a two-story building put up adjoining his store. On the first floor he will fit up an ice cream parlor and the rear will be used for a motion picture theatre.

L. C. Emmons, of Morrisville, Vt., has leased the lot on the corner of Bridge and Portland streets, and will erect a modern motion picture theatre.

Wiliam Sutfin, of Adrian, Mich., has gone to Leslie, Mich., where he will open a motion picture theatre.

The vacant lot at 1735-1745 Washington street, South End, Boston, Mass., has been leased for a term of years. A motion picture theatre will soon be erected on the site.

Austin & Holt, who run a motion picture theatre at Franklin, Mass., are holding Friday nights open for amateurs.

Piney Ridge, the summer resort of Hartford, Conn., is having motion pictures run in the open air auditorium every clear night. Robert H. Prutting, of Hartford, has charge of the shows.

Louis Eichenbaum, a well-known picture man in England, has just arrived in the United States, where he will look over the motion picture field.

Robert H. Norton, a merchant of Guilford, Conn., is building a motion picture theatre in Bristol. Henry S. Davis will have charge of the theatre which will be completed about July 1.

The Royal motion picture theatre, on Quincy street, Hancock, Mich., will be ready for its formal opening July 5.

R. C. Gerkin, of New York city, is making plans to erect a three-story motion picture theatre, on the east side of 3d avenue, just off 89th street. The building will cost about $15,000.

J. E. Johnson, of Osceola, Ark., has entered the motion picture field, and has purchased the Star Theatre lease, on Main street.

Atlantic City, N. J., is to have one of the largest motion picture shows in the United States. It will be established in the old Empire theatre, Atlantic avenue.

Manager Egleton, of the Lowville Opera House, Lowville, N. Y., will place motion pictures in that house all summer.

Conway, Ark., opened a new air dome June 8. Motion pictures will be run all during the summer.

A new $5,000 motion picture theatre is now in course of construction at 11301 Superior avenue, Cleveland, Ohio.

Dreamland theatre, Havana, Ill., has been leased by Charles Adams & Co., of Peoria, who will run first-class motion pictures during the summer months.

Ground was broken, June 9, at Morrisville, Vt., for a new theatorium which L. C. Emmons will build on the corner of Portland and Bridge streets.

H. A. Christie has purchased a first-class picture machine, for the use of his new picture house in Meredith, N. H.

Mrs. Edith M. Grant, one of the owners of the Empire motion picture theatre, Lewiston, Me., has sold her interest to J. B. Devine, of Salem, Mass.

Electric Park, Chatham, N. Y., opened June 10, for the summer. Motion pictures will be shown every night.

L. C. Gilbert, of Findlay, Ohio, has secured Edgewater Hall, and will turn it into a first-class motion picture theatre.

The management of Luna Park, Scranton, Pa., is giving free motion picture shows at the auditorium every night. Only the best and latest films are used.

Edwd. J. Hyman has succeeded Casselberry & Chester as lessee of the Hippodrome, Little Falls, N. Y., and will conduct a motion picture show during the summer.

CHURCHES FOR SUMMER PICTURES.

Rabbi M. M. Eichler of the Temple Ohabei Shalom, Boston, Mass., has now come forward with the idea of running motion pictures in the churches during the summer months. Rabbi Eichler is one of the most modern of Jewish rabbis; and, as a reformer, thoroughly believes in giving all classes and nationalities the best that the world has. He claims motion pictures is one of the best things to amuse and entertain the young people.

One thing Rabbi Eichler abhors: that is, the closing of churches during the summer. He believes that, should the pastors be away, something should be done for the children of that particular church; and, therefore, he advises the use of motion pictures in all churches to afford some place of entertainment that will meet with the approval of the better citizens.

RUBENS REMODELS THE FORD.

"The Ford" theatre, of Aurora, Ill., which was remodeled from the old Coliseum, was formally opened June 15 by Louis M. Rubens. The old Coliseum was one of the best known houses in the State, and upon its stage had trod many of the best known actors and actresses.

By the placing of motion pictures and vaudeville in the new house, gives Aurora one of the prettiest houses in Illinois, and its opening was attended by the best people in the city, who were the guests of Manager Rubens.

WILLIAM CHAFFIN BUILDING NEW THEATRE.

William Chaffin, of Huntington, W. Va., has contracted with the Smith Brothers to build a new motion picture theatre, which will be, when completed, the largest and most elaborate of its kind between Wheeling, W. Va., and Cincinnati. The building will be two stories with dimensions 90 by 145 feet. The balcony will be reserved for colored people.

In furnishings, the new theatre will be neat and handsome. All the motion picture machines will be of the latest Powers patterns. There will be hundreds of electric lights dotted in and about the theatre. In front of the house will be a large electric sign with the name of the house on it.

The cost of the house is not yet known, but it will cost somewhere in the neighborhood of $20,000.

GOOD COMEDY SUBJECTS.

Exhibitors, both large and small, have been complaining that they are not receiving enough comedy, but the reason for this state of affairs they do not probably appreciate, namely, the fact that so much of the comedy of this world of ours depends not so much on the action of a person as on the words spoken or the tone of voice used to speak them. Pathe Freres have, however, come to the rescue in gallant style and announce the release of six rattling good comedies during the next fourteen days. Comedies that are really comedies, with new ideas and a scream from start to finish. They will release on June 27 "Save Us From Our Friends," on July 1st "Rebellious Betty," and on July 2d "Max Foils the Police." On July 4th the "Runaway Dog," on July 6th "Jinks Has the Shooting Mania," and on July 9th "The Champion of the Race." Pathe Freres are in a pre-eminent position to give us these comedies because they have two of the world's greatest moving picture comedians working for them at the present time, Max Linder and Betty, in addition to various other comedians not so well known. It is certainly a matter of remark when one firm produces three good comedies a week for two consecutive weeks, and all will hope that they continue the good work. "The Champion of the Race" was produced in this country and is the first of the Pathe American productions to contain an interior. Judging from the way this picture is staged it is evident that they intend to use over here the same finish in detail and technique that has made their films famous the world over.

PICKWICK HAS LARGE ORCHESTRA.

The Pickwick theatre, San Diego, Cal., has now been changed into a first-class motion picture theatre and is under the management of Mr. and Mrs. Edward M. Drucker. The house will run pictures all during the summer months. Among the features of the theatre will be the full orchestra, which will render music during the pictures and two well-known singers. Albert Kendall will have charge of the music program.

A SCENIC FILM OF EXCEPTIONAL INTEREST.

At this time of the year the steamship companies are unable to transport to Europe all those tourists that are anxious to go there. Of those who do cross the Atlantic we doubt if there are five per cent. who return without visiting the Rhine. Up to the present time it has been impossible for those who have not seen this famous and magnificent river to gain any adequate idea of the grandeur of its mountainous scenery, the mystery of its swift waters, the peaceful calm of its vineyards, and the awe inspired by its grim castles perched high upon frowning crags. Pathe Freres have now made this possible with a colored film that they have taken showing this great river from Cologne to Bingen and which they will release on July 4th. The picture being remarkably well colored, gives one a very fine idea of this beautiful and popular trip. Embarking on a pleasure steamer at Cologne it takes you in rapid succession past all the most famous castles, each one of which is the subject of a hundred lays and legends. There are Koenigswinter and the crumbling ruins of the Dragons Rock. In quick succession follow Linz, Andernach and the beetling fortress of Ehrenbreitstein. Here we come upon one of the most famous sights of the Rhine, the Monument of the great Emperor William perched high up in the middle of the flowing stream. And then the Lorelei: what awe and fear the gloomy rock inspires, what mystery overhangs it. Instinctively one seems to feel the presence of the lovely maiden combing with a golden comb her long tresses, and luring to their doom all who venture within reach of the angry waves that lash themselves to foam at the base of the grim rock. Next appear the Oberwesel and the ruins of Schonburg and passing through the Rhine Palatinate we come upon Kaub and the castle of Gutenfels. Amongst others we see the famous Rheinstein and Sonneck Castles and finally at Bingen itself the Mouse or Hatto's Tower and the vineyards of Rudesheim. To those who have travelled along the Rhine Valley, also to those who have not, this film is one pregnant with interest, giving as it does a true representation of the splendid scenery of its magnificent and incomparable river, and calling to mind the innumerable tales and myths of the quaint old German folk lore which spreads its misty veil upon the dark and mysterious waters.

NEW ST. LOUIS HOUSE.

One of the most recent moving picture ventures to be launched in St. Louis is that which the C. M. McDonald Real Estate Co. has engineered. John P. Pensa and Sons of the Monroe Amusement Co. have leased for a long term of years, through the McDonald agency, the site formerly occupied by the Hamilton Avenue Picture Theatre, near Plymouth avenue. The new theatre will be called the "New Hamilton," and will have a seating capacity of 700.

The building will front 41 feet on Hamilton avenue, and will have a depth of 100 feet. It will be ready about July 4.

NEW YOUNGSTOWN THEATRE.

W. H. Parks Opens a New House "The Luxor." It Is a Model.

The Luxor, W. H. Park's new motion picture theatre in East Federal street, Youngstown, O., opened its doors June 15. In many respects the Luxor is the most completely equipped establishment of its kind in this section. A feature which is new to this city is the "noiseograph," a contrivance which will enable the operator to produce all kinds of appropriate sounds while the pictures are being thrown on a screen, splashing water, thunder and lightning, bells, fire engines, bird songs, fish horns, automobile sounds and a dozen other effects, all with perfect reproduction.

The motion picture machine, which is of the most modern make, is operated from a cement and asbestos booth, located outside the building in the rear, so that explosions or fires of any kind will be out of the question as far as the theatre is concerned.

The interior of the pretty little house is handsomely decorated with scenic views and soft, harmonious colors. The sloping floor contains nearly 300 comfortable chairs which are of light color, so that patrons who come in while the entertainments are in progress will be able to see them in the dim light.

The pictures shown will be of the best makes and will be changed frequently. Courteous attendants will be in charge, and every effort will be put forth to make the Luxor one of the most popular family resorts in this section.

BUSINESS GOOD AT NEWARK.

Newark, N. J., is now ranking among one of the best motion picture cities in the East. The Lyric Theatre, Bijou Dream and Bijou Park this past week have been filled both afternoon and night. The managers claim never in the history of summer amusements has business been better. While vaudeville has been run in many of the houses the public seem to be better satisfied with motion pictures during the hot weather.

VITAGRAPH NOTES.

The Vitagraph always gives you a run for your money, a square deal and a full reel. You want what you want when you want it and that is the reason and the answer to the whole matter and the Vitagraph is always there with the goods, to-wit: "The King's Funeral" and "The Reception to Colonel Roosevelt," which prove the wide awake up-to-dateness of the concern who are always awake while others sleep.

Did you see "Roosevelt last Saturday?" You didn't miss anything. The Vitagraph was there with its Eagle eye and took in the whole show for you, so you can see it at any time. Teddy is right there as big as life and twice as natural. He almost steps out of the picture as he extends his hand and says: "Dee-lighted to meet you." Never has a motion picture so thoroughly caught the view of an event and its central attraction as it has the Reception to Colonel Roosevelt. The beauty of it is that you can see "Teddy" as closely and fully as if you were talking to him personally.

When he takes his place on the reviewing stand with Mayor Gaynor of New York, they are life size, a real life portrayal of these two celebrated and remarkable men. The meeting of the "Kaiserina" by the Revenue S.S. "Androscoggin" and the attending steamships, is immense. You can almost step aboard as they pass before you. The whole amount of it is—you will miss it if you don't get this picture for exhibition at your place. You will give your people a treat and no one who sees it will ever say they haven't seen "Roosevelt." He can't keep himself in seclusion from the people while the Vitagraphed view of his reception is kept moving.

This week will see a two-ringed circus hustle at the studios of the "V." Everybody busy portraying some of the most originally novel and excrutiatingly funny comedies, evolving a number of surpassing dramatic surprises bearing the thumb marks of the master hand of the irreproachable "Life Portrayals."

"Old Glory" has stood by the nation; it is a winning salutation. We will stand by "Old Glory" first, last and always; it stands for an open door, the more the merrier. Announce it now, get your people "Old Glorified" and then show them "Old Glory," the most bewitching, appropriate, patriotic display ever shown or has ever graced a screen.

The Fourth of July must be celebrated. A Fourth without a celebration would be like a man without a country. The most effective way to celebrate the day we celebrate is to keep "Old Glory" before your patrons and you will find the people will stand and sit before "Old Glory" all day long. "Old Glory" red, white and blue posters are ornamental as well as useful. "Old Glory" will be released Saturday, July 2d.

On Friday, July 1st, "Saved By the Flag," a South American drama, with a thrilling plot and picturesque setting. On the same film "Wilson's Wife's Countenance" will make this day's release a double header, two in one with a total length of 997 feet. "Wilson's Wife's Countenance" is a bright little comedy with a big laugh and sharp satire.

Of course there are always good reasons for their production, else they would never be made, but they will surely be forbidden in every town of any size in the near future, and it is gratifying to see that the manufacturers are looking more to the educational than the sensational, for their picture plots.

Permit us to say just here that we have noted the absence of this kind of "truck" from the service you are supplying us, and that fact is greatly appreciated. We would rather have one of Kleine's fine Bible story pictures than six "robberies" or "hold-up" pictures.

The editorial from the Commercial Appeal, commented on by Mr. Mack, is of sufficient importance and weight, coming from such a conservative source, to merit reproduction here. Not that one is expected to coincide with some of the views expressed, which are rather narrow.

MOVING PICTURES AS EDUCATORS.

Certain Eastern medical colleges are using moving picture machines to illustrate operations in surgery. The clinic is photographed in order that the pictures may be used to further explain the details, and also that each operation may be reproduced whenever required.

In Chicago the commissioner of health uses the moving picture camera to illustrate the dangers of the deadly house fly and other disease-spreading insects.

These are illustrations to show how moving pictures have been accepted as a means of education. But it must be remembered, if educations for good can be obtained from the rapidly revolving films, educations for evil can likewise be obtained. This is a point which should be seriously regarded.

In the Baychester district of New York a boy has been arested for robbing the railroad station of the New Haven Railroad. He is a youth of tender years. The police wondered how he had managed to break open the safe without previous experience with yegg men. He explained that he had watched the moving pictures. Moving pictures showing how the expert cracks a safe gave him the idea. Other crimes are taught to receptive minds in the same way.

Undoubted good can be accomplished through moving picture films. They are used in the classroom, the lecture room and the rostrum of churches, but cheap moving picture shows depicting highwaymen holding up pedestrians, yeggmen blowing safes, train wreckers wrecking trains, footpads and kidnappers following their vicious pursuits, likewise teach their lessons of evil and should be censored everywhere.

Now, after reading Mr. Mack's letter and the editorial, and while conceding to the Gaumont product all the praise that it undoubtedly deserves, one is reminded of the wisdom of the licensed manufacturers in making so varied an output. Many picture houses would be dark, and remain dark, on bible story pabulum. The aim is to meet the demands of the greatest number of moving picture patrons along lines that will conduce to healthy recreation and good morals. Variety—a variety of worthy themes, in keeping with twentieth-century progress—is demanded, and licensed manufacturers are doing their utmost to meet it.

I, for one, utterly discredit the story of the "youth of tender years," who burglarized a railway station in the Baychester district of New York, after viewing certain moving pictures, as cited in the "Commercial-Appeal's" editorial. Most likely the culprit thought that the easiest way to save the professional cracksman who taught him how. And I have no desire, whatever, to say a word in favor of pictures of the safe-blowing, train-wrecking, foot-pad, kidnapping type. Subjects of this type were seized on at the outset, when moving pictures were a novelty and when anything "went." The manufacturer who makes such "truck" nowadays is laughed at, as everybody knows he is a novice at the game, and has not yet learned his alphabet.

No, Mr. Editor of the "Commercial-Appeal," speaking for the licensed manufacturers of America and Europe, they have become men and have long since put away childish things. High class drama, light and grand opera, delicious comedy and uproarious farce comedy, wondrous travelogues that encompass the earth, scenic splendors that inspire young and old as they gaze, micro-motographic wonders that reveal new worlds in insect life and that show how Nature builds the crystal, magnificent spectacles of peace, and awe-inspiring conflicts in war: these are some of the labors now undertaken by the licensed manufacturers who have become men in the moving picture industry.

CHICAGO FILM BREVITIES.

A. M. Eisner, chief booking clerk of the Theatre Film Service Co., was married to Claudia Roedelsheim, daughter of Mrs. B. Roedelsheim, at the Lexington Hotel, this city, June 7. Rabbi Hirschberg officiated at the marriage ceremony. The bridal couple left immediately for Niagara Falls, where they spent their honeymoon, visiting also New York and Washington before their return to Chicago on Sunday, June 19.

UNIQUE THEATRE.—A Model 5c. Theatre in San Francisco.

J. P. Price, owner and manager of the Central theatre, Austin, a suburb of Chicago, was seen at the Theatre Film Service Co.'s office last week. Manager Price states that he has the best people in the neighborhood for his patrons. His house, which will seat 500 people, is always crowded. The reason for this is an especially high class service and a well ventilated theatre.

H. E. Smith, manager of the Palmer theatre, this city, tells me that his attendance is affected by the free park entertainments now being given by the Park Commissioners in the various small parks for children and adults. These entertainments are given on Saturdays, and band concerts on other nights. The park entertainments are well advertised.

K. W. Linn, Pathe's Western manager, announces that the week of July 4th will be marked by the release of a series of especially meritorious films. He lays special emphasis on the Pathe colored film d'art, "Love Ye One Another," which will be released Wednesday, July 6. This film has two remarkable scenes: one a dissolving scene showing Christ descending from the cross, and the other a sensational rescue from a burning building, in which beams and walls are falling. Another unusually fine subject will be released Saturday, July 9. This is an American film, entitled "The Champion of the Race."

Mr. Linn advises me that the Pathe Freres release of the "New York Reception of Roosevelt" was made Sunday morning, June 19, the film being mailed direct from the New Jersey factory. The film was exhibited in eastern cities on Sunday, June 19, and in Chicago and other leading Middle Western cities on Monday and Tuesday, June 20 and 21. This film is praised for its excellent photography and absorbing scenes.

J. M. Ensor, manager of the Colorado Film Exchange Co., stopped over in Chicago on his way from New York to Denver, from Monday, June 20, until Friday, June 24. Mr. Ensor notified me that a new theatre is being built in Denver by Messrs. Greaves and Mackay, of that city, which will have a capacity of 1,200. The building is being erected on a lot 60 by 125 feet deep, and will cost when completed $64,000. The new theatre is being built on leased ground, at a rental of $1,500.00 per month, the lease being for ten years. The new house will be finished in August, and will open September 1st. Mr. Ensor states that the new house will be the largest and most expensive house devoted to the moving picture business in the Colorado metropolis. It will be thoroughly modern in every respect, and a special feature is being made of an up-to-ddate ventilating system. The price of admission to the new theatre, which has not yet been named, will be 10 cents. The best film service possible will be used and, in addition, operatic singers of reputation will appear at each performance, which will be continuous, from 10:00 A. M. until 11:30 P. M. A high class 10-piece orchestra has already been engaged for the house. The Colorado Film Exchange Co. will attend to the bookings of film.

PICTURES FOR MILWAUKEE SCHOOLS.

At a meeting of the school board, of Milwaukee, Wis., recently, Superintendent G. G. Pearce again raised his voice in favor of putting motion pictures in the public schools. Superintendent Pearce thinks that they are one of the most practical inventions of the age and heartily agrees with the New York school authorities who are endeavoring to do the same.

It can be said that Milwaukee was the first city in the United States to come forward and acknowledge that motion pictures were the best course of instruction for the younger pupils especially in teaching such subjects as geography, physiology and history.

CHILDREN'S FETE IN PICTURES.

Pictures of the "Human Rosebud," one of the school children's parades at Portland, Ore., will soon be one of the interesting pictures to be seen. This parade is one of the largest fetes in the West and is always looked forward to with much interest by the citizens of the Coast State.

In this year's parade there were five thousand children in line. To add to the interest of the affair there were many prizes given to the platoon of children that made the best showings. The prizes were donated by the Business Men's Club and other civic organizations. The "Human Rosebud" parade gets its name from the rose buds that are worn by the children on the occasion.

MANUFACTURERS' BULLETINS

the man of her bridal day, but still clinging to this drunken being of now, trying with her love to call back the gallant, handsome boy she loved so well. But drink has deadened all his memory of the past, and throwing her from him he goes reeling from the room.

The door slams and behold the room is changed again, and the sad, weary woman stands looking down at a basket of clothing where in her dreams of a few moments before stood a tiny baby's crib. Sinking by the bed, she clasps her hands across her sleeping boy and pours forth her evening prayer to God.

A gay, fashioonable musicale is in progress, and among its guests we can see the man of the dream now grown slightly gray but still handsome. His eyes shift from one piece of glittering jewelry upon a woman's breast to another string of pearls around the hostess' neck. Though among this crowd of fashion and music lovers, we instantly realize that he is not of them either in heart or feeling, but a common thief who plies his trade amid surroundings of luxury and riches. There is a lull in the conversation, and through the open casement are heard the soft, sweet strains of a violin being played outside in the street. Nothing will do but the street musician shall be brought in and play for them. He proves to be none other than our little fiddler of the first scene, and it is there that father and son, unknown to each other, meet once again.

The "Little Fiddler" plays for the devotees of fashion, of whom the hostess in particular seems to take great interest in him. Sending for her silver purse she gives him money and also takes his name and address, with a view of looking after his future welfare. With presents of money and many compliments for his skill with the violin the thankful little fellow leaves the place. While the boy was playing his sweetest music the father had managed to steal the silver purse filled with jewels. Shortly after the lad leaves the purse is missed. The thief accuses his own son of the crime.

One hour later we are shown the thief in his own apartments. He takes out the silver purse and begins to count his gain, when a card falls from his pocket. As he sees written upon it his own son's name and address the truth comes to him—"The Little Fiddler" is his own boy! Back through the maze of crime and years come into view the vision of the woman he once loved and honored. She stretches out her arms to him as in the days of long ago. He drives the sight from him and in its place his boy kneels before him, his hands fastened together with bands of steel. The thief stands staring into the dark future before him.

It is late that night when the anxious mother awaits the return of her little son. He comes and throws into her lap his gifts of money, and they are both rejoicing when suddenly the door is thrown open and the hostess and host of the musicale enter, followed by an officer of the law. The boy is accused of having stolen the silver purse and has just been torn from the arms of his mother, when in the door appears the father—the thief. He confesses his guilt and stands awaiting his punishment, when the small, soft hands of his own boy stretch forth asking for mercy and forgiveness. The appeal reaches the hearts of the hearers, and for the boy's sake the man is given his freedom. The door closes softly on the departing members of the world of fashion, and husband and wife once again look into each other's eyes. A soul is saved; and we feel sure that out of the darkness will come forth a man who will bring peace and happiness into the life of one woman and the little curly-headed boy beside her.

This picture abounds in too strong an appeal to the human heart not to be a big winner in the moving picture theatres wherever it is shown.

"THE STARS AND STRIPES.."—One of the most famous sea fights recorded in the history of naval warfare took place off Flanborough Head on the night of September 23d, 1779, at 7:30 P. M., between the English man-of-war, "Serapis," 44 guns, under the command of Captain Pearson and the American merchantman, "Bon Homme Richard," commanded by John Paul Jones, the founder of our American navy.

It is around this famous sea fight that this picture is built. The entire picture breathes with that spirit of freedom, of love of country and liberty that is bound to quicken the pulse of the on-looker; and a glow of pride will mount his cheek as he is shown the sewing circle of fair colonial hands making the first American flag that ever caught the gleam of the morning sun in European waters and proclaimed to the world that the maps of the globe must from then on have printed across the Western hemisphere the words "United States of America." In this scene is shown the spirit of those days—sparkling eyes and eager fingers of womanhood engaged in making the first silken robe of "Stars and Stripes" in which to wrap the infant nation.

It is here we are introduced to John Paul Jones, the man of fashion and fight, come to inspect the flag which Congress adopted on the same day that he was made Captain. As he himself had said, "The Stars and Stripes and I were created out of the same womb of destiny. As long as one floats so shall the other, and should the flag sink beneath the waves in defeat, I shall go down with her." The one floats proudly from the topmost masts of ships in every port in the world to-day. The other lies in silence in a leaden coffin in Bancroft Hall, with the Stars and Stripes enfolding him, awaiting his final resting place in the tomb to be built to his honor and everlasting fame. It is with reverence and respect that the Edison Company introduces this famous man to the moving picture world in this film, the main thread of whose story centers around John Mayrant, for whom Paul Jones had the greatest love and respect and whom he eulogized as "the man who knew no fear or danger and whom death alone could conquer."

John Mayrant has fallen out of favor with Mistress Dorothy Hall, a little lady with whom he is greatly in love, but who does not feel that John is quite as brave and gallant a gentleman as she cares to bestow her heart and hand upon. Chance favors John when a messenger carrying the news of Burgoyne's surrender, and with sealed orders for Paul Jones, falls wounded at the door of Mistress Dorothy Hall while John is pleading his suit. The messenger being wounded en route, John undertakes the delivery of the message in his place. Arriving on board of Jones' boat at midnight, John delivers the message to his Captain. Paul Jones at once orders all sail to be hoisted. The "Stars and Stripes" are flown to the midnight breeze and the ship sets sail for Europe with the news of Burgoyne's surrender, but not before John has succeeded in inducing Jaul Jones to take him with him.

To win back Mistress Hall's love and affection is John's one idea, and how well and how bravely he accomplished this task is shown to the audience in one of the most realistic and startling scenes ever produced on the moving picture screen—the famous sea fight between the "Bon Homme Richard" and the "Serapis." Here are shown the horror and the thrilling glory of the old-time sea fight on board a sailing vessel. The scene between decks is particularly effective. Men stripped to the waist and covered with blood and powder are serving the guns, with the dead and dying lying around and powder monkeys dashing here and there in the smoke of battle. A ball crashes in the side of the vessel and causes death and destruction. The men desert their guns, but John Mayrant drives them back to their post of duty, himself staggering from a half dozen wounds.

Next we are shown the upper deck of the "Richard." Shells are bursting, cannon roaring, officers hastening hither and thither with orders, while on the poop deck we see Paul Jones, calm, cool, the acme of courage and bravery, calling out his orders, receiving the news that his ship is sinking and fire is destroying it. "Take the water that is sinking us and quench the fire that is burning us up!" is his order.

"Do you surrender?" comes the shout from the enemy's vessel. The reply rings out "Surrender! Why I am just beginning to fight!" A moment later and the "Serapis" is seen to crash into the Richard. "Boarders away!" rings out the order, and John Mayrant is the first to respond to the call. It is now a hand-to-hand conflict. A hundred men leap over the rail upon the enemy's vessel. The smoke and powder hide them from view. An awful moment of suspense, and then through the haze and fire can be seen John Mayrant clinging to the ratlins with the surrendered English flag in his hand. Captain Pearson has surrendered, and as he hands his sword to Paul Jones, John Mayrant sinks to the deck. Human endurance could stand no more. He was covered with wounds and glory.

That Paul Jones was in the secret of John's valor and bravery is indicated in the letter he sent to Mistress Dorothy Hall recommending the hero to her favor in words of highest praise. How well she obeyed the Commander's order is shown on John's return.

A wonderful picture elaborately staged, which will pack a house to the very doors on Independence Day, and will be appreciated wherever and whenever shown.

OGDENSBURG TO HAVE NEW THEATRE.

Charles H. Maceau, of Ogdensburg, N. Y., who has been associated with W. L. Dinneen, of that city, in the motion picture business, has leased the Averell store on Ford street and will establish a new picture house some time during the month of July.

Only recently there was a strong opposition in the common council towards the granting of any more licenses for motion picture shows, but since the managers have agreed to put on only the best pictures the opposition has died away and Mr. Maceau will start fixing up his place immediately.

TO OPEN THE BIJOU.

The New Bijou theatre on Fairfield avenue, just west of Broad street, Bridgeport, Conn., will open soon with the best of moving pictures and a good vaudeville show at each performance. This theatre, which is being finished as rapidly as possible, is one of the best in the city, it comparing favorably with any theatre of its size in the state of Connecticut. The bill for the opening show, the date to be announced in this paper soon, will be besides the moving pictures, Glen Ellison, a singing comedian; Cole and Coleman, a team in musical nonsense, and Mamie Fulton, a character comedienne and change artist.

THE INDEPENDENT PRODUCT

Comments of "The Mirror" Do Not Indicate a High Standard

It is a long time since The Film Index devoted any space to "independent" pictures. Reason enough—too busy talking about the good kind. But recent comments on the "independent" product by the astute critic of "The Dramatic Mirror" are worth reprinting in these columns as indicating in particular the faults which The Index has all along declared, in a general way, to be the trouble with that product.

After enumerating the various concerns engaged in making so-called "independent" pictures, "The Mirror" says:

It will be observed that here are from twenty-five to thirty reels of new pictures per week to fill the demands of the limited independent field—more issues than the entire license field absorbs, and the licensed theatres outnumber the others by at least two to one throughout the country. The danger that confronts the independents is, therefore, clearly apparent on the very face of things. They are in danger of forgetting quality for the purpose of attaining quantity. It seems to be a race to produce new pictures without sufficient reference to dramatic or photographic art. And this tendency has been evident in the production of nearly every independent American company for some time. Good as have been a few Imp pictures, and much as the Bison films have improved, nearly all the releases of these companies as well as practically all other independent American companies, excepting Thanhouser, show haste and lack of thought in their production. Crude stories are crudely handled, giving the impression that they are rushed through in a hurry—anything to get a thousand feet of negative ready for the market. Such pictures, of course, do not cost much to produce, but they are not of a class to make reputation. The Thanhouser company, alone of the independents, shows a consistent effort to do things worth while, and it is an open question as to how long this policy will survive in the face of the increase of production announced by the company to three reels per week.

If the independents would establish a legitimate demand for their films they must pay first attention to class and quality. The American public is becoming more critical day by day, and the time is long past when anything, so long as it moves, will answer for a motion picture.

Following the above are a few criticisms on recent "independent" subjects from which we take the pertinent sentences:

AN ENGINEER'S SWEETHEART (Bison, June 14).—This melodrama which contains a number of realistic railroad scenes, starts in with the old, old incident of the undesirable suitor trying to kiss the heroine, which, of course, is the cue for the entrance of the favored lover, in this instance the engineer, who comes bravely to the defense of his lady love. Then the vanquished suitor plans to take the life of the lover, and the vile scheme is eventually foiled by the girl arriving in the nick of time. This plot has been used in pictures no less than a thousand times, and it is surely entitled to a vacation.

SETTLING A BOUNDARY DISPUTE (Atlas, June 15).—If the players taking part in this picture could have realized that there is something else in picture acting besides frantic gesticulations, everybody waving arms and striking attitudes all at the same time, and as rapidly as they can make their muscles move, they might have succeeded in making this little love comedy acceptable.

A POLICEMAN'S SON (Imp., June 16).—This story is cheap melodrama and not at all the class of picture work the Imp. people have previously given us. The acting is in harmony with the story—that is to say, mere acting, with no intelligent effort to attain the realities of life. The people race through their parts like the old time picture actors, and nearly all of them play to the camera, the policeman's son in particular. It is all done precisely as it would not happen in real life, and we are not surprised, therefore, when we see the hero and his father shake hands with the old chap and everything ends happily.

HER DAD'S PISTOL (Powers, June 18).—The acting in this improbable melodramatic film goes to the extreme limit of actors talking to the camera—a fault that the best and most successful producers are striving to correct. To make matters worse, some of the players roll their eyes in an agonizing way at every opportunity. We are not allowed to forget for a moment that they are "acting." The story, as intimated above, lacks probability.

THE PHRENOLOGIST (Powers, June 18).—This is an attempt at fantastic farce without consistent plot. The actors will try to "act" funny, and only partly succeed.

PATHE GETS ROOSEVELT PICTURES, TOO.

Pathe Freres were also on the job when Col. Roosevelt landed in New York, June 18, and produced about 200 feet of film on the event. The negative was rushed over to the Bound Brook factory and a print was subsequently shipped to each licensed exchange. While no elaborate effort was made to cover the event a good short length was obtained.

ESSANAY COWBOY COMEDIES

Review of Some Notable Releases Depicting Western Ranch Life.

TO what may we credit the immense, and seemingly untiring popularity, of the Western subjects of the manufacturers who have entered this field? Since last Fall, when the Essanay Company established a branch producing staff right out in the plains and foothills of the West the unceasing cry of the exhibitor was "Bully, keep it up! It's just what we want!" And, although several other manufacturers entered the field there was no murmur nor no hint that the cowboy picture was being overdone. On the other hand the exchanges have been busy promising their exhibitors Western films according to their turn and putting down clamor by the statement that they have been purchasing Western films to their very limit.

FROM "LITTLE DOCTOR OF THE FOOTHILLS,"

The Essanay Company last Fall was the first in the field. Before their new policy was put into effect they submitted the proposition to their various exchanges and all answered unanimously and emphatically that the Essanay's new Saturday release, all Western, would be a success.

The Essanay Company can congratulate themselves upon their enterprise in having hit upon a popular theme when they selected the West as the scene of action in their new films and the romantic cowboy to carry on the performance. A glance at the popular magazine fiction of the last few years, of any number of stage plays, which have "made good" and the quantity of these which have been eagerly devoured by the story readers and theatre-going public points out the reason why the Essanay cowboy pictures, as well as those of other manufacturers, have been so successful.

A letter received by the Essanay Company not long ago from an enthusiastic exhibitor, praises particularly the comedy subjects of the Essanay Company's Western producer. "I have shown 'The Little Doctor of the Foothills' as a repeater and had a larger crowd the second time than I did the first," he said. This exhibitor also commented on a number of others of the Essanay's Western comedies, "The Ranger's Bride" and "A Ranchman's Wooing." He also said, and with considerable philosophy, he would minimize on dramatic films and show a majority of comedy during the hot months, and that he intended to obtain all the Essanay's Western comedies even though some would be repeaters.

This first named picture, mentioned by the exhibitor, has proven a tremendous laughing hit and is still in much demand. The story, you will remember, concerns a little lady doctor from the East who goes to a Western town to practice medicine. All the boys are happily inspired to become ill that the "Little Doctor" can be at their sides, but after being fooled so many times she makes a solemn resolve to answer no more calls. However, one of her admirers for whom she has contracted a particular liking, is accidentally shot and she is summoned. She refuses to go, believing it another joke, but when he is carried into her office she is stricken with remorse and sews up a gaping wound in his heart by promising to be his little doctor for keeps—and the other wound didn't amount to much anyhow. Those who have seen the picture will remember it was a good laugh getter and many exhibitors have used it as a repeater.

"A Ranchman's Wooing" is another picture which will make people forget the heat. It was released by the Essanay Company in March and has had a good run. This story is particularly funny in itself, is excellently acted and splendidly photographed. It tells the story of an old ranchman who has four daughters, all of a marriageable age. The ranchman falls in love with "Widdy" Jones, but although the Widdy is willing, she doesn't care to adopt the children and makes it clear to him that if he can induce them to marry she'll be glad to consider his case. By a clever ruse the old man succeeds. He makes it so hot for the girls' beaux that they take revenge (as they think) in eloping with the girls.

"The Ranger's Bride," released by the Essanay Company in April, is another which should be included in this list of the Essanay Company's cowboy comedies. A fat cowpuncher has trouble with his family sewing and, seeing an advertisement from a young lady desiring a husband, he writes a letter to her. The other boys decide to have some fun with "Bill," having discovered Bill's plans, and on the day milady is supposed to arrive two of the cowpunchers disguise as the "gal" and another as the "parson." But when Bill gets a glimpse of the face of his intended he breaks away and "beats" it down the road, with the gal and preacher and the other cowboys in hot pursuit. No one who has seen this picture will forget that chase. Bill is finally caught and forced to marry, but he soon discovers that he has been fooled and bloodshed is averted by the happy thought that he is safely out of matrimony. This picture is a decided scream.

Others on the list of the Essanay's splendid Western comedies are "The Bad Man and the Preacher," "The Ranch Girl's Legacy," "Western Chivalry," and "Won By A Hold-Up."

F. O. WEBBER WILL BUILD NEW THEATRE.

F. O. Webber, who has been running the Amuzu motion picture theatre in Roanoke, Va., during the past year is now planning to build a new up-to-date house so he can give the initial opening September 1.

The new house, which will be built on South Jefferson street, will rank among the best in the "Old Dominion" state. During his stay in Roanoke, Mr. Webber has only given his patrons the best pictures obtainable and the opening of his new house is looked forward to with much interest.

INDEPENDENTS MEET

Gathering at Cincinnati Does Not Smooth the Troubled Waters—Will Fight On.

THE Associated Independent Film Manufacturers held a meeting at the Sinton Hotel, Cincinnati, O., June 18-19, to discuss their troubles and plan a campaign against the Laemmle-Kessel combination, commonly known as the Sales Company. The following persons were present at the meeting:

Exchanges: I. W. McMahon and Jerome M. Jackson, Cincinnati Film Exchange, Cincinnati; Arthur Lucas, Sunny South Film Exchange, Savannah, Ga.; T. A. Reilly, Southern Film Exchange, Cincinnati; J. Plough, Anti-Trust Film Co., Chicago; Max Lewis, Chicago Film Exchange, Chicago; C. Smith, Toledo Film Exchange, Toledo, O.; Robt. Bachman, Chicago; I. W. Ullman, Columbia Film Co., New York; J. W. Morgan, Morgan Film Exchange, Kansas City, Mo.; Jas. Reilly, Pittsburg, Pa.; Luke Mitthen, the New England Film Exchange Co., Boston; Mr. Magee, Boston; Eugene Cline, Chicago; Buckeye Film Co., Pacific Exchange Co.

The manufacturers represented were Edwin Thanhouser, New Rochelle, N. Y.; A. G. Whyte, New York; David Horsley, Centaur Film Co., Bayonne, N. J.; Mark M. Dintenfass, Champion Film Co., New York City; Paul H. Cromelin, New York City; L. Prieur, representative of the Lux & LeLion Film Co. in the United States.

The question of limiting the exchanges allied with the Associated Manufacturers, through the product of that combination, was discussed, and it was decided that no exchange which enjoyed their output could use Sales Company pictures.

As a result of this decision, a number of film exchanges have already been cut off. This issue is causing much disturbance among the exchanges and plans for a hot campaign are under way. Some exchange men claim that in order to keep their business up to the standard they must get some films from the Sales Company, as their patrons demand a continual change, and for that reason declined to handle only the product of the Associated Manufacturers.

To find out how they stood, each exchange representative present was requested to give his views on the matter and indicate his position towards the two "scrapping" organizations. To some extent this caused a stampede and when the adjournment of Saturday night was called eleven bucking exchanges refused to be roped in. To these the Association sent word stating that their supply of films would be cut off unless the terms were agreed upon immediately.

On Sunday morning a preliminary meeting was held, at which the afternoon's program was outlined. To feel safe from hands of insurgents none of them were allowed to as much as a peep in.

After a long recess, the regular meeting was called at 4 p. m., with Mr. Bachman presiding. The first address was made by President Cromelin, who with his "Bryan like" eloquence outlined the so-called "status" of conditions of the film world and what his organization intended doing in reaching the desired end, which called for harmony and united action. Mr. Horsley then rose to his feet, congratulated the President upon his speech, and then added that he would like to know the personal opinion of all present on the situation. This so enthused Mr. Ullman that he jumped to his feet and let it become known that the insurgents were prepared to fight and even invade the enemy's territory.

When Mr. Thanhouser took the floor every one present sat up and took notice. When he emphatically stated he would remain with the Association until the enemy sued for peace there was much confidence spread around the room. Not that there had been any feeling that Mr. Thanhouser would leave the insurgents, but for the manner in which he expressed himself.

With this much settled, the time arrived for the important question to be asked each exchange representative present as to what stand he took. Some of the representatives were eager to stand "pat," while the wiser ones wanted to know the whys and wherefores of things, and also what protection the insurgents could or would guarantee. Others said they had been treated fairly by the Sales Company and saw no reason why they should use such drastic methods, while still others were undecided.

PICTURES MADE BIG HIT.

Rochester Paper Tells How Popular They Were At Playgrounds Convention In That City.

IF ever motion pictures won its way to the hearts of our people, it was at the National Playgrounds Convention, held recently in Rochester, N. Y. The fact is motion pictures were the whole show and every delegate, teacher, visitor and small boy was right on hand when the exhibition was thrown over the canvas.

To let our readers know how the 900 delegates were interested in the pictures, we print the following story taken from one of the Rochester leading dailies of June 9. In the story is recorded all that took place at the motion picture entertainment that was given by John Collier, of New York.

Free moving pictures and vaudeville, shown for the first time in America as an adjunct to a public school and social center, drew two big crowds to No. 9 School last night. E. J. Ward, who had charge of the entertainment, termed it "the greatest show in the country" and the hundreds of youngsters who comprised the greater part of the audiences found no fault with this statement. The speechmakers got very fair attention, but it was the pictures that the youngsters came to see and they intently watched the operations of the picture machine man as he changed films while some address was being made.

"We plan to make this nightly entertainment a link between the school and the home," said Mr. Ward last night. "The pictures to be shown will be instructive as well as entertaining." County Judge J. B. M. Stevens made a few remarks before the first exhibition, and he commended the scheme as one that would tend to entertain the children with pictures of life that would be uplifting.

ROOSEVELT RECOGNIZED.

The lights then went out and every youngster squirmed around in his seat to watch the picture machine operator. As the bright, white light flashed on the curtain they were all attention, and no nickleodeon ever had a more appreciative crowd. "Roosevelt in Africa" was the title of the first film, and the youngsters had a chance to show what they could do in the way of applause when Old Glory waved to the breeze in front of Roosevelt's camp at Mombasi. The antics of the African natives seemed to please them immensely. When the former president appeared, mounted on a diminutive charger, some urchin piped out, "Oh, look at Teddy," and they all seemed to be able to recognize the smile.

Other films shown were pictures of the recent aviation meet at Los Angeles, and the future generation took great interest in the movements of the big machines that seemed to skid along the ground and rise into the air at a great speed. "The Courtship of Miles Standish" gave them a historic as well as romantic film.

The experiment has attracted a great deal of interest on the part of the visiting delegates to the playground convention and many have attended the shows. Among these visitors three who are especially associated witht he school extension movement are Dr. George W. Stitt, the superintendent of recreation centers, vacation schools and playgrounds in New York City. In addressing the audience at No. 9, Dr. Stitt said: "We began the extension of the use of public school plants twenty years ago in New York. You came to New York and got the idea. That was a good thing. Then you improved upon it, and that is a better thing." Clarence Arthur Perry, chief of the bureau of school plant utilization inquiry of the Sage Foundation, said of his impression: "The scene at No. 9 last night impressed me greatly. The secret of grasping knowledge is in interest. The interest, the eagerness of that multitude of boys and girls and older people demonstrated the wonderful possibilities of education as well as recreation in the kinetiscope. Upon the horizon of modern life there has appeared no mechanical force more potent or magical in effect than that wielded by the moving picture machine. Whether its immense educational value shall be realized or whether its power shall be wasted or exerted for evil depends upon the foresight of society.

"In attaching it to your splendid school system you people of Rochester are not only securing an aid of extraordinary educational efficience, but you are helping to create a demand for good and wholesome films and thus exerting a purifying influence upon the whole moving picture industry. Rochester by this latest addition has given to the country-wide movement for the wider use of school plants another great, fine example and impetus."

Dr. Henry S. Curtis, the second vice-president of the Playground Association, and formerly its representative at Washington, spoke enthusiastically of the addition of moving pictures as a part of the community educational and recreational equipment and said that Rochester is to be congratulated.

IT IS SAID THAT THERE ARE ABOUT 49 "INDEPENDENT" FILM MAKERS IN AMERICA.

RUBBER.

At the Victoria motion picture theatre, Columbus, O., June 14, the B. F. Goodrich Company of Akron, O., sent one of its lecturers to give a description of how rubber is made. For over an hour the lecturer told the audience of all the processes that rubber went through before it was ready for market.

The pictures taken in the forest of South America were most highly colored and the work of the natives most thoroughly brought out. There were also motion pictures taken of the great rubber shipping ports and how the rubber is loaded. The last pictures shown and explained were how rubber was made into automobile tires.

IMPROVEMENT IN CLEVELAND.

The Cleveland Humane Society, of Cleveland, O., are sending out circulars to all motion picture theatre managers requesting them to adopt a standard of motion pictures that will be for the betterment of its patrons, also for adequate ventilation and sanitation.

The society has no desire to do anything that will injure the business of any of the motion picture theatres, but claims that such requests should be taken advantage of by all managers. So far the motion picture managers are accepting this request

RECENT SLIDE RELEASES

Synopsis of Production Issued by the Leading Song and Novelty Slide Makers.

SCOTT & VAN ALTENA.

"GOODBY BETTY BROWN."—Words by Jack Mahoney; music by Theodore Morse; published by Theodore Morse Publishing Co., New York. A march song which tells of the parting of a soldier and his lass. From the roar and fire of battle he knew no retreat, but surrendered easily to the will of his sweetheart. The slides have that military air that always pleases. A soldier is always admired. There is a good one in this set who poses amidst beautiful flowers and enticing scenery.

"SOMEBODY'S LONESOME."—Published by Daly, Boston, Mass. A sentimental love ballad by Thos. S. Allen, with illustrations that should not only be a pride to the colorists, but should satisfy any audience, critical as to posing, scenery and personal appearance of the models.

"BLAZE OF GLORY."—A fine march song by Abe Holzman; published by Leo Feist. The illustrations are striking scenes, portraying the glories of the good, old U. S. A.; deeds which we have done and of which we are justly proud. Striking novel effects with fine photographic quality and coloring make this a set which all will surely admire.

"THE SONG THAT FINDS AN ECHO IN MY HEART"—Words by Richard Buch; music by Theo. Morse; published by Theo. Morse Music Co. A sentimental ballad with beautiful illustrations. There keeps passing through the mind of the youth the strains of that old-time air, "O, My Darling Nellie Gray," recalling his Southern home and friends. Fine models, charming settings, beautiful coloring with the usual novelties, make this a very fine set.

"YOU FOR ME WHEN YOUR WIFE'S AWAY."—Words by A. Longbrake; music by Ed. Edwards; published by The Jos. Morris Co. A song with comedy and comedy illustrations. One girl prefers the company of another's husband, consequently the title, music and slides that are full of funny situations, with characteristic high quality of work throughout from poses to coloring. Novelties, too, make this set an attractive one.

"TOOT YOUR HORN, KID, YOU'RE IN A FOG."—A novelty song with words by Jos. Mittenthal; music by Jos. M. Daly, and published by Daly Music Co. Obadiah, a country lad, loves little Mary, but to all his pleadings comes her answer of "Toot Your Horn, Kid., You're in a Fog." Of course the illustrations are fine, with plenty of variety and novel effects. In the last slide Mary and her city friends shout to Obadiah as they fly past his auto in their faster machine.

"IF THIS ROSE TOLD YOU ALL IT KNOWS."—Words by Jack Mahoney; music by Theo. Morse; published by Theo. Morse Music Co. A pretty sentimental ballad with a very sweet tone. Most of the pictures for this set were taken in gardens, making the set a most desirable one, as it abounds in beautiful flowers of all colors, a veritable riot of color. The models are good, exceptionally so. Novelties, too, are not lacking.

"YOU CAN'T FEEL LONESOME WHEN YOU'RE BY YOURSELF."—Words by Arthur Longbrake; music by Ed. Edwards; published by The Jos. Morris Co., N. Y. A tuneful ballad, treating of a lonely youth whose sweetheart had left the day before, never to return. The slides for this song show him in his loneliness, and also during the happy days when they were together. The youth and maid are fine looking and their choice of "loving nooks" is exceptionally good, as the slides will show. The coloring effect is beautiful and the set contains, as usual, novelties.

"HURRAH! FOR THE SUMMERTIME."—Words by Geo. Whiting; music by Harry Von Tilzer; published by Harry Von Tilzer Music Pub. Co. This song has a most rousing air, having already made a hit. The story is about four men who have just put their wives on the train for the country and are jubilant over it. The song is great, so are the slides. The remarkable effects shown in some of the slides of this set are truly wonderful. The set winds up with the men riding swiftly away for a "high old time" on Halley's Comet.

DE WITT C. WHEELER.

"LOVE KEEPS THE WHOLE WORLD YOUNG."—Music by Will L. Becker; words by Saul M. Aronson; published by M. Witmark & Sons, New York. A waltz ballad of the usual high order published by this house. Illustrations for this song surpass anything yet turned out by Mr. Wheeler. There are not only more novelties, but novelties of a new order that have never before been seen in a song slide. The first good point about the set is that it illustrates the lyrics perfectly. Secondly, much of the scenery was obtained on one of Mr. Wheeler's trips out west; if you don't know what a Colorado sunset is, see this. Thirdly and lastly, the posing is excellent and the coloring rich, true to nature, and very pleasing.

"I'LL BUILD A FENCE AROUND YOU."—Published by F. A. Mills, New York. This is Mills' latest hit and is said to be a "peach." Illustrations by Mr. Wheeler might be called "the set of novelties." By novelties we mean pictures that are out of the class of straight or ordinary pictures; pictures that are the slide manufacturer's own conception of an idea to illustrate a lyric in an appropriate but clever manner. If all ballads were to be illustrated simpuly with two lovers in different positions, the illustrated song would soon become monotonous. Novelties are now the backbone of the set.

"BACK TO THE BLEACHERS FOR MINE."—Words by Harry Breen; music by Albert Von Tilzer; published by York Music Co., who last summer published the baseball hit of the season, viz., "Take Me to the Ball Game." This year they have outdone themselves, as "Back to the Bleachers for Mine" is far better. The song itself is excelled only by its own illustrations, which are clever humorous to a high degree, and altogether the work of a master hand. To say it is out of the ordinary is expressing mildly the quality of this set. Nearly every slide is a novelty and is comedy. Baseball "fans" galore. A set that should please all in this baseball-mad country.

"SILVER BELL."—An Indian ballad; words by Edward Madden; music by Percy Wenrich; published by Jerome H. Remick & Co., who consider this song the best in their catalogue, and their summer hit. Their predictions seem to be verified, as the story as well as the melody is captivating. A set of slides with the soft moonlight effects, gorgeous costumes, taken in country abounding in natural beauty, is produced by the ancient firm of De Witt C. Wheeler.

"THE MAN IN THE SILVERY MOON."—Words by A. Seymour Brown; music by Nat. D. Ayer; published by J. H. Remick & Co. The story tells of a moonsick maiden who imagines the "man in the moon" is real. While the idea is not a new one, the writer has worked out his theme in a novel way. The illustrations are a set of highly artistic poses that are a credit to the song slide business. They are clever in conception, beautifully colored, and contain many new ideas in the form of novelties. These novelties are far different, far more delicate and beautiful, and worked out more skillfully, than novelties heretofore produced. It would seem that earnest effort had been employed to make this set one of the best ever published.

"THE CHANTICLEER RAG." — Words by Edward Madden; music by Albert Gumble; published by J. H. Remick & Co. A clever ditty written around the popular chanticleer craze which at present is sweeping the country. A genuine novelty in song writing with illustrations that are a scream. Mr. Wheeler has again secured the services of an artist who has a keen sense of humor. The slides are line drawings of all the inhabitants of the barnyard family in the funniest positions possible. If you want your audience to forget their troubles for a time, let them see these slides.

"I WON'T BE BACK TILL AUGUST."—Words by Alfred Bryan; music by Albert Gumble; published by J. H. Remick & Co. The story of how Willie Brown takes a vacation in New York City, falls in love at the seashore, and, when his father comes to take him home, he, too, falls victim to the lure of the beauties of the seashore. Set to a capital melody, with illustrations that are corking from start to finish. They show in highly humorous fashion how the old man is roped in and contain feature slides that will make the most pessimistic of audiences sit up and hold its sides.

ALFRED L. SIMPSON.

"UNDER THE HEBREW MOON."—Words by Edward Madden; lyrics by Dorothy Jordon. Maude Raymond, the ever popular artist, is meeting with great success singing this, Shapiro's latest song hit. Slides by Simpson are cleverly thought out to catch the spirit of the song; models are exceptionally good; coloring as usual very dainty.

"WHEN THE YELLOW JESSAMINE IS BLOOMING, SUE."—Words by Robert Roden, music by J. Fred Helf. The authors of "Meet Me, Kathleen, in Honeysuckle Time" have in this song a ballad of equal merit. Simpson has made illustrations which are well posed, exquisitely colored and altogether up to the very high class standard which he has so well maintained.

"I'M LONGING FOR THE OLD DAYS, MARGUERITE."—Words by Arthur Lamb; music by J. Fred Helf; published by Helf Pub. Co. In verses of more than ordinary poetical merit, a lover is dwelling upon scenes of the past ere he parted from the ones he loved. The melody is a sweet, plaintive air that is bound to become popular. Simpson has made slides quite out of the ordinary that do justice to this very beautiful ballad.

"UNDERNEATH THE MONKEY MOON."—Words by Jack Drislane; music by Geo. W. Meyer. This number is a typical jungle composition, such as the house of Haviland knows so well how to make popular. Simpson has cleverly depicted the joys and sorrows of the dwellers in the jungle, as he did in the well remembered set of "Down in Jungletown," to which these slides are worthy successors.

"WHEN YOU AND I WERE COURTING."—Melody and lyric by Kenneth S. Clark; published by Chas. K. Harris. That the author of "After the Ball" knows quite as well how to select a good song as he does to write one is our conclusion after hearing this beautiful love ballad. Simpson has done justice to his subject in a very beautiful set of slides, showing the "maiden fair and lover true" from youth to old age. These are not the usual grease-paint old folk, but "sure enough" ones, with all the charm a dear motherly old lady should have.

"THE CHINATOWN RAG."—By Jack Drislane and Geo. W. Meyer; F. B. Haviland, publisher. This is a great set of slides for anyone looking for a novelty. The only Chinese slides we have ever seen. To say they are in Simpson's best style tells the whole story. The scenery and posing are truly Oriental, and the coloring exquisite.

"GOODBYE ROSE."—By Herbert Ingraham, author of "Roses Bring Dreams of You." Published by Shapiro. The love of a bird for a rose; exquisite scenes of nature. The set is a decided departure from the usual hackneyed lovesick couple usually depicted. The photography is great and the coloring a credit to Simpson.

NOVELTY PUZZLETTES.

Exclusive original puzzle pictures by the famous puzzle man, Sam Loyd:

CHANGING LETTER SERIES.—This is a particularly clever set, done in Loyd's best style. The puzzles seem hard, yet how easy to solve when you know how.

HIDDEN GEOGRAPHICAL NAMES.—A very interesting lot of puzzles, that will make theatre patrons think hard, and at the same time amuse them immensely.

CITIES OF THE UNITED STATES.—Clever puzzle pictures, representing in puzzle form cities in this country. Beautifully colored and well illustrated. Entertaining, amusing and of a highly educational character.

STATES OF THE UNITED STATES.—Representing in puzzle form the states of the United States. Second set of series of puzzle slides designed to increase box-office receipts.

POPULAR FLOWERS.—Puzzlettes of the best-known flowers. Beautifully colored. Six puzzle slides, as usual, and explanatory slides and answer slides.

GIRLS' NAMES.—Here's a chance for those who have a large acquaintance with the weaker sex to show how much they know.

LETTERS OF THE ALPHABET.—Sounds dry, but is really one of the most interesting of the series.

"A CHILD'S IMPULSE."

Released June 27th, 1910. A CHILD'S IMPULSE How She Averted An Imminent Wrong.

This Biograph subject shows the powerful influence of a child's pleading. A young man of wealth and position is allured by a designing, ambitious widow into proposing marriage to her. His friends, learning this, warn him against the flirt, and, to cure him of the infatuation, suggest a stay in the country. Here he meets an artless country girl, and a higher, nobler love is the result. However, the widow finds him, and is determined to bring him back to her. They meet and the old infatuation possesses him, and he returns to the city with her. This almost breaks the poor country girl's heart, but her little sister, alone, goes to him and succeeds in bringing him back to the heart-crushed girl.

Approximate Length, 994 feet.

Released June 30th, 1910.

MUGGSY'S FIRST SWEETHEART

True Love's Course Ran Anything But Smooth.

A delightful Biograph comedy showing the experiences of Muggsy and Mabel. After gaining her consent he calls, but, curse the luck! he sits in a chair just varnished, and, when he arises, he leaves a portion of his clothing glued thereto. To beat it is his only recourse, and he thinks his dream of love is o'er. Not so, for Mabel writes and apologizes, asking him to call again. This time he encounters the National Uplift Committee, and, thinking them burglars, throws them out. When he learns their identity, he feels he is now dished for good, but he is voted a hero when they realize that the Committee had overstepped the bounds of reason in wanting to destroy many treasured articles, which they in the uplift deem sinful. Approximate Length, 982 feet.

ROMANCE HUMOR

Here's a little romantic comedy that is bound to find favor everywhere. Donald Devereaux, a rather impulsive swain, finds his fiancee in the arms of another man when he returns unexpectedly for his forgotten gloves. Don promptly decides that no woman is worthy of his faith and he comes to hate the entire sex, retiring to a ranch to avoid them all, but Cupid rides the range and he ropes Don in approved fashion with the aid of the pretty owner of an adjoining ranch. To good photography and splendid acting are added brisk humor and a charming love story. All in one film.

IT GRIPS THE HEART

We usually make a little extra hit with our child stories (you remember "The Angel of Dawson's Claim"), but this is about as dainty a child story as we have ever had. An actress seeks to renew her hold over Banker Redmond, who has married and developed a love of home since the wild oats days. He fights against her influence, but she wins and he slips home late at night to get some papers and leave a farewell for his wife. His little son cannot sleep—what child could, with a fascinating Indian suit beside the bed—and he prowls through the halls, "capturing" his father and saving him from the consequences of his folly. Don't let this get past you. You can't afford to.

A PRESENTMENT

THE special "White Slave" grand jury for the city and county of New York, N. Y., has finally been permitted to make its final presentment to the Court. This body of inquisitors was appointed some months ago to investigate the published charges that there was in New York an organized effort to procure women for immoral purposes. The appointment of John D. Rockefeller, Jr., as foreman increased public interest in the work of that jury.

In making its final report to the Court the grand jury made these recommendations:

1. That no effort be spared in bringing to justice the male parasites of immoral women. When the character and prevalence of these creatures are more fully realized and public sentiment aroused regarding them, the inadequate punishment now imposed should be increased and every legitimate means devised and put into execution to exterminate them.
2. That the existing laws be more rigidly enforced to safeguard the patrons of the moving picture shows, and that parents and guardians exercise more careful supervision over their children in connection with their attendance upon these shows.
3. That vigorous efforts be made to minimize the possibility of the Raines law hotel becoming a disorderly house, and that where necessary, proper supervision and inspection looking toward that end be provided.
4. That the so-called massage and manicure parlors be put under the control of the Health Department; that a license from this department be required for their operation; that certificates be granted to operators only by some approved medical authority, and that proper measures be taken to enforce these laws.
5. That the laws relating to immorality in apartment and tenement houses be rigidly enforced, and that the present laws be supplemented if necessary.
6. That a commission be appointed by the Mayor to make a careful study of the laws relating to and the methods of dealing with the social evil in the leading cities of this country, and of Europe, with a view to devising the most effective means of minimizing the evil in this city.

In the body of the presentment the grand jury explains that a number of persons suspected of engaging in the traffic in women were examined and testified to their operations. Testimony was also presented showing the methods used by those traffickers to entrap young girls. Continuing, the presentment says:

In this connection mention should be made of the moving picture shows as furnishing an opportunity for leading girls into an immoral life. These shows naturally attract large numbers of children, and while the law provides that no child under the age of sixteen shall be allowed to attend them unaccompanied by parent or guardian, it is a fact, as shown by the number of arrests and convictions subsequently secured, that the law is frequently violated. Evidence upon which indictments have been found and convictions subsequently secured has been given which shows that in spite of the activities of the authorities in watching these places many girls owe their ruin to frequenting them.

It is not the purpose of this reference to bring an indictment against the moving picture show, which, under proper restrictions, may be an important and valuble educational and recreative factor, but rather to point out possible dangers inherent in performances carried on in the darkness, and the importance of observance of safeguards by parents or guardian, and of the strict enforcement of the law for the protection of children.

Unquestionably the investigations of the grand jury were conducted without fear or favor and were complete as they were impartial. It leaves but one course for the pictureman to pursue: to individually see that his house is above suspicion or reproach.

Time and again The Film Index has urged the abandonment of the "dark house" and pointed out the danger of adverse public opinion if that unfavorable condition was maintained. The grand jury points out the dangers of performances carried on in darkness, and provide the opponents of the picture theatre with a big, strong peg upon which to hang their many objections and protests.

A grand jury presentment is a serious matter and not to be lightly considered by any interest which comes in for criticism in that document. The presentment is fair enough to recite that it does not propose to bring an indictment against the motion picture theatre and that it believes it may become an important and valuable educational and recreative factor; but it demands proper restrictions to prevent it from becoming a possible aid to crime.

Unquestionably, there will more be heard of this question before the effect of this presentment has worn off. Under the circumstances picture theatre managers that are not living up to the law, or are not keeping their places respectably may look for trouble. There will be little sympathy for them if they get what is coming to them.

CASUAL COMMENT

DURING the heated summer term the average motion picture theatre has not the temptations calculated to keep the box office receipts up to the high-water mark. And many of those below the average are little better than mere "sweat-boxes." Therefore, it is not unusual to hear the complaint of poor business, especially after the few scorchers of the past two weeks.

Fortunate, therefore, is the picture theatre manager who can turn the vacant lot next door or across the street into an "air dome" and give his patrons all the "local atmosphere" they could ask for. As for the manager who has no "air dome" facilities the best he can get is the worst of it, for the fun-loving, comfort-seeking public will surely seek the cool spots in summer.

There is but one thing for the picture man to do and that is to make his house as cool and inviting as possible, or else close it for "renovation and much-needed repairs."

Houses so situated that they can be well ventilated will be able, with the assistance of numerous electric fans, to keep the temperature down. A further comfort might be afforded by supplying patrons with fans. The manager with a keen eye to business, will discern the advertising value of fans distributed to his patrons daily and discover in them a revenue that may be made to increase his profits; he can, at least, get all the fans he wants for nothing.

Upon the same principle that folks will forget their troubles if you give them something to do there is a nice revenue to be gained by the sale of ice cream cones and cooling drinks. By making the intermission a bit longer between pictures there will be plenty of time for the distribution of the several drinks and confections. Where municipal regulations are not too exacting a portion of the hall might be fitted with small tables where ice cream and soothing libations could be administered with more satisfaction to patrons and less interference with the picture program.

Many of the numerous refreshment resorts at Coney Island run pictures to hold the crowd. It has been reported that ice cream and soda water dispensaries have, in various towns, added pictures as an attraction. Why shouldn't the picture add ice cream and soda? We dare say it would be appreciated.

A case in point:

Driscoll's Bedford Park theatre away up in Bronx borough, New York City, happened to have a vacant lot annex, which the proprietor leased for an "air dome." He sold the refreshment privilege to a good hustler and has kicked himself ever since that he didn't run it himself. The records show that it has gathered in almost as many nickels as the box office. This is only one instance. Almost every airdome in Greater New York—and there are a few of them—have refreshment booths and the concessionaries are making money, too.

ONE serious obstacle to the refreshment proposition is the dark auditorium. Folks don't like to eat and drink things they can't see. But while a picture theatre can't be so brilliantly lighted as an ice cream parlor it may be sufficiently lighted to enable one to find the way to one's mouth and to be certain nothing worse than ice cream or lemonade enters it.

Probably the greatest sufferers from dull business in hot weather are the managers who have been making vaudeville the principal feature of their program and have run a few old pictures to relieve the monotony. Their mainstay was vaudeville, but many have cut it out for the summer and are trying to make the pictures carry them through.

The writer visited one of those places last week. It is what is known as the "Victoria" theatre and is at 181st street and St. Nicholas avenue, New York City. Pictures have always been slighted at this house in favor of a very poor class of variety. When the hot wave struck town the vaudeville with the heat was more than the patrons of the house could stand for in one place, so they decided to take the heat at home where they did not have to be tortured by the vaudeville as well.

Lack of business induced the manager to cut out his "expensive" vaudeville and to try and struggle along on the pictures. But what a struggle it is. Most of his pictures are old and "rainy"; his operator made things worse by keeping them carefully out of focus. Most of his song slides were cracked. Altogether it was about as poor a show as we have seen in any but an "independent" theatre, where they can't help being bad.

Near by is another manager who runs nothing but good pictures and is still crowding his house. Surely the manager who runs vaudeville is in a bad way.

A GATHERING of film men who couldn't resist talking shop, turned the conversation in the direction of a certain picture critic who seems to hold a grudge against New Jersey. Now, if there is one thing that Jersey has done besides producing mosquitoes it is producing pictures. It is a matter of statistics that Jersey raises a larger crop of pictures to the acre, per annum, than any other state in the Union, or any country in the world, for that matter. This speaks well for Jersey; as for the Jersey brand of pictures it may be truthfully said that pictures have reached the highest state of cultivation in Jersey.

It is the failing of the critic in question, when there is nothing in the picture itself deserving of condemnation, or of damnation by faint praise, to say: "We recognize the familiar Jersey scenery." Suppose that he does (if he really does), recognize a bit of Jersey. What then? Is the picture any the less a picture because of the alleged recognition?

To be sure, careless producers have permitted incongruities to slip into the camera's field when taking pictures in Jersey; but the same thing has happened in other states; so why cast aspersions upon the entire Jersey product?

A motion picture other than those denominated "scenic" and "educational," are essentially artificial as distinguished from the "natural," in so far as the scenic accessories are concerned. The sweep of the camera's eye is circumscribed, and for general purposes, all mountains, forests and streams look alike to it. A train robber or an Indian desperado can be hunted as successfully in the Orange Mountains as in the Rockies. The camera would not reveal a difference, neither could the keen-eyed critic properly tag either of two pictures taken in the different regions named.

In constructing a scene for the spoken drama, the necessary forests, rocks and rills are simulated by the use of paint on canvas. No doubt the critic might complain that he recognized the canvas or the paint, but would that recognition be fatal to, or even a serious detraction from the scene? The criticism is: is the simulation good?

Now, if the picture man can obtain a rugged mountain scene in Jersey that is a correct simulation of another mountain scene which may be named in the story, has he not complied with the technical requirements of the picture as effectively as though he traveled 2,000 miles to the actual scene of the supposed picture, as if such a picture had an actual scene.

Hence, the bit of Jersey that supplies the picture man with an exact simulation of a scene somewhere, anywhere, is every whit as good as any other bit of topography needed for a particular subject of a general nature.

To hold a picture up to scorn because of its Jersey affiliations is not criticism, neither is it worthy of the critic to thusly sneer at an otherwise satisfactory effort.

WOLGAST BUYS PICTURE SHOW.

Ad. Wolgast, the lightweight fighter, who won the title of champion of his class by defeating "Battling" Nelson, has bought the Alma theatre at Cadillac, Mich., from D. H. McCarthy. By this means Ad may get some of the money out of pictures he overlooked in the fight. Mr. McCarthy has repurchased the Royal theatre at Manistee, Mich.

This week's cover page picture is from a scene in G. Melies' release for July 21, entitled "A Postal Substitute." This is a thrilling riding picture which harks back to the days of the "pony express," and introduces the already famous young and beautiful horsewoman whose daring riding has characterized some of the best of the Melies' pictures.

CONVENTION DATES NAMED

Secretary Freuler Announces That the F. S. A. Meeting at Detroit Will Be Held July 21 to 23

While recent disturbances in the ranks of the Licensed Film Exchanges have resulted in the elimination of another vice-president and secretary, the gaps have been closed up and the "thin blue line" proposes to march on to Detroit to pay its respects to that faithful old comrade, Col. Andy J. Gilligham. Accordingly, Secretary J. R. Freuler, who was appointed by the board of directors to assume the duties of the secretary's office, laid down by Herbert Miles when he joined "Lemmel," has issued a call for the mid-summer meeting to be held at Detroit, Mich., on Thursday, Friday and Saturday, July 21 to 23. The official summons reads as follows:

> "This is to remind you that the Semi-Annual Convention of the Film Service Association will be held at Detroit, Mich., on July 21st to 23d inclusive.
> "Matters of great importance and of special interest to all Exchanges will be considered at this Meeting, when various issues are to be brought up and discussed. You cannot afford to miss this 'Meeting of all Meetings.' It is the desire of the Officers and Executive Committee to make this the greatest and best attended Meeting the F. S. A. has ever known.
> "Detroit being admirably located, and an ideal Convention City, it makes it necessary to arrange for reservations at least three weeks in advance, in order to get proper Hotel accomodations.
> "Kindly mail me your answer on the enclosed card, at the earliest convenience, for we count on your presence to aid in making this the one best Convention the F. S. A. has known.
> DO IT TODAY.
> "Thanking you in advance for your immediate attention, and with best wishes, I am,
> "Very sincerely yours,
> " J. R. Freuler, Sec.,
> "FILM SERVICE ASSOCIATION."

Everything that Secretary Freuler says about Detroit is true. Ask Gleichman or President Gilligham. They will give it full endorsement and say a few more things that Freuler may not have had space to include in his letter of advice.

Gleichman is already on the job. An inquiry addressed to him by the editor of The Film Index brought the following reply:

> "Yours of the 25th received and glad to hear from you.
> "It is too early at the present time to say just what we are going to do in the way of entertainment for the F. S. A., as we as yet have no idea as to the number that will be here. However, you can say that we are going to try to entertain the bunch to the best of our ability, and give them the best time that they have ever had, and neither labor nor expense will be considered.
> "Wish to also state that we will be very glad to have the visiting delegates use our office as their headquarters for the receipt of their mail and their correspondence, and our stenographers and telephones will be at their disposal.
> "Anything else along these lines that you want to add, do so, and we will try to live up to it.
> "Looking forward with pleasure to having you visit our city at that time, and with best wishes, I remain, "Very truly yours,
> "PHIL. GLEICHMAN."

That listens like a large time . We are not going to add anything to what Gleichman says they will do; that will be aplenty. Any film man who decides to attend the convention may rest assured that he will be glad of that decision.

Detroit, you know, is the one town on the great lakes that is a real summer resort. There are a hundred places to go and as many things to do. Leave it to Gilligham and Gleichman; they will show you a good time.

A "LEMMEL" SCHEME THAT FAILED.

Word is now passed that the differences between the Sales Company and the Associated Independents have been patched up and that peace once more reigns in the "independent" camp.

From the details of the peace compact the compromise looks like a complete surrender on the part of the Sales Company crowd to the Associated Manufacturers; at least the former have conceded all the points demanded by the latter, as far as the negotiations have gone.

It will be remembered that, in the first place, the Sales Company proposition required that every manufacturer of "independent" film were to pay to the Sales Company ten per cent. of the amount of sales for handling film. Later, this proposition was modified and it was proposed that each manufacturer should pay $100 weekly to the Sales Company.

The second proposition was as vigorously opposed by the Associated Manufacturers as the first and, when the Thanhauser Company proposed to establish exchanges in all cities where Sales Company exchanges were located, the Sales Company offered to lay all the cards on the table and let the "insurgents" come into the game. This event happened as related elsewhere in this issue.

As the Sales Company proposition now stands it has been stripped of all the "get rich quick" curves which the "dummy" president of that concern, Carl Laemmle, lauded in such glowing terms. Each manufacturer will now pay $50 per week for the privilege of marketing his product through the Sales Company. If there are any profits, an equal division will be made. If there is a deficit, that also will be divided. The manufacturers have also the option of having all C. O. D. sales made payable to them direct, instead of to the Sales Company.

Up to now everything is settled except the actual management of the company. A Governing Board has been chosen of an equal number of persons from either side. These are to meet and select a president, a secretary, a treasurer and a general manager. There will be a fight over the offices of secretary and general manager, for neither side trusts the other.

Thanhauser, who has forced the fighting all along and has compelled the Laemmle-Kessel crowd to give up all the real graft in the proposition, is not disposed to surrender his advantage by handing the management over to the Sales Company crowd. So more trouble may be looked for before peace is actually established.

INFORMATION WANTED.

The Motion Picture Exhibitors' and Film Renters Association of Hamilton County desire a list of all Organizations in the United States, namely: "Exhibitors' Associations" and "Film Renters' Associations." The Secretary of any Organization of this character will greatly oblige by sending address of their Association to T. A. Nolan, president "The Motion Picture Exhibitors' and Film Renters' Association of Hamilton County," 709 Vine Street, Cincinnati, Ohio.

Long Trip for Pictures

Edison Mfg. Co. Sends Players to Canadian Rockies for "Local Color"

While there are no indications that the scenes suitable for motion pictures and adjacent to New York have been entirely overworked, the ambition of the picture maker frequently sends him far afield for newer scenes; to seek virgin soil as it were; to search the remote places of the earth.

Acting upon some such impulse the Edison Mfg. Co. has dispatched one of its most capable producers and six of its stock company of motion picture players to the famous Canadian Rockies where a series of pictures dealing with the peculiar phases of life in the northwest, with the wonderful scenery of that country, hitherto unexplored by the picture man, for the background.

The company of players with a complete equipment left New York for Montreal on Wednesday, June 22. They went first to Minneapolis, thence to Winnipeg and from there by special car over the Canadian Pacific railway to Regina and Calgary.

While the scenery of the Canadian Rockies is almost beyond the power of man to fitly describe in mere words, and would form a series of scenic pictures of great interest, it is not the purpose of the Edison players to content themselves with mere picture taking. They carry with them a bagfull of scenarios written especially to fit the customs and mode of life in the northwest. These picture stories will be worked out among the mountains and gorges and ranches. Later the company will work over the Pacific coast for glimpses of that region.

The product of this expedition will be awaited with great interest. It will bring to the picture audiences of the world an intimate view not alone of some of nature's grandest and awe inspiring pictures, but a faithful reproduction of life in a pioneer country.

The expedition has official recognition and will have every assistance possible to insure the success of its work. The editor of The Film Index has been permitted to see something of the work planned and our readers may feel assured that a treat is in store for them when the work of this company of picture explorers begins to come out. By the time this word passes around it is believed the Edison players will have arrived at their first destination and have begun operations.

EDISON'S "PEG WOFFINGTON"—MEETING OF THE LOVERS.

"PEG WOFFINGTON"

Edison Players Produce Clever Picture Version of Charles Reade's Story

FOR a complete story of "Peg Woffington" we refer our readers to Charles Reade's novel of that name, which writer made her the heroine of an interesting tale. She was an English actress of Garrick's time, during the early part of the 1700's. A glimpse of the storied life of "Pretty Peggie" is given in a forthcoming Edison picture, also called "Peg Woffington."

EDISON'S "PEG WOFFINGTON"—VANE'S WIFE APPEARS AT THE DINNER TO "PEG."

According to the novelist, "Peg" really loved but one of her numerous admirers whose name was Sir Harold Vane, or something like that. Unfortunately, he was already married and "Peg's" poor heart nearly broke when she learned the fact.

The Edison players have taken this incident and marked out an excellent comedy-drama, evolving a number of dramatic situations with excellent effect and forming a picture that, as a whole, possesses the merit of good action which sustains interest to the very last foot of film. In photography the p'cture is up to the standard.

Three scenes from this picture are herewith reproduced; one shows the discovery by Vane's wife of her husband's infidelity, a dramatic moment which is well sustained. The interrupted duel presents a bit of action that threatens serious consequences but for the timely interference of Peg and the appearance of Vane's wife.

The subject is pleasing throughout and the story well interpreted.

No. III of the "Bumptious" Series.

Only a few weeks ago mention was made in these columns of the series of farce comedies from the Edison studios entitled "Mr. Bumptious." The third of the series, "Bumptious As An Aviator," is about to be released. This picture is introduced by a genuine aviation scene with the Wright Brothers soaring over the roofs of the houses viewed by Bumptious and a party of friends, including his reverse mascot, or hoodoo, the gum-chewing girl, who is always about when Bumptious is due to perform one of his feats.

As usual, this experiment, despite the cast-iron assurance of Bumptious, ends disastrously, for just as he is about to demonstrate his bird-like ability, the dragging anchor of a balloon catches his "plane" and whirls him into space.

When the exasperated balloonists get Bumptious to ground they add him to the wreck of his machine and leave him to drag on his way in tatters with the thought "never again" uppermost in his mind.

The Torpedo Boat "Salmon."

This is an interesting educational subject, showing the U. S. S. Torpedo Submarine "Salmon" in evolutions, at Provincetown, Mass. The "Salmon" is said to be the largest of submarines. The evolutions are exceedingly interesting.

EDISON'S "PEG WOFFINGTON"—THE INTERRUPTED DUEL.

Gleaned at the Edison Studio.

Rex Beach departed for a moment from his favorite atmosphere when he wrote the story of "Out of the Night" for the Edison Company, which film will be released July 12. In its unfolding, however, will be fully demonstrated the author's wonderful versatility. Although he has made a specialty of life upon the rugged Western frontier he proves in this film his ability to portray faithfully and convincingly life's drama in the Eastern social world.

It is a story that concerns a self-made man of sterling qualities and a charming young society girl, whom the demands of society have not robbed of a true appreciation of nobility of character and self-sacrifice. An accidental meeting at a social function, a ride in the park, a runaway horse, an act of heroism—result, two eyes that see but faintly the light of day or the beautiful face of the girl who has unconsciously surrendered her heart to her rescuer.

His eyesight gradually growing feeble as his love grows stronger, he determines to bring matters to a conclusion by going away, and sends a note to that effect to the young lady, who is a constant inquirer at his home, but who is not aware of his failing eyesight. How she discovers it and the result of the discovery is presented in scenes whose dramatic strength and pathos baffle description.

"Out of the Night" will tug at the heart-strings of any audience.

Will an audience be interested in scenes of historically interesting places and personages of note in and about the city of Havana—the harbor and the famous Morro Castle, the beautiful Yumuri Valley, a military parade reviewed by President Gomos and Vice-President Zayas, the sunset salute from the big guns of the castle, the charming city of Matanzas, and scenes of tropical gorgeousness—the while a delightful little heart story with a bit of clever comedy is being unravelled before their eyes? The film is "A Vacation in Havana," to be released by the Edison Company on July 15th.

It has its opening scene on an ocean liner bound for the West Indies, with a chance meeting between youth and maid, and the last few scenes disclose the result of that meeting,—an irascible parent skillfully inveigled into a prison cell of Morro Castle and there detained while youth and maid fly to the nearest clergyman to complete the damage that Cupid has wrought. Of course, all ends well and everybody is happy at the finish.

The interweaving of the heart interest with exquisite scenes of common interest in the "Queen of the West Indies" will without doubt be thoroughly appreciated by moving picture patrons.

The second of the Bumptious series, "How Bumptious Papered the Parlor," is the supplementary subject on the reel of the 15th. It is a screamingly funny comedy in which Bumptious essays to cheat the paper hanger of his profits and at the same time tempt fate by doing the work himself. There are many possibilities in a dozen or more rolls of wall paper, a pail of paste and an actor of "Jones'" ability—and every one of them is realized in this film. That parlor looks as if Halley's comet had clouted it when Bumptious gets through, and his wife, his critical friend and the housekeeper like anything but human beings. Another case of where "The Girl Who Chews Gum" puts the hoodoo on Bumptious.

"Old Loves and the New" and "A Frontier Hero" are dramatic releases of the 19th and 22d, respectively. The scenes of the former are laid in the African gold fields and of the latter on the Kentucky frontier about the year 1800. Both subjects are said to be unusually strong and convincing.

"Peg Woffington," adapted from the novel of that name, written by Charles Reade, is to be released on July 26th.

Another one of the Edison Cuban pictures, "An Unexpected Reward," a strong dramatic subject, is to be released on July 29th.

Nathaniel Hawthorne's great story, "The House of Seven Gables," will be drawn upon for the production of pictures by the Edison Company in the very near future. Of all of Hawthorne's works this perhaps stands out as the most dramatic and replete with a mystic, supernatural atmosphere, which it will be the endeavor of the Edison producers to retain. Further details in regard to this picture will be announced shortly.

"KALEM" A SOLID WEEK.

In a recent letter to W. Fay Smith, Chicago representative of the Kalem Company, Smith & Walker, proprietors of the Lyric Theatre, Marinette, Wis., reported what they called a "Kalem Week." During that entire week they ran nothing but Kalem films as was announced on a large banner stretched across the front of the theatre. Meeting with exceptional success they said they would try another "Kalem Week" later on. This theatre obtains its service from the Standard Film Exchange of Chicago.

IMPROVEMENTS AT AVENUE THEATRE.

Improvements are being made at the Avenue Theatre, on the corner of Grant avenue and First street, McKeesport, Pa., to put that house in first-class shape before the summer season closes. The business of the house has so increased during the past few months the management has found it necessary to enlarge the seating capacity. While this is being done there will be several other improvements made. Motion pictures will be run during the months of July and August and will probably continue during the winter. Vaudeville will be put on at least once a week.

EFFECT OF EDUCATIONAL PICTURES.

June 24, 1910.

Editor Film Index, New York City.

Dear Sir:—Seated in one of Rochester's finest picture theatres the other day, I was much interested in the comments of a couple of ladies behind me, on the picture—Gaumont's "Beneath the Walls of Notre Dame"—which was being shown. One of the ladies was giving her companion much interesting information about the church, describing the architecture and the meaning of some of the grotesque figures perched about the building in many places. To me, her remark when the picture ended was especially significant, in endorsing my long-founded belief that educational pictures are welcomed and greatly appreciated by the public. As the picture ended the lady said: "My, but that was a fine film. I like those scenic pictures much better than the dramatic ones."

I had watched the same picture in another house where the patronage comes chiefly from the laboring class, and the interest in the picture there was not less marked than in the better theatre. There is much of interesting scenery in this country which has never been filmed—little, in fact, which has been; and there is certainly a great field open to all the American producers in the way of scenics. Let's have more of them.

Yours truly,
B. G. DRUMMOND

Great Fight Pictures Coming

Licensed Manufacturers Secure All Rights and Make Elaborate Preparations—Get Views of Training Camps of Both Contestants

Despatches from the seat of war reached New York Wednesday morning, June 29, to the effect that all arrangements for the pictures of the great battle between James J. Jeffries and Jack Johnson had been satisfactorily concluded and that, so far as the picture men were concerned the fight could be produced without further delay.

The negotiations were conducted by Mr. W. T. Rock, representing the Associated Licensed Manufacturers. The first proposition made was to buy the picture rights in the entirety at a certain price. It was reported at first that Johnson had accepted this arrangement and that Jeffries would fall in line. Next came the report that Jeffries had accepted the proposition but that Johnson was holding out.

At this point negotiations dragged. Then it was reported that Johnson had sold to Chicago parties and a former exchange man, named O'Day, came into the negotiations as the reputed owner of the Johnson interests. To make a long story short, a corporation was formed to take care of all the interests and arrangements concluded on that basis.

As previously arranged the pictures will be taken by the licensed manufacturers under the direction of Mr. J. Stuart Blackton of the Vitagraph Company. Nine cameras will be used, working in banks of three from three different positions. The Vitagraph Company will supply four with operators and assistants; three with operators and assistants will be supplied by the Selig Polyscope Company, and two with operators and assistants by the Essanay Film Manufacturing Company.

The Essanay contingent left Chicago Tuesday, June 28, and joined the representatives of the other companies at Reno Thursday night. The few remaining days preceding the big fight were spent in building stands for the cameras and perfecting all details for taking the pictures. Great care will mark the making of this big picture and, though the battle may go forty or fifty rounds, the picture makers will carry with them enough of the ribbon ammunition to keep all the nine cameras busy grinding out the story from the first blows of the combatants to the final knockout.

Arrangements have been made for a special train to get the picture men and their negatives out of Reno Monday evening, immediately after the conclusion of the contest. Each of the three manufacturers having cameras on the job will develop their own negatives and make one print of each. A committee of the licensed manufacturers will review these prints and decide upon the question of length and select the best scenes, composing the picture to be given to the public out of the best of the entire lot of negatives. All other negative will be held in reserve for other purposes. It is estimated that over 60,000 feet of negative will be used in making this picture.

Interest in the forthcoming pictures is already running high among exhibitors and proprietors of large auditoriums, and the licensed manufacturers are being flooded with requests for the right to exhibit the big fight pictures. Being a strictly licensed product, the Johnson-Jeffries fight pictures will be exhibited in licensed houses only, or leased only to exhibitors in good standing on the books of the Motion Picture Patents Company.

SPECIAL FROM THE BATTLE GROUND.

Friday morning The Film Index received by Western Union night letter the following laconic message from J. Stuart Blackton, who is on the firing line at Reno, Nev.:

RENO, NEV., June 30-July 1,
Special, Film Index, 1 Madison Ave., N. Y.

Fight pictures secured by license interests. Took training pictures of Jeffries yesterday and notable visitors: Governor of Nevada, Corbett, Battling Nelson, Frank Gotch. To-day took Johnson, John L. Sullivan, Ketchel, Jack Gleason, Tex Rickard, arena constructions, special trains, newspaper celebrities, Naughton, Rex Beach, Jack London, Tad, Edgren. Weather splendid; hustling.

There's the story in a few words. The picture men, you see, are on the ground and getting a complete story of the event. Special matinees were arranged with the contestants and views of the training quarters with the principals in action were taken. All the celebrities from Governor Dickerson to the oldest inhabitant, including the corps of press representatives and other sporting men of note, were properly pictured.

There may have been fine fight pictures taken in the past that were excellent from a photographic and scenic point of view, but the picture story of the Johnson-Jeffries fight will be the greatest and most complete news picture ever made, if favorable conditions continue.

For the interesting details we reprint this interesting story from the New York Sun:

Gov. E. S. Dickerson, of Nevada, James J. Jeffries, the undefeated champion, and the moving picture men all worked in harmony this afternoon to make a gladsome Reno holiday. The Governor's part was a quiescent though honorable one, but Mr. Jeffries and the moving picture men worked hard to please Reno and incidentally every city in the land.

It all began yesterday, when after Gov. Dickerson had been piloted to Jeffries' camp at Moana Springs by Promoter Rickard, Jeffries had refused to give an exhibition of his art. His plea had been a stomach ache. Then late last night after Sam Berger, Jeffries' astute manager, had heard all about the eclat that had attended the Governor's reception at Johnson's camp in the afternoon, there was a conference between Mr. Berger and other members of Jeffries' training squad.

As a result of this conference James J. Corbett was appointed ambassador carrying plenary powers, and Mr. Corbett came to Reno a short time after midnight looking for the Governor. Corbett found the Governor and Mr. Rickard in the back room of a quiet cafe. What conversation passed the world will never know, but early this morning Rickard announced that at 4 o'clock this afternoon the Governor would again visit Jeffries' camp and this time his expectations would surely be fulfilled.

This word passed around Reno more quickly than the announcement of the arrival of a New York divorcee. Before 3 o'clock there were fifty automobiles parked in front of the Moana Springs training quarters and every car running on a fifteen minute schedule from Reno carried passengers hanging on to its tailboard. The privileged ones, sporting experts, ex-champions, dopesters, wine agents and plain reporters filed through the front gate leading to the training quarters and took up their positions on the grass plot in a semicircle about the large armchair in which the unvanquished champion always seats himself on these sunny afternoons. Jeffries, however, was preparing for the ordeal alone in his chamber within the training quarters.

The vulgar herd, having no privilege and coming only to pay their meed of worship, scattered among the currant bushes, fell into the creek and in other ways engaged themselves until a shout brought them hurrying to the restraining fence separating them from the sacred grass plot. It was a false alarm—only the correspondents and the ex-champions posing before the moving picture machine in easy and familiar attitudes. Sam Berger said that the film ought to be labelled "Thanksgiving Day at Bloomingdale Asylum."

Then about 4 o'clock came the anticipated moment. Rickard's big touring car whirled up the road from Reno at a forty-mile clip and paused directly in front of the "no admittance" sign before the ex-champion's gate.

In the car with Mr. Rickard were Gov. Dickerson, Capt. Cox, of the State police, and a flying squad of reporters.

The crowd surged to the fence. The three moving picture men behind the carefully levelled muzzles of their machines each put a nervous hand on the crank. A light battery of newspaper photographers crouched expectantly in the foreground. Sam Berger stalked into the front door of the training quarters and called our raucously, "Oh, Jeff, he's here."

There was a moment's pause and then the 225 pounds of fighting man appeared on the porch directly under a champagne sign which some agent had had the forethought to hang under the horseshoe above the door. Instantly the cranks of the moving picture machines began to twitter, the shutters of the camera squad snapped spitefully and everybody drew a long breath.

Rickard meanwhile had descended from the automobile and accompanied by the Governor and Capt. Cox he advanced through the rows of sweet William flanking the wooden sidewalk and leading directly to the pride of the white race. With an elaborate gesture Rickard introduced Jeffries to the Governor, although the same ceremony had been performed yesterday with not a single camera present. The Governor shook hands with Jeffries and said something which the nearest listeners did not catch. The undefeated champion chewed gum vigorously and clincked six silver dollars together in the palm of his left hand.

After that Rickard took the Governor by the elbow and Jeffries by the suspenders and led them both directly into the raking fire of the vitagraph machines. All the select ex-champions, sporting specialists and correspondents, seeing that the cranks of the machines were still turning, fell into line and gravely marched by these recording agents of history.

After that Jeffries dug for the house and there was a mad scramble for the dancing platform behind the house, upon which it was expected that he would perform for the Governor.

There must have been 300 people, half of them were women. All of the local divorce colony were out in force. Some of them manicured their hands with the cute little knives the wine agents had given them while they were waiting for the real show to commence.

After everybody had been seated or had taken his place standing three deep about the dancing platform, Rickard and the Governor came out of the kitchen door of the training quarters and ascended the platform. There was a respectful demonstration for the Governor and a second and really enthusiastic outburst of applause when Farmer Burns came out and with great dignity laid several pairs of boxing gloves and a punching bag in the middle of the ring.

Battling Nelson was not overlooked when he swaggered through the crowd and placed himself and his cauliflower ear under the shade of a cottonwood tree.

Farmer Burns sensing the fitness of things, hurried into the house and brought out a large rocking chair for the Governor. It was not Jeffries' rocking chair, but one almost as good.

Then appeared Mr. Choyinski clad in the white tights and naked above the waist. His costume led the crowd to believe that he was going to box with Jeffries. This assumption was speedily verified because in a few minutes the ex-champion came through the kitchen door. He was appropriately clad in purple trunks.

The moving picture machines had been disposed in two back windows of the training quarters. The minute that Jeffries appeared the vigilant Mr. Berger held up his hand as a signal and what happened after that even Keokuk, Ia., will know in time.

First Jeffries did a little rope jumping exhibition, then he boxed with Choynski, Jack Jeffries and Berger. A bag punching set-to closed the exhibition and relieved the ex-champion from his arduous duties entailed by the contracts with the moving picture company.

LUBIN NOTES.

The Highbinders is a Lubin release out of the ordinary, dealing as it does with Chinatown and its hatchet men. It forms a part of the release for July 11 and is one of the most spirited pictures shown lately. In spite of the title it is not one of those films that simply drip gore but is carefully handled to offer dramatic interest without repellant suggestion. One of the hatchet men of a powerful tong plots the destruction of the mission minister who has discovered him in an attempted murder, but the plans are frustrated by a brave little teacher in the mission who gives the minister warning and brings the police to his aid. The story will be released on the reel with a Lubin comedy—The Almighty Dollar.

The Adopted Daughter is the release for July 14. It is a story of New Mexico planned along unusual lines and is as notable for its photography.

The novel water curtain has been put in operation at the new Lubin studio and the rapid evaporation of the film of water flowing over the glass keeps the studio building wonderfully cool these warm days. It is something new in principle and only one of the many new devices planned for this perfect plant designed to either aid the production of the best work or conduce to the comfort of the operatives.

The star scenario read last week by the editorial department of the Lubin company began the action on earth, removed the principal characters to Heaven, took the hero to the inferno and then back to earth where his angel sweetheart was permitted to join him. This beats the minister who wanted pictures of Hell made to fit phonographic records of the cries of the damned.

Several important additions to the Lubin Stock Company were made the past week, many of the players being well known to the average theatre goer.

Other important engagements are now in process of negotiation and some splendid plays are being plotted for the new company. All of the old favorites have been retained, the company being augmented to provide players for another director.

The stress laid upon the educational value of motion pictures is having one odd effect in that every one astride a hobby canters it into the scenario departments of the various concerns. In the past month the Lubin company has been asked to promote a score of schemes from the suffragette movement and Fresh Air Funds to a proposition to sell to a Western City several hundred acres of arid land to be made into a park. The latter scheme was well disguised but editors have learned to be suspicious.

CRISWELL SELLS LYRIC THEATRE, BATAVIA.

Robert W. Crisswell, of Batavia, N. Y., has sold the Lyric motion picture theatre on Main street to Elmer Niendorf. Mr. Criswell came to Batavia about a year ago and purchased the Lyric Opera House from Callihan & Webster. During the time he ran the house the people of Batavia enjoyed the best motion pictures on the market.

Mr. Niendorf is well known and popular; he has a large following of personal friends who will help him keep the house up to the reputation it enjoyed under the former management. It is expected that the new manager will make a number of improvements before the winter season opens.

By James S. McQuade

ON Saturday, June 25th, the Theatre Film Service Company of Chicago was sold to the General Film Company, by F. C. Aiken, its President. The business will be conducted at the same address, without material change, the position of manager having been offered to Mr. Aiken, and accepted by him.

The business of the Chicago rental office of the Kleine Optical Company will be transferred to the offices of the General Film Company, under the management of Mr. Aiken, the two being consolidated into one exchange. The working forces of the two exchanges will be retained under the new management.

On being asked for his views on the change in his affairs, Mr. Aiken said:

"I wish to have it distinctly understood that my action in this matter has been purely voluntary, and that the proposition made me by the General Film Co. was absoluetly satisfactory and fair; also that no pressure of any kind was brought to bear on me to sell my exchange.

"I have been wrapped up in the film business for quite a number of years, and have always been thoroughly confident in its future. I have devoted the greatest possible attention to the conduct of my business on a sound, systematic basis, and have been satisfied with small profits in the formative stage, owing to my implicit faith in the future outcome. Bearing all this in mind, and also the fact that I have chosen this business as my life work, and fully believing that the General Film Co.'s plan will contribute, as no other policy could, to the uplifting and preservation of the film industry, I decided to make the transfer.

"I am confident that the exhibitor will be better off than ever before under the new policy. In the first place, all will be treated alike; there will be no favorite. Again, bookings can be arranged more satisfactorily, and the frequent clashes between competing exhibitors in the same neighborhood avoided, which, in itself, means better box office results.

"I have already confirmed these opinions by interviews with quite a number of exhibitors, who are aware of the change in my interests. Without a single exception, these exhibitors have expressed their satisfaction with the new order of things.

"It will naturally take some time before I can arrange to have the business of the Chicago branch of the K. O. Co. and my former business operated under one roof; but, when plans are completed and carried into effect, everything will be in the best possible working order, and that portion of the General Film Co.'s business placed in my charge will be in condition to meet the requirements of every exhibitor, large and small."

Great satisfaction has been voiced in Chicago film circles, so far as I have sounded opinion, over the appointment of Mr. Aiken to his new position. His splendid business qualities, conservative methods and pleasing personality have won for him a staunch following in licensed circles here and throughout the Middle West; and, if his continued success is to be measured by present good will, the General Film Co. has good reason to be congratulated on the selection made. And there is good reason for congratulation without any such proviso.

A feature of the General Film Co.'s policy, which should be particularly borne in mind, is that the company will not engage in securing, or in building theatres. This is no vague statement, but a fixed and inviolate rule, carefully provided for by a clause in the company's charter. With this guarantee, and the stimulus that the company's policy is bound to give the exhibiting end of the film industry, the future should show a healthier condition of business than has been yet experienced.

A Really Mammoth Production.

The Selig producing and camera forces were happy in the selection of a site for the scene of the great massacre in the desolate wastes of Sahara, a realistic and sensational conflict that will be vividly carried to the minds of all who see it pictured in the film. The following article from the Gary "Tribune" well describes the preparations made for the pictures, and it also gives an inkling of the great number of men, horses and camels used in the production:

Dune Park, the peaceful village among the highest dunes on the shores of Lake Michigan, at daylight to-morrow will be a battlefield where 500 Bedouins, mounted on Arabian steeds, will charge upon a camel train with awful carnage.

The battle is well planned. The members of the caravan know they are going to be assassinated and yet they do not ask for reinforcements; neither does the National Guard of Indiana rise to repel the warlike Bedouins that will slay the merchants' caravan.

TO-DAY THEY SLEEP TOGETHER.

This afternoon the Bedouins and the merchants, who will be slain, are sleeping side by side on blankets in Gormley's livery stable and the camels munch hay from the mangers. The time for the slaughter is not yet ripe.

Before daylight to-morrow morning 300 horses, with savage Bedouin soldiers, three camels and a wagon train loaded with pyramids, palm trees and Oriental costumes, will be led by Mr. Gormley to the most isolated spot near Dune Park. The pyramids will be artistically set about in convenient places, the soldiers will don their uniforms and the carnage will begin.

THE SAHARA DESERT REPRODUCED.

In short, Dune Park is to be made the setting for a Sahara desert scene and the battle will be duly recorded by a moving picture camera and one of the most elaborate scenes produced will be produced for the thousands of patrons of moving picture shows.

The moving picture company's equipment arrived this morning and the manager of the company oloked up T. J. Gormley, with whom he was formerly acquainted in Chicago. Three camels and ten men came out in the first detachment and three hundred horses will arrive late this evening, with as many soldiers. Then there will be all kinds of stage settings and everything needed to produce the play, the scene of which is laid in the Sahara desert.

BATTLE TO RAGE SEVERAL HOURS.

The play includes a caravan attacked by a savage band of Bedouins and a bloodless battle will rage for several hours, while the man at the moving picture camera makes a film of the scene.

Dune Park was selected as the most favorable place in the country for securing the picture. The wide stretch of barren sand, the scanty growth of bushes around the swamps and, in fact, the entire surroundings are as nearly like the desert as could be found. The natural condition of the country, with a few "props," can be transformed into a scene that will cause thousands who see the film at the show to gasp as the peaceful caravan is set upon by the savage natives and mercilessly slaughtered.

Johnson-Jeffries Pictures Clinched.

It was not ascertained definitely here until to-day (Wednesday, June 29), that complete arrangements had been made whereby the associated licensed manufacturers have secured the exchange right to make and handle the Johnson-Jeffries fight pictures. The delay in the final arrangement has been due to Johnson's getting mixed up with other bidders in the disposal of his interest, but the difficulty has been surmounted and the pictures will be controlled absolutely by the licensed manufacturers.

Thorough preparations have been made by the associated licensed manufacturers for taking the negatives of the big fight. At the present writing there are on the way to Reno three camera squads, each comprised of three or four experts, with three cameras to each squad. One is sent out by the Selig Polyscope Co., another by the Essanay Film Manufacturing Co., and another by the Vitagraph Co. of New York.

Enough negative film has been taken along to make six negatives of a fight of forty-five rounds, allowing three minutes to each round and one minute intervals. Three complete negatives, at least, will be made of the contest; and, as the camera men from the different factories will vie with one another in their efforts to get the best possible pictures, it is a safe conclusion to draw that the Johnson-Jeffries fight pictures will surpass anything of this type ever turned out.

J. Stuart Blackton, secretary of the Vitagraph Co., who stopped over in Chicago, Monday, June 27, on his way to Reno, is in charge of the Vitagraph force. John Rock, western representative of the Vitagraph Co., joined the party here, and was one of the best pleased men I have seen in a long time over the prospect of seeing the big battle.

Unfriendly to Moving Pictures.

I had a chat recently with my old friend, H. B. Emery, of Martin & Emery, owners and managers of "The Red Mill" and "Parsifal," both of which were on the road last season. Mr. Emery was in charge of "The Red Mill," which played throughout the country, the greater part of the season being spent in the region west of the Alleghanies, including the entire Pacific slope.

"The Red Mill" is a first-class musical comedy, playing to $2 admissions, and that the large company required for its production never missed pay-day once, during a season that closed only a fortnight ago, is saying a great deal for its drawing powers. This was a record for what is considered one of the most disastrous seasons seen in many a year; but, as a money-maker for the owners even so strong a piece as "The Red Mill" failed to roll up satisfactory profits.

Mr. Emery is one of the best known actor-managers in the country, not that he has appeared on the stage for many moons; but few managers in the country are more capable judges of the value of an attraction or of the merits of an actor. A keen observer, nothing in the amusement world escapes his attention; and knowing that he had traveled over a wide stretch of country during his nine months' tour, I sounded him on the moving picture, as it affected the legitimate traveling show.

Now it must be borne in mind that Mr. Emery is a thorough thespian, and one that will never lower the flag of the legitimate to any other form of amusement. If legitimate shows are not doing well, Mr. Emery holds that it is not due to any extraneous influence, but rather to the defects within the ranks of the legitimate. Therefore, while acknowledging that legitimate offerings last season met with but indifferent success, and that moving picture theatres were well patronized, Mr. Emery claims that the defection shown in the patronage of legitimate houses is not due to the competition of pictures, but to the failure of legitimate enterprises to give amusement seekers what they want.

Along the same line of reasoning Mr. Emery claims that because picture theatres have been prosperous, while legitimate houses have not, is no evidence that moving pictures would have

Reverent Rendition of "The Lord's Prayer," by Gaumont

By James S. McQuade.

IN these days when moving pictures are made the target of an unfriendly press and of splenetic, unthinking persons in brief authority, it is particularly timely that there should appear a film subject which is powerful enough to stir all that is reverent in us to the greatest depths.

I know of no other subject throughout the whole range of human experience and knowledge that can touch the heart strings and the chords of memory with such wondrous melody as this; none other that levels the high and deep places in life and makes the rugged pathway as does this, and no other that gives the heart the throb of reawakened youth and enables us to overlap the crowded years that separate us from happy childhood and the tender associations of long ago.

The Lord's Prayer! The first lisping words taught at mother's knee and the last trembling utterance of second childhood. The simple declaration that makes the whole world kin and the matchless epitome of rules governing right living and duty.

The film is by Gaumont. I viewed it in the George Kleine projecting room the other day, and requested that it be run the second time, so that I might better judge of its quality and beauty. I can safely say that no one who sees this noble subject will be satisfied with one or even two views. There is so much conveyed by the pictures that each requirs careful study in order to catch the full swing.

The first thought that strikes one on hearing of the subject is: how will the producer be able to represent the petitions of this noble prayer in pictures? When viewing the pictures, the mind is hard at work endeavoring to judge as to whether or not the scenes are artistic and worthy conceptions of the various petitions. Then follows the consideration of the posing and action of the figures in the scenes, the costumes and scenic environment, and the photographic quality of all.

I had never before seen the Lord's Prayer illustrated; and, naturally, expecting that Tissot, in his illuminated illustrations of the "Life of Our Lord," as told in the Gospels, would have devoted his genius to such an effort, I eagerly referred to his noble work in the hope of finding a standard by which to judge of the Gaumont conceptions. I was disappointed, as the only illustration he gives is that showing the Master in the act of repeating the prayer to His dicíples. Being not sufficiently familiar with artistic efforts made in this field, I am unable to say whether the Gaumont producer conceived the scenes in this subject, or whether he has copied from the work of another; but, after all, that is immaterial, so far as the effect of the pictures on the spectator is concerned—it being granted, of course, that the scenes are noble and worthy.

"HALLOWED BE THY NAME."

"THY KINGDOM COME."
From Gaumont's subject, "The Lord's Prayer."

Seven scenes are employed in the Gaumont film to convey in a pictorial sense, the meaning of the Lord's Prayer. The first scene is devoted to the opening words which acknowledge the fatherhood of God. Here we have a father, mother and child on a journey. They are poor wayfarers, and wearied with travel the mother and child kneel in prayer for succor and strength, while the father prays with reverent mien in a standing posture. Strengthened in soul, their bodies are refreshed and they go on their way with courage. The costumes are oriental.

"Hallowed be thy name" is represented by a beautiful lake scene, set in the midst of mountains, and evidently intended for the sea of Galilee. A small sailing vessel, propelled on this occasion by oarsmen, is passing from shore to shore. Aboard are the Apostles in prayerful attitude, evidently setting out on their great mission to "preach the gospel to every creature." This is an inspiring scene.

"Thy Kingdom Come," as depicted, shows early Christians bound and in the hands of brutal soldiers. It is a Roman scene. A centurion enters, followed by a lady of patrician beauty, at whose request the bonds of the prisoners are loosed and the cruel guards dismissed. Thanksgiving and joy is seen on every countenance as the Kingdom of Peace is established.

The fourth scene is an affecting picture showing a mother holding vigil over the dead body of her only son. The bitterness of bereavement finally passes, and her face glows with holy resignation as she whispers "Thy will be done."

The fifth scene shows the court yard of a Roman mansion, in which hungry people wait for bread. All are humble, with the exception of a muscular bravo, who carries murderous weapons always ready to his hand. A lady of the household appears with a servant to administer food and alms. As she is engaged in her work of mercy, the burly outlaw attempts to stab her in the back. He is seized by the others and disarmed. Greatly to his surprise and wonder, which are admirably reflected on his face, he, too, is given bread and is permitted to go unmolested. It is needless to state that this scene illustrates the petition, "Give us this day our daily bread."

"Lead us not into temptation" is pictured in a scene showing the victory of a young man over sensual passions. The dissolving scenes in this picture, showing the approach and retreat of three beautiful maidens, merit the highest praise for artistic and photographic work.

The last scene, and easily the most symbolic and vivid of the seven, illustrates the petition, "Deliver us from Evil." Here is seen a beautiful girl engaged in prayer, every passing emotion being reflected on her sensitive and mobile face. Gradually a hideous face and a shadowy form assume outline behind her. The grossly limned face is that of "Evil," and she presses her long, claw-like fingers on the temples of the kneeling girl. The suppliant's face shows horror at first; but soon, after fervent prayer, it grows saintly peaceful and the diabolical visage of the hag fades away. This dissolving view is another masterpiece.

The photography of this film will bear the strictest cricitism. The light and shade effects are as delicately wrought as if in water colors, and a warm softness prevails throughout. The reel is about one-half length and will be released some time in July.

THE PATHE PROFESSIONAL IN NAVY.

Pathe Freres continue to receive orders for the Pathe Professional Model from the Government and the various U. S. battleships. They a few days ago supplied a complete outfit to the Department of the Interior for Government use, and last week installed a complete outfit on the U. S. Battleship Rhode Island, this is the fifth battleship to purchase a Pathe Professional Model during the last few months. In addition to the steady and clear picture this projector gives, the sailors find that one of its great advantages is the fact that their experts report that there is little danger of the machine getting out of order when on a cruise, as the mechanism is built so very accurately and is extremely strong. It is easy to see what a strong reason this must be when a battleship is away sometimes two or three years, and may be for a prolonged time several thousand miles from port.

CHURCH WILL RUN PICTURES.

"I believe that if the churches want to maintain their attendance they must offer inducements that will get people to the services," said the Rev. H. A. Jump, pastor of the South Congregational Church, New Britain, Conn., July 26, "and I propose to make South Church a popular place this summer."

To this end the pastor will have his Sunday evening sermons illustrated with motion pictures, beginning July 3.

George M. Landers, former Mayor of the city, has offered to give a picture machine and the Rev. Mr. Jump will furnish the talk that goes with it.

He says it is difficult to get the young people out in summer unless there is an unusual attraction and he feels certain that a Sunday night motion picture show will do it.

There is talk among amusement managers who have been barred from showing pictures on Sundays to get an injunction. They think a church should not be allowed to do what they are not permitted to do.

When Mr. Landers was Mayor he favored Sunday night shows and said it was a good thing to keep people off the streets, so he is heartily in accord with Dr. Jump's plans.

PICTURES AND INSURANCE RATES.

The Chicago board of underwriters has issued a new schedule of charges for motion picture machines and vaudeville performances. This combination adds $1 to the building rate and on contents 50 per cent. over the building rate. If the booths containing the picture machines are unapproved 25 cents additional is imposed and a credit of the same is taken off if the floor is of concrete and on the ground. New rates have also been made on amusement halls. Scenery on canvas is prohibited. If the seating is removable for dancing, etc., the occupancy charge will be 25 cents and the contents charge 60 per cent. over the building rate. If the hall it fitted up with fixed seats the occupancy charge is 50 cents and the contents 60 per cent. over the building rate.

CORPORAL TRUMAN'S STORY

A Kalem Masterpiece

IT has been noted in these columns, and has also been reported by exhibitors, that the Kalem Company of picture players has been putting a few good ones over lately. Kalem started in to give the public high-class story pictures some time before the public was quite ready for that sort of thing; but the producers seemed to think they were on the right trail and kept on turning out the story pictures. Sometimes it was an Indian story, sometimes a war story and sometimes it would be an interpretation of a classic. In photography the product was better than the average by a good number of points; in the selection of the settings and the composition of scenes the work was artistic—every scene was a picture, but it was not popular with the audiences which just then wanted slap-stick comedy and chases.

KALEM SUBJECT, "CORPORAL TRUMAN'S STORY"—RECEIVING ORDERS.

But Kalem persevered and, as public taste improved its pictures gained in vogue, until today it has a reasonable following gained by merit.

It is not that Kalem pictures have always been as good and consistent as they are to-day.

In common with all picture makers the Kalem players have profited by experience; have corrected many of the early errors and are now doing work that will not suffer by comparison.

The Film Index has mentioned quite recently several samples of Kalem work which was away above the average in both story and interpretation. The subject of this comment "Corporal Truman's Story," is one that is bound to attract attention because it is well done technically and because it pictures a phase of life that always appeals to the patriotic instinct, and also, because it is a story clearly told.

"Corporal Truman's Story" is really a Memorial Day subject delayed; but it will be equally good for the Fourth of July season. Corporal Truman is one of that fast diminishing band of Civil War veterans—one of the "thin blue line," that grows pitifully more thin as each succeeding Memorial Day rolls around. It is on that day that he goes out to lay a wreath on the graves of those comrades who have answered the last call. To give the picture the touch of realism the actual celebration of the day as it occurred in the village of Greenwich, Conn., not so long ago forms the opening scenes.

We see Corporal Truman leave his house and join the parade with his comrades. His left coatsleeve is empty and pinned up; a silent witness to his deed of valor. Following the veterans on their march to the village cemetery are the village fire company and the school children, all led by the local drum corps with a stalwart drum major under an enormous chapean swinging his baton. The veterans are all real and not "make believe" except "Corporal Truman" and a few other Kalem players.

After the ceremonies at the cemetery the old warriors attend the usual "Camp Fire" as the banquet following the day's services is termed. Here "Corporal Truman" is induced to relate the story of the loss of his arm. As he looks back to the days of '61 the scene dissolves into those picturing the incidents of the Corporal's story.

Evidently the Corporal commenced his story something like this: "We were in Sherman's advance, marching through Georgia, and we ran into a company of 'Jonnies' and drove them back after a hard fight." Now those who have seen Kalem war pictures know that the Kalem players have this bit of picture business reduced to a science, and the hand to hand skirmish they put up in this picture looks painfully like the real thing.

After the skirmish the story teller takes you to camp and introduces you to a scene in the General's tent, where he is called and ordered to act the spy to obtain the enemy's plans. He leaves his uniform in the tent and slips out of camp completing his disguise of an old black laundress at a secluded spot in the woods where he blackens his face, using a pool of water as a mirror. Having completed his disguise he goes boldly to the enemy's camp and right into the tent of the commanding officer. While getting the soiled linen he grabs some papers from a table in the tent and conceals them about his person.

Departing with the bundle of clothes the spy makes his way unmolested out of the camp and, when he thinks himself safe, drops his disguise. Suddenly he takes alarm and dives into the underbrush. Soon the cause of alarm appears in the form of "Jonnies" in pursuit. The spy is discovered and a running fight takes place in which he lays out two of his pursuers and gets away with a bullet in his arm, finally climbing into a tree until his remaining pursuers pass by. After this encounter he drags himself to camp and is brought exhausted to the officers' tent to deliver the papers.

This scene is well worked up and is very real. Afterward the surgeon takes off his arm. The operation is not in the picture, but the next view we get of the hero shows him with one sleeve pinned up as the commanding officer pins a badge for bravery on his coat.

Here the Corporal's story ends for the scene dissolves back to the banquet hall where the assembled veterans are vigorously applauding the story-teller. The picture ends with all rising and drinking a toast to the flag. It is a clever arrangement of a simple story, emphasized with beautiful photography throughout and will enhance the popularity of Kalem.

MAYOR STICKS TO HOME MANAGERS.

An attempt to establish an out of door motion picture show was nipped, June 22 by Mayor N. P. Avery, of Holyoke, Mass., in response to the strong protests of Commissioner A. M. Potvin of the board of public works and other prominent Main street business men.

A. J. Rainault, a proprietor of amusement places, who operates in the eastern part of the state, made application for a license to run a moving picture place during the summer. He admitted that as soon as the cold weather comes he would leave town.

The plan proposed by Rainault was to rent a vacant lot in Spring street and to fence it.

The protesting citizens took the ground that it would not be fair to the local men who own and operate all the year around motion picture places, nor would it be fair to the other local business men to let a stranger come in for a short time and carry a lot of Holyoke money away with him.

Mayor Avery's refusal to grant the license put an end to the matter.

KALEM'S CHICAGO REPRESENTATIVE.

W. Fay Lynch, A Man of Affairs and Broad Business Training.—A Pen Picture.

We have all noted with pleasure the fact that men of substance have been attracted to the ranks of the licensed motion picture industry, crowding out carnival and ballyhoo men, who ever restless for new worlds to conquer, have either sought other fields or gone over to the Independents in a body.

Kalem's representative is one of the substantial kind. Born and raised in the city of Lowell, Ind., when he graduated from college he was taken into his father's general store as a clerk. Later on he acquired the interests of both his father and elder brother in the store and for several years ran the business with great success, in time doubling and quadrupling the business.

After a few years as sole owner of the Lowell store, he sought a broader field, eventually joining his brother and opening in Buenos Ayres, Argentine Republic, South America, the largest department store in that thriving city. This enterprise he and his brother, Mr. E. R. Lynch, ran for several years with excellent results. That innate love of home induced them to sell out their South American store and return to God's country where they embarked in the manufacture of paint, locating their factory in the city of Chicago. Recently, they sold this business, although they still own the valuable factory property.

Mr. Lynch is the owner of several valuable farms in Indiana and to-day personally operates a magnificent 600-acre farm property adjoining his native city, Lowell. Every Saturday afternoon Mr. Lynch migrates to his farm for a Sunday visit, returning to his duties in Chicago Monday morning.

Mr. Lynch, since placed in charge of the Kalem interests in Chicago, has conducted the business to the mutual satisfaction of the Kalem Co. and the trade generally. The exchanges all have a good word for the genial Kalem representative.

Motion pictures are evidently the real thing at the popular Maine summer resorts these hot, sultry days. After a sail in the morning and a good swim in the afternoon, the guests of the hotels and cottages are willing to spend a couple of hours at night in the many first-class motion picture theatres that are located along the board walk and principal streets of the town.

Managers are giving the best class of pictures obtainable, and often engage well known singers to sing the popular songs. These seem to take well with the summer boy and girl, for if the air is light and tuneful and easy to catch on to, it doesn't take long before the whole audience is singing the song, joyfully and merrily.

At Lincoln, Me., one of the new popular resorts, the Crescent theatre management reports of doing an excellent business. The Lincoln Chronicle gives the following regarding the popularity of the pictures:

"It is the popular thing these evenings to take in the moving pictures at Crescent theatre. The room is comfortable, the pictures clean and up-to-date, the management courteous and obliging and endeavoring to give the public a big lot of enjoyment for a dime. This company gives what is not given in the cities and larger places an entire change of program each night, so that the public is sure of a new entertainment every time. They are surely to be congratulated on their enterprise, and deserve the liberal patronage they are receiving."

G. P. HAMILTON

Superintendent Essanay Film Manufacturing Co.

G. P. HAMILTON, superintendent of the Essanay Film Manufacturing Co., hails from the Granite State, being born in 1863, on Chebeague island, in Casco bay, off Portland, Me. The son of a sea captain, and passing his early days amid the rugged scenery of the Northeastern coast line, it would be only natural to expect that he should ultimately find an occupation that would keep him in close touch with Nature and its workings. But it was a long and strenuous stretch from the little farm on Chebeague island until Mr. Hamilton was captured by the magic of the moving picture.

G. P. HAMILTON

Still of tender years, when his father died, young Hamilton received a good public school education and graduated from the Shaw Business College of Portland, Me., while still well within his teens. Then he left the scenes of his boyhood and launched into the big world to make his fortune. Visiting a sister in Brooklyn, L. I., he set about finding something to do. But the task was a hard one, and the first work that could be secured was that of deck hand on one of the passenger vessels of the Seabeach R. R. & S. S. line, which plied between Whitehall street, New York City, and Bay Ridge, Brooklyn.

Brawn, grit and brains carried Mr. Hamilton through four years of varying service, and many an impromptu fistic scrimmage with his fellow employes was engaged in during that time, his good nature and the ability to protect his rights being so generally acknowledged that, at the expiration of the time mentioned, he was appointed superintendent of the Bay Ridge end of the Steamship line.

For three years he had held that position, when an employe of the company chanced to speak of an entertainment witnessed by him at the home of a Dr. Jenkins, then health officer of the port of New York. As this employe described it, "one could look at a screen and see people moving, as a man turned the handle of a queer looking machine." The machine was the Eidoloscope, and Dr. Jenkins was the principal stockholder of the Eidoloscope Company.

Mr. Hamilton was intensely interested in the new machine and in the pictures it projected, and became so enthusiastic in mastering its mechanism and working that Dr. Jenkins proposed that he should learn the operation of the machine thoroughly and become an operator. And so the old moorings at Bay Ridge were slipped, and young Hamilton joined the ranks of those known as "Eidolons."

The projecting room of the Eidoloscope Co. was first situated in a basement on Lower Broadway, near Whitehall street, and was afterwards transferred to the old St. James Hotel, on Broadway. For two years Mr. Hamilton traveled all over the country as an expert operator and demonstrator of the Eidoloscope Co. Then he joined the forces of the Biograph Co., in the same capacity, and remained with that firm for five years.

Desiring to settle farther west, Mr. Hamilton came to Chicago and secured a position with the George K. Spoor & Co., which at that time was engaged in establishing the kinodrome service. For four years he was principally employed in this branch of the business, traveling most of the time. Near the close of that period he was out on the road with a picture and vaudeville act, in which Mr. Spoor and he were interested, when he received a letter from the former asking him to close the act and come on to Chicago as he had other things in view that required Mr. Hamilton's services.

This other thing in view was none other than the founding of the Essanay Film Mfg. Co., and the first plant, small and unpretentious, was established, under Mr. Hamilton's supervision, at 501 Wells street (old number). There Mr. Hamilton had entire charge of the photographic end; and for nearly two years, in those days of small beginnings, his was the hand that guided the camera for every Essanay picture turned out. In addition to photographic responsibilities at the old plant, Mr. Hamilton discharged the duties of superintendent; and, when the new plant was ready for occupancy, he retained the latter position, having in charge the entire force of employes, who sometimes number as many as 150.

Familiar with every department of the producing end of the motion picture industry, Mr. Hamilton, if need calls for it, can jump in and lend intelligent assistance at any moment. Skilled in the knowledge of men and quick to judge of their abilities, he seldom makes a mistake of judgment; the result being that the Essanay Company has one of the best balanced and most harmonious working forces to be found in the film factory of any firm in the country.

OMAHA BARS MOTORS.

According to a report made recently by City Electrician Michelesen and Assistant Fire Chief Simpson, of Omaha, Neb., all the motion picture houses in that city were in first class condition, so far as safety is concerned. The theatres were also found to be clean and sanitary, giving the patrons good wholesome air during performances.

The only thing the officials objected to was the use of motors in the operating of machines, and that in the future all machines must be operated by hand.

GLEN FOREST PARK OPEN.

The theatre at Glen Forest park, Lawrence, Mass., opened, June 27. For the first week and the following Sunday there were free moving pictures and illustrated songs every evening. Arrangements have been made to secure some of the most modern and up-to-date of films, which will be changed twice during the week. The management of the park has gone to a great deal of expense this year in the matter of securing some of the finest special attractions that can be found in the country. These will appear during the season for a week each and will give exhibitions that are entirely free.

WALDEN TO HAVE NEW PICTURE THEATRE.

Negotiations are said to be pending for the conversion of the old Odd Fellows building in Central square into a moving picture house and the owner, Fred Green of Maplewood, is said to be one of the promotors. Mr. Green will not discuss his plans at this time. It is said that seats will be provided for 700 and that moving pictures and vaudeville will be offered, the place to be ready for occupancy in the fall.

"GO WEST, YOUNG WOMAN, GO WEST."—Mrs. Kelly runs a boarding house in the western foothills, having principally as her clientele the cow-punchers that work thereabouts. She meets with no end of trouble in securing a suitable cook that is matrimonial-proof, as the moment a fair queen of the pot and pan arrives she is besieged by the boarders, and invariably Cupid gets his work in. Finally Mrs. Kelly, growing desperate, sends to the city for a Chinese cook. This enrages the boarders, and when the cook arrives he is made to do a few hurried stunts to the tune of a six-shooter, and he likewise exits almost as gracefully as he entered.

About this time an out-and-out city girl writes she would accept the place, loudly denouncing Cupid and its darts. She arrives; the enemy reconnoiters the situation; she meets their proposals with scorn and derision, drives them away. But on second thought she decides Big Bill Parsons is her affinity, and again the trouble is rampant. Then, lo he came—a busted actor. "Can you cook?" says Mrs. Kelly. "Sure," says he. "Get busy," says Mrs. Kelly. He did—trouble brewing on every hand. To save the day Mrs. Kelly marries her new cook.

"THE WAY OF THE RED MAN."—An Indian farmer and his wife protect and secrete a gambler who has injured a cowboy in a fight over a game of cards. The gambler repays the Indian by stealing the affections of his wife, a beautiful Indian woman of eighteen. Great is the dismay of the Indian on finding his wife in the arms of the white man whom he has befriended. His first thought is to kill the destroyer of his home; but he decides to give the squaw to the gambler and when she attempts to take her infant the Indian interposes. "You take the squaw; the child stays with me."

Five years later we see the effects of the union between the gambler and the squaw. He has become a confirmd drunkard and the squaw, through abuse, neglect and hardship, is dying. The Indian learns of this and his manner of vengeance is unique and gives this picture story its name, "The Red Man's Way."

The story is one of unusual interest and holds one in suspense throughout.

"A BOARDING SCHOOL ROMANCE."—Disregarding the rules of the seminary, the hero of our play penetrates the sacred precinct of the campus to meet his student sweetheart. While they are engaged in innocent courtship, the old maid principal indignantly drives the young man from the place and sends the young girl indoors. She seeks her schoolmates, tells them with tears in her eyes of the enforcement of the school discipline and the principal's interference with her love affairs. The girls sympathize with her and all declare they will get even with their preceptress.

The longed-for opportunity occurs when the prim and precise principal meets the Latin teacher at the arbor in the garden, where they are discovered by the young girl who was reprimanded. The principal and the teacher have quite a seance of "old fool love," all of which is seen by their too keen observer, who also hears them make a date for that same evening at nine o'clock. The young heroine rushes back to her companions to tell them all about it, and they at once map out a plan to take in the evening's performance and get one on the heads of the school.

At the appointed hour the two old spooners meet. Arm in arm they go lovingly through the wooded paths, he gazing up like a "Campbell Soup Kid" into the eyes of the kittenish old flirt whose "goo-goo" manner is quite coy and natural. They think themselves alone, only one world and two people in it—"ouzy and me." Their ignorance is bliss, for they are unaware of being followed by the whole school, who are greatly pleased and entertained with this antiquated burlesque of Romeo and Juliet.

They arrive at a snug little bench, where together they seat themselves in a sweet "tete-a-tete" and fond embrace, when suddenly there is a flash and the snap of a camera, followed by a wild scamper from behind the bushes, while consternation seizes the two affectionate teachers, who do not know the cause of the excitement. The girls hurry back to their rooms and get busy developing the tell-tale snapshot of the professor and his enamorita.

The young man whom we saw in the first scene calls at the school again to see his sweetheart. The principal sees them talking together and orders the young man from the grounds. He stands immovable, and the principal calls the Latin professor to her assistance. He commands the young chap to be off, but is met with a direct refusal to make himself scarce; then he shows the professor the snapshot of himself making love to the "professoress." The professor is amazed, then sheepishly shows it to his little "daffy-down dilly," who wilts.

The professor of "amo, ami, amat" suggests a compromise by an exchange of the photograph for the privilege of a meeting between the two young sweethearts. The bargain closed, the couples are soon lost in sweet reveries of future happiness and inspiring twangs of Cupid's darts.

"BETWEEN LOVE AND HONOR."—Controlled by a passionate temper, the dissipated father dominates his motherless daughter with a tyrannical will and upon every occasion scolds and finds fault. He makes her a drudge and does not hesitate to make her assist him in his occupation as a fisherman. Trudging along with a pair of oars on her shoulder, the father leads the way to his boat and there he finds his helper, who is his daughter's lover. The young fellow greets the girl affectionately and the old man shows his disapproval in ugly mood and profane words. He then beckons to his helper to get into the boat and tells his daughter to be gone. ,

Out upon the sea, the two fishermen are now hauling their net, which come up empty. The old man is wild with rage when he finds a hole in the net, for which defect he vents his wrath upon his young assistant, who resents it and denies that it is his fault. They begin their return to shore, with the older fisherman in ugly mood. When they reach the shore he renews his abuse, and becomes so enraged he strikes the young man with a stone, felling him. His victim lays motionless upon the sands. The old tyrant concludes he has killed him; in haste to flee the spot, he drops his hat, and when he discovers his loss fears to return for it, and at the same time realizes that his hat, if found, would be incriminating evidence.

Just as the man is gazing upon the prostrate form of the object of his wrath, his daughter has come to the boat landing, and, unseen by her father, sees him strike her lover. She finds her father's hat, and with loathing is prompted not to touch it, but, her filial duty asserting itself, she places it in the bosom of her dress. Kissing her lover's face, and thinking him dead, she hastens back to her home, where she meets her brutal father, who has tried to drown his thoughts and conscience in drink.

She gives his lost hat to him, and he realizes that she must know of his crime and thinks he will kill her, but throws her from him in a frenzy and rushes from the house. In the meantime some sailors find the young lover on the coast, revive him and lift him into their boat. The father goes direct to the scene of his supposed crime and imagines he sees the form of the lover lying in the water, washed by the tide and partly covered with sand. The father goes insane and wanders over the rocky crags. A storm arises and he dies from exposure.

The daughter, with lantern in hand, starts in search of her father, whose failure to return to his home makes her anxious. She discovers her father's body while making her way over the cliffs and rocks, and, at the same time, her lover, who has been landed by the sailors at a distance from his home, is on his way to the little village, comes upon his sweetheart, who is at first startled at his sudden appearance; but when she sees his head bandaged she knows he was not killed by her father, and throws herself into his arms, and, as they look upon the dead form of her father, the young man asks her to marry him that he may be her protector and provider.

A year or two later we see them in their own cosy little home blessed with the sunshine of happiness, a pretty little baby and the loving kindness that makes them doubly blest.

"BECKET."—Thomas a Becket was born in London. In 1155 he was made Chancellor of England by Henry II. Upon the death of the Archbishop Theobald of Canterbury in 1162, at the time of this tragedy, he was elected, through King Henry's influence, to the vacant see.

THE FILM SERVICE THAT SATISFIES

GET IT FROM

GEO. K. SPOOR CO., Inc., "RENTERS of LICENSED FILM"

435 N. Clark Street, Chicago, Ill.

This exceptional film starts with a scene in the palace of King Henry II., showing Henry and Becket playing at chess. The game is won by Becket, greatly provoking the King, who becomes angry. While in the midst of this tantrum, a messenger enters and presents Henry with an announcement of the death of the Archbishop Theobald, together with the Bishop's cross. Henry is shocked, and, as he looks at the cross, half in jest and a desire to ridicule, he offers the jewel to Becket, and then places the cross with chain attached around Becket's neck, hoping it will prove a yoke to the wearer in his efforts to sustain the dignity and piety of the church, which, of course, he thinks is quite impossible for Becket to do.

In this he is mistaken. Becket feels his unworthiness, but, inspired by the holiness of the office and its great responsibility, he at once, by prayer and castigations, prepares himself for its duties, which he devoutly and reverently accepts. While at devotion in the palace of the Archbishop of Canterbury, Becket is surprised by King Henry and his courtiers, who rudely interrupt him by their cruel and coarse laughter when they see him in his priestly robes in the attitude of humility and abnegation.

Filled with the majesty and divine spirit of his office, and aroused by a righteous indignation, Becket commands Henry and his followers to mend their ways and flee the wrath of God, lest they be destroyed. With cowering glances and slinking tread they leave his presence, shamefaced and abashed. Henry is now at enmity with the clergy. The scenes which follow show the incidents which lead to the attempted assassination of Father Gerard, the King's confessor, for the denunciation of the King's paramour, Rosamond.

Henry, smarting under the opposition of the church draughts a constitution which makes it possible for the King alone to put to death without court trial any member of the clergy whom he may accuse. This sounds the death knell of Becket, against whom the King bears great enmity. The Archbishop realizes his position, and his fears are soon brought to a reality. He is pursued by the minions of the King, who proceed to the Cathedral of Canterbury and slay him while he kneels at prayer before the crozier.

The murderers carry the news to the King, apprising him of the execution of his dictate. He and his court tremble as they appreciate the enormity of their crime against the head of the church. Scarcely do they recover their nerve when retribution follows the King in the announcement that his own sons have seized the Kingdom of France; the Scots have crossed the border, and general uprisings in the midland. Crushed and half crazed, Henry falls, a tottering wreck, against the throne, while the vision of the murdered Archbishop Becket, in beatific attitude, appears before him. The King, wth conscience aflame with fear and remorse, collapses, a helpless and wretched mass, while the vision fades away.

This is the film you've been waiting for, and your patrons are looking for. Here it is; just ask fot it, and your exchange will do the rest.

"THE PURGATION."—Reformation is possible to the most hardened criminal. Many there are who have not had the opportunity of good example, and others who have had, but were indifferent. However, in any case, each must go through the epoch of purgation and suffer tests of their sincerity, the ordeal to be measured according to conditions. The young man in this Biograph story is one of the many misguided youths, who, for the want of healthy moral training, has become a thief. There is something worthy in the boy's nature, which only needed cultivating. He and his companion get into an uptown apartment house by way of the fire escape, and entering the apartment of a wealthy business man, find his daughter, while keeping vigil beside the bed of her baby sister, has fallen to sleep. The sight of the girl, a picture of purity and innocence, arouses higher thoughts in the young man, so he compels his companion to leave and seek elsewhere. Their exit awakens the girl, and she, in attending the child, notices the hot water bag needs refilling, and as it is late she goes to the elevator to have this done, when a drunken clubman passes and offers her an insult. The boy is now hiding behind the portieres covering the window, and seeing the girl's plight leaps to her rescue, hurling the offender down the stairs. The parents of the girl, hearing the scuffle, rush out, and are overwhelming in their gratitude for the young man's action. The girl herself is impressed. Her father asks that he call at his office that he may more substantially thank him. On the boy's side, it is a case of love at first sight, so when he reappears at the meeting place of the chums he bids them good-bye forever, determined to put the past behind him. Now for the test. He secures employment from the girl's father, he, of course, knowing nothing of his past, and in a short time he gains their confidence to such an extent that he becomes the fiance of the girl. Prospects are now bright, but the purgation is still to be endured, and here fate often conspires cruelly. While on a business errand, the boy meets his erstwhile companion. He tries to induce him to take a hand in a job he is to perpetrate the same night. The young man, however, is firm in his high purpose, and refuses to have anything to do with his former associate. A robbery takes place at the office of the boy's friend, and when the discovery is made next morning, the boy feels sure that his old chum was the thief. The police are informed, but the boy volunteers to try to regain the stolen property. Going to their hovel, he has by subterfuge just succeeded in getting the valuables when the detectives enter. Appearances and records are condemning, so the detective considers the boy a party to the deed and would have held him but for the confession of one of the crooks. Still, it is a sad blow to the girl and her parents, for he must acknowledge his former character. Still determined to stick to the road of righteousness, he begs the man to give him a chance to prove himself worthy of his confidence. This the father grants.

"A MIDNIGHT CUPID."—We will all insist that the tramp is the world's most odious mendicant. He is apparently an absolutely useless parasite which all are anxious to exterminate. However, here is one poor unfortunate who was the cause of a great good, for he unwittingly plays Cupid and brings felicity into a couple of tedious lives. Perry Dudley, a young man of wealth and position, is the center of attraction with the matchmaking mothers, as he is considered the season's best catch. The daughters are by no means backward in obtruding themselves to his notice. In fact, he is so annoyed and bored by this bevy of fawning females that his life becomes one of ennui. He longs for a change where people are less superficial. While fulfilling one of his social obligations his house is entered by a poor unfortunate tramp, a veritable soldier of misfortune. The poor fellow has a letter in his pocket from friends in his native village from whence he left when but a small boy. The missive asks that he return and he will be taken care of. He is inclined to go, but cannot make the trip on an empty stomach so his visit to the Dudley mansion is in quest of food. He finds no one at home, and espying a decanter of wine on the table, in lieu of food takes a drink. The wine has both an intoxicating and soporific effect, and when Perry returns he finds his nocturnal visitor on the floor in a profound bacchanalian slumber. As he lifts him to a chair, Perry sees the letter, which he reads. What a chance. He decides at once to disguise himself and go to the country in the tramp's place, assuming that no one would recognize the deception. Placing a ten-dollar bill in the tramp's pocket instead of the letter, he instructs his valet and butler to take the sleeping tramp out and lay him on a bench in the park. Off Perry goes to present himself as the long lost native, and has little trouble in convincing the old farmer that he is the personage to whom the letter is addressed. Of course, he is welcomed, but one thing he didn't bargain for was work on the farm; still he must endure it. Another thing he didn't bargain for, but is willing to endure, is the companionship of the farmer's pretty daughter. It is a case of love on both sides. Meanwhile, the tramp awakening and finding the money, resolves to go back to his old home. His arrival is uneventful, as no one will believe him until he shows the farmer several marks or scars of identification as proof, hence the farmer chases Perry off and locks the daughter in her room. But, pshaw! As they appreciate the fact that love has ever given locksmiths the merry ha ha, they won't let a little thing like that break their romance, so they elope. When they arrive at Perry's mansion the girl is amazed, but is reassured by the presence of a minister, who makes them one just as the old father, who has followed with a neighbor enters. He not only makes the best of the situation, but considers himself the most fortunate father in Christendom with his daughter making such a match.

"THE TALE OF TWO COATS."—The fame of the Edison short comedies, which has grown so rapidly in the past few months, seems likely to receive further impetus from "The Tale of Two Coats," the main incident of which is laughable enough in itself, and when coupled with the strikingly contrasted personalities and the genuinely funny stage business which illuminates the story, the film ought to prove what in slang parlance is called "a scream."

There is a tall, extremely slender and very angular but dignified citizen who expects to meet the Governor of the State at a dinner, and who sends a messenger boy in a great hurry with instructions to take his suitcase containing his dress suit to the hotel which is the scene of the banquet. There is a fat, jolly and very flowery little clerk in the aforesaid tall citizen's office who sees a chance to get his own dress suit checked to a suburban home for an evening party by means of the same boy, and thus without cost to himself. The boy is a typical messenger "kid," as crafty and mercenary as he is reckless and utterly lacking as a respecter of persons. The clerk has no trouble in inducing him to perform the double errand as soon as he makes it plain that there is "something in" the job.

The two suit cases happen to be identical in appearance, though the contents are a long way from it, and the boy does not notice the fact until he arrives at the baggage room in the railroad station. Here for once he is nonplussed, and it doesn't help matters any to have a long line of people yelling at him to hustle along. Naturally enough he finds himself at a loss what to do, but at the baggageman's suggestion he flips a coin to decide the respective destinations of the two suit cases. The result of the gamble is the uproarious sequel of the story.

The dignified citizen finds himself forced to appear before the Governor in very inadequate togs, while the stout little clerk has much more than he needs when he appears at the party. And then the latter discovers a letter in the dress coat pocket which indicates whose clothes he is wearing, and he beats an instantaneous and prompt retreat only to appear at the Governor's reception a few moments later. "EQUAL TO THE EMERGENCY."—This is a charming little comedy of the very best sort, happily written and delightfully played by Edison's splendid stock players.

It begins with one of those first breakfasts at home that every young couple remembers with joy, and proceeds with the breaking in upon their happiness of an imperative note from the bride's sister summoning her to Atlantic City where, after much consultation and more heroism on the part of both of the young people, she goes. All would perhaps move smoothly if the young husband were not so lonely; but, finding that he cannot stand it any longer, he brings the boys in to keep him company. They have a little game, and a little smoke, and a little drink, until the old colored cook, coming into the room in the "cold gray dawn of the morning after," expresses her disapproval of such scandalous doings and quits on the spot.

The young hushand cooks his own breakfast for a few days and is beginning to become reconciled to the situation when he receives a note from Uncle Whatawad, from whom, of course, he has expectations. Uncle has never approved of his nephew's marriage, and writes now to say that he is coming to town only because the little wife, whom he has never seen, is away from home. Now, how can one entertain one's rich uncle with no cook in the house? Fortunately the little wife returns at this psychological moment, and, being a young woman of decision as well as fascination, she finds a way. Disguising her dainty figure in rough gown and apron she waits upon Uncle Whatawad at the table and he, enjoying the cooked viands, congratulates his nephew on his cook. He does more; he likes the cook so well that he makes her an offer to come and cook for him, and finding that her face is pretty, he tries to coax her to accept his offer.

Just here the young husband happens into the kitchen and a small sized riot immediately ensues, but again the little wife comes to the rescue and succeeds in patching up a truce. She confesses her deception, but offers to make amends in the sweetest way possible—only before uncle gets the kiss he must forgive nephew too. Being no more than human and seeing two pretty lips so near his own, uncle takes the wisest course—forgives nephew and takes the kiss.

"A WIRELESS ROMANCE."—Modern science rarely forgets to take a hand in the great game of life in one way or another. Love messages have reached waiting hearts by winged and fleet-footed runners, by spent horses and coach-and-four, by rattling rails and ocean hounds over thousands of miles of shining wire and roaring waves; but the quickest and most modern of science, the wireless, places all other methods among the dark archives of the past. It is due to this latest wonderful invention that the Edison Company has the right to claim a new, novel and up-to-date story in the moving picture world.

Miss Warren, a young girl of fashionable society, is still quite undecided if she shall entrust her heart and hand into the keeping of the well known clubman, a gentleman of fashion, when a slight accident occurs—simple in the extreme, yet destined to change the course of at least three lives. This mishap is the dropping of a fan over a cliff near a river bank. In itself it is nothing, but it results in Miss Warren's acquaintance with a stranger, who proves to be a wireless operator.

Their second meeting occurs on a street corner while he is on his way to his station, a short distance off. Naught will do but the fashionable Miss Warren must visit for the first time and inspect the marvels and wonders of this modern invention. Soon she is deeply absorbed in the mysteries of wireless, while her teacher is more deeply absorbed in the color of her eyes, her hair and the dainty smile that lurks around her lips. At any rate the lesson continues, only it is a different kind of wireless in the Marconi system that is being flashed from eye to eye during long walks along the beach and silent good-byes at the gate of Miss Warren's mansion. One has but little doubt about the messages being all wireless, and I think it was stupid little Cupid who invented this system ages and ages ago.

In the maze of mystery and mirth that has followed this fascinating flirtation and its quick ripening into deep human love, Miss Warren has almost forgotten to inform her fashionable suitor that his case is hopeless. Suddenly she is brought to her senses by a scandalous newspaper article in which her name is mentioned as being associated with a wager made in a drinking brawl at a public cafe, the wager being that her hand will be won within a week. In a moment Miss Warren sees her wireless operator as a common, drunken boaster, who has dared to boast that she has surrendered her heart to him.

Hot with wounded pride and humiliation she writes Mr. Hartley, her almost forgotten suitor, that she accepts his offer of marriage and that they must be married at once. She will meet him aboard his private yacht and run down to Marrow, where they shall be married before night fall. Within a few hours she finds herself far out at sea, and is just beginning to realize what she is doing when she detects Mr. Hartley in the act of sending a wireless message claiming he has "won his wager." Then the truth dawns upon her—she has made the mistake of accusing the wrong man! She demands that Hartley return with her, but no! the game has gone too far now for this man of fashion to turn back and be made the laughing stock of all his friends. She will have to carry out her own proposition and marry him that night at Marrow.

In the little wireless station at the sea coast sits the operator smoking his pipe and dreaming of one sweet girl who dropped her fan, when suddenly he hears the signal of distress. Again it comes flashing through the air, followed by the initials of Ruth Warren—"on board Hartley's private yacht." A half hour later and a small racing launch slips out from the wharf bound for Marrow with a certain wireless operator on board. A chase at sea is a new feature in the moving picture field and one that adds an exciting interest to this especially fine film of the Edison Company.

"Homeward Bound" is the last sub-title, and it easily tells the closing incident in a fine photographic film which is filled with exceedingly dramatic situations, and which will hold popular sway wherever it is shown.

"A DARLING CONFUSION."—This amusing comedy film is released with "The Other Johnson," the two making a reel of excellent comedy, which may be classified as "the funniest yet." Mr. and Mrs. Jones a young married couple, have just left breakfast. Mr. Jones seats himself at the desk in the library, quickly takes up a pen and is about to write when Mrs. Jones returns and asks him to have a look at her new hat. He is indifferent, looks about and nods his approval, then continues with his writing.

Mrs. Jones, impatient at his indifference, crosses over to see what he is so absorbed in and receives a shock when she reads the following:

Dear Darling:

Meet me in the reception room of Marten's cafe at 12 o'clock and while at luncheon, we will talk over our little affairs. GEORGE.

Mrs. Jones is shocked, but does not let her husband know that she had read the note. When he leaves she flies into a rage, which is interrupted when she receives a note from her brother Tom, and, oddly coincidental, asking her to meet him at the reception room at Marten's at 12 o'clock.

At the appointed time the enraged little Mrs. Jones is seated in the swell reception room of the cafe named in the notes. A moment later a prettily dressed woman, apparently agitated over something, enters, glances at the clock and compares it with her watch. Mrs. Jones quickly assumes that this is "Darling" and without a word of warning flies at her, grabbing her by the hair and endeavoring frantically to pummel her.

The scene is interrupted by the entrance of a hotel servant, who separates them. The servant is followed by Tom, Mrs. Jones' brother, to whom she explains that "this creature" had made an appointment with her husband. Tom endeavors to console her, pounces on Tom and his supposed flirtatious wife. when Jones enters, and mistaking the situation

Another fight is about to start when Darling enters and separates them. For "Darling" is a business gentleman with whom Jones is trying to make a deal.

Things are explained and the frightened victim of the attack receives from Mrs. Jones the latter's abject and tearful apologies.

"THE UNKNOWN CLAIM."—This is another intensely interesting Western picture from our producers in Colorado. Thrilling in its dramatic incidents, strong in plot, convincingly acted and exquisitely photographed, we believe this to be a feature which should not be overlooked by an interprising exhibitor.

Reuben Ellis and his daughter, Belle, are in hard financial straits. Burdened with debts and pressed by persistent creditors the old man finds but one way to meet his obligations, and that in mortgaging the ranch. Belle tries to console him, but agrees that they must borrow money.

Ellis rides into town and applies to a money lender for a sum sufficient to meet his debts. Walker, the loan agent, agrees to ride out to the ranch and look it over, but after he has viewed the ramshackle buildings and pitiful collection of household furniture he shakes his head and says the place is not worth a cent.

Now, it happens that one of Ellis' employes, who has been in love with Belle, in wandering over the ranch discovers an unknown claim which bears evidence of a good pay-streak. He is excitedly making an inspection when he hears voices and then hides behind a rock as Walker and Ellis come into view. Walker is giving his final verdict, offering a trivial sum for the property. The old man shakes his head and turns away.

Walker is about to go when the ranch hand stops him and shows him the rich ore deposits of the unknown claim. Walker appreciates the value of the mine and resolves to accept the mortgage from Ellis, and, if possible, to secure the ranch property. Cautioning the ranch hand to be silent, he again interviews Ellis, and offers him money on the ranch property.

The next day an assayer, accompanying Walker and the ranch hand, make investigations at the mine. After this the assayer leaves them and in passing Ellis' ranch house stops to get a drink.

Belle brings him the drink and lingers near him shyly as he questions her. It is a case of mutual infatuation, but young Bartwell, the assayer, makes his departure without making further advances.

A year goes by and Ellis who is still deeply in debt, receives a letter from Walker advising him that the mortgage will fall due the following day and unless it is paid he will immediately foreclose. Ellis is in despair, when Belle resolves to go to the money lender and intercede with him.

As she leaves the house she is confrontd by young Bartwell, smiling pleasantly at her. He has something important to tell her, he says, and asks her to go for a walk with him. By a lucky accident they pass the mine which Bartwell has assayed the year before and he makes mention of the fact, wondering that it has not been developed. The girl looks surprised and tells him that the property belongs to her father. Then she goes on to explain about the mortgage and how it is likely to be foreclosed at noon that day.

Bartwell sees through the whole wicked scheme. He looks at his watch and finds it is after 10. Two hours to make a twelve-mile ride!

Bartwell presses a roll of bills into her hand, and helping her into his saddle tells her to ride like the wind. The ride which follows is thrilling and shows most remarkable horsemanship.

At ten minutes to twelve she springs from the saddle in front of Walker's office and enters. One of the rogues, hearing her coming, has attempted to set the clock up ten minutes, but she sees the trick and makes him turn the hand back. Then she offers the money and demands the mortgage. It is turned over to her and she goes out.

At the ranch house a few hours later the girl enters breathlessly after her long ride and flourishes the mortgage. The old man tears it up and Bartlett, who has waited for this opporunity confesses his love to the girl and is accepted.

"THE OTHER JOHNSON."—Just bubbling over with funny situations, told convincingly by clever comedians, this comedy picture is sure to make a big hit wherever it is shown. The moral of the story is obvious: "Don't spend your legacy before you get it!"

Henry Johnson, a young broker, and his wife are at breakfast one morning when Mrs. Johnson reads the following item, concerning her husband, in the morning's paper:

> Search is being made for the heir of Hiram Johnson, who lived in this city thirty years ago, and has died in California, leaving an estate of one million dollars. It is believed that Henry Johnson, the well known young broker, is the missing heir, and he will receive the whole estate, he being the only blood relation.

With a happy cry Mrs. Johnson shows the article to her husband, but he laughs unbelievingly and assures her that he is not the Johnson referred to.

Young Johnson goes to his office and finds a letter from a San Francisco law firm, advising him that he is the heir and that the money will be paid over to him in full upon proof of proper identification.

Henry is jubilant and calls his wife on the phone to communicate to her the glad news. He hangs up the receiver and is about to go out when a friend, his face beaming with congratulations, enters with the newspaper. This friend makes a "touch" and Henry willingly loans him the money. Bill collectors begin to call, to whom Henry cheerfully pays his last ready money and phones to the bank for more.

Suddenly the door bursts open and a great gathering of all sorts of people, agents, pedlars, beggars, charity solicitors, etc., crowd into the room, all demanding to be let into Johnson's good fortune. It costs him a pretty penny to get them out, even the policeman he had called in, demanding his "bit."

When Henry leaves for home he finds he hasn't a nickel to his name and borrows carfare from his stenographer.

When he arrives home he finds he is facing another serious predicament. All of his relations, acquaintances and friends are trying to crowd into the house, each having brought their grips, prepared to pay Cousin Henry a "real, long visit."

Henry is in despair, and after trying vainly to get them out of the house, decides that he and his wife will slip out and leave their guests to entertain themselves.

But this move is interrupted by a messenger boy with a telegram from San Francisco. It is from Bings & Bangs, attorneys, and reads:

> Dear Sir: We regret to inform you that you are not the right Johnson.

Mrs. Johnson, happy that it is all over, reads the message to the crowd, and they skulk out, telling Johnson what they think of him.

"THE CLINK OF GOLD."—A good comic film telling of a man who bequeathed his fortune to his daughter when she marries. He afterwards regrets his rashness, as he is compelled to borrow from a friend. Upon his death, the picture shows the astonishment of the married couple upon finding what he has to leave them.

Mr. Goodman gives all his money to his daughter when she marries. She and her husband do not display any gratitude, and the poor fellow has a dreadful time, receiving from the married couple very little attention. Acting upon the advice of his friend, he obtains a bag filled with small pieces of metal which, as they are shaken, sound like coins. One day, when he knows the ungrateful children are looking, Mr. Goodman puts this bag away in the strong box of his room. His daughter and her husband think he has come into some more money, and their behavior towards him is very different. When the old man dies, however, and his will is read, they are very much disgusted to find the contents of the casket left to them in the will contains only a stone.

A neat method of gettings one's rights.

"THE INVINCIBLE SWORD."—The story starts with the suit of the Count Ganelon being refused by Angelica, Queen of Cathray, who loves the Knight Roland. Roland, however, has been told by a soothsayer that as long as he keeps his heart intact, his sword will be invincible. But fate is against him, and he falls in love with Angelica, whom he finds disguised as a shepherdess. Ganelon interrupts them and challenges Roland to fight. Ganelon treats with the enemy respecting giving them plans of the intentions of his army, but is found out by the shepherd, who informs Roland. Roland accepts the Count's challenge, and in the duel he overcomes his adversary, but in the battle which is fought afterwards the fortune teller's prophesy is fulfilled, for Roland's army is defeated, and he, himself, mortally wounded. He expires blowing his trumpet for the assistance which arrives too late. A splendid dramatic film, and powerfully told.

"LIFE IN SENEGAL AFRICA."—An important document for studying the manners and habits of the dwellers in that strange land.

We are shown the various tradesmen and manufacturers at work on their rather crude products in leather, metal, wood and fabrics.

The street scenes are all filled with activities of unusual kinds.

Our last call at a public place is the school house, where we see the little black boys hard at work on their studies.

The entire series is full of interesting scenes from native life.

"RUINS OF MEDIAEVAL FORTIFICATIONS IN FRANCE."—An excellent contrast between the old and the new is given in this series taken at Aigues-Mortes.

A very fine picture of the town from which King St. Louis of France started for the Crusades. The ramparts of the old city and views of the river running through are shown, and towards the end of the picture the glories of a sunset are depicted. It is a scenic of good interest, not being too long.

The old order changeth and beneath the towers and walls, once peopled with beautiful ladies and grand knights, progress has laid the tracks that guide the greatest magicians of advance, the railroad trains.

"A RUSSIAN SPY."—Strong Russian drama, beautifully staged and produced. Magnificent stereoscopic effects.

General calls an officer and sends him out to get information of enemy's position. Moonlight reconnoitre of scout, but hearing enemy, dismounts, and proceeds on foot. Falls into an ambush, is captured and taken before an officers' council at a country inn and imprisoned in cellar.

Maid servant, who has recognized an old friend, goes to cellar and schemes for his escape.

After holding revelry (introducing a fine Russian dance) the officers leave a sentry on guard at entrance of cellar. Escape of the captive and return of officers, who question sentry, and on hearing explanation, send for the girl, who is condemned to death.

Heroine taken into the woods to be shot, when, by the timely arrival of the friendly force, she is saved.

Strong plot, delightfully executed.

"TROPICAL JAVA OF THE SOUTH SEA ISLANDS."—A beautiful series, equally valuable as a succession of artistic views and as an educational tour in that far land.

A particularly interesting travel picture, dealing principally with home life and customs—Street scenes in Sourabaia—every kind of vehicle imaginable is shown.

Every day scenes—A washing day—Girls drawing water and indulging in a refreshing shower bath—Embroidering—Dancing—Playing cards in the shade of huge-leaved ferns.

The military school—Native boys drilling—An extraordinary goose step—At their studies.

A native exhibition.

Procession of carnival. Strange figures and decorated cars.

Quality is manifested in every foot of the film, both quality in photography and in choice of viewpoint.

"THE LITTLE PREACHER."—The cowboys and gamblers of Curzon are very much interested in a placard which appears one day in the saloon, giving the information that the Rev. A. B. Cole is due to arrive from Glue Gulch, and that services will be held in the school house. The cowboys plan to give the preacher a warm reception, but are surprised and chagrined when the new minister turns out to be a pretty woman. They immediately apologize and agree that religion must be a good thing if taught by such a charming woman.

The attendance at the school house is large, and the barroom is almost deserted. The bartender is in despair and is on the point of closing out his business. He is urged against this, however, by one steady patron, Joe Lane, who tries his best to bring the deserters back into camp.

The Rev. Cole hears of the efforts against her by this young scoundrel and so she takes pains to meet him. Great is the surprise upon both sides. Joe proves to be handsome, debonair and polite; and not the deep-dyed villain she had anticipated.

On the other hand Joe is immensely pleased with the young theological student; and an acquaintance springs up which ripens into a love affair in a few days.

Joe is a hopeless case, according to the good minister's mind, and she decides that it is her duty to reform him, even if she has to marry him. Joe swears that this is the only way in which he can be reformed, and when he convinces her of this they take a trip to the local justice of the peace, who ties the knot.

In the meantime, with Joe attending the services regularly, the bartender has no customers; and so he closes the saloon, posts a notice of the suspension of business and prepares to leave for more congenial surroundings.

The cowboys have been exemplary in their conduct, but, when they discover that the object of their admiration has become Mrs. Joe Lane, they decide to become "back-sliders." In a body they attend the saloon, with their appetites whetted for the fruits of the wine cup.

Alas, they are greeted by the sign of suspension. They find the bartender, and, at the point of their revolvers, force him to open up and quench their thirst. He is firm in his determination to move, however, and so each takes a flask along against a future drought.

The little minister notices that evening that they are in a somewhat hilarious condition, and so she lectures them severely on their habits, aided and abetted by her stalwart husband.

Ashamed and impressed, the boys finally agree to exchange their flasks for prayer-books; and sit down to study their Sunday school lessons. Tired nature asserts itself, however, and they gradually drop off to sleep, while a picture shows a gigantic spider industriously weaving a web over the door of the deserted saloon.

This is one of the best of the Melies cowboy comedies, in which religion is treated with a reverential regard, despite the fact that the comedy seems built on ridicule. While not a temperance lesson, it is an object lesson, and is sure to meet with hearty laughter.

"HIS CHILD'S CAPTIVE."—Lawrence Redmond, a prosperous banker, has settled down to a life of domesticity and has almost entirely forgotten the wild oats days, when, like an echo from the past, comes a note from Eva Landon, an actress, who is passing through the city, and demands that her old friend visit her. Eva's influence was strong in the old days, and Redmond's first impulse is to go to her, even though he had promised to take his wife to the theatre, but he fights down the impulse and resolves not to see the woman who once commanded his life. But the actress is not to be denied. Redmond is wealthy, and her physical attractiveness, still marked, is rapidly fading. She plans that his money shall make secure the comfort of her declining years. She seeks him out at his office, and Redmond again yields to the magnetism of her presence. His brief visit to her hotel is prolonged through dinner until she is again in complete ascendancy, and he promises to elope with her. He returns to the house late at night for important papers, and his little son, nicknamed Redskin, unable to stay in bed with a fascinating Indian suit alongside, captures him and restores him to his forgiving wife and the happy home.

"FERDIE'S VACATION."—A timely little farce in which a familiar situation is given an entirely new twist. Ferdie labors in an office, and he thinks of the joys of the country, where his sweetheart is spending the summer. It's hot in the office; there is a rush of business, and Ferdie seeks release. He has drawn a late vacation in the office pool, and he feels that if he does not get out of town sooner he will never live to enjoy the last two weeks of August. He writes his fiancee asking that a wire be sent him summoning him to the bedside of his dying sister. This is done, and Ferdie exultantly exits from the office wholly undeserving the sympathy which follows him. He is having a corking good time when a wire comes from the boss that he is stopping off to see Ferdie—and the sick sister—and Ferdie never had a sister, let alone a sick one. His fiancee's brother is elected the sister and comforted with some fine old whiskey in a medicine bottle, and the sympathetic employer is glad that he gave Ferdie an unlimited leave of absence when he sees how sick the sister is. But his daughter discovers the sick sister sitting up with one of her father's cigars and the bottle of whiskey. The chum is making great progress with the daughter when her father comes in search of his cigar case, and for a moment it looks as though Ferdie's vacation would last until he procured another place, but the old man is talked over and in the end rather enjoys the joke.

PATHE FRERES.

"THE RUNAWAY DOG."—Jones has arranged to go shooting and just as he is ready to start he receives a note from a friend, who had promised him the loan of his dog, that the animal was sick. Not to be done out of his enjoyment Jones decides to purchase a dog. After various attempts to do so he succeeds in coming to terms with a tramp. No sooner, however, had he led the dog a little way on his road before he yearns for his old master, and with a sudden dash flies off at a headlong pace, the unfortunate sportsman being dragged along in his wake.

Down goes a cyclist, then a big fat country girl with a basket, and an Italian statue dealer suffers in a like way. Next a dozen customers outside a saloon are dispersed in different directions, and immediately a man painting the wall of a house is overturned. At last Jones makes a grab at a lamp post in a desperate effort to stop his and the dog's headlong flight. It is a more effective method than he imagined, for the excited animal, dancing round him on his leash, binds him securely to the post. Subsequently he is released by his victims, who belabor him unmercifully, whilst the dog scampers back to the tramp.

"THE RHINE FROM COLOGNE TO BINGEN."—This film takes you past all the most famous castles, each of which is the subject of hundreds of legends. First, we see Koenigswinter and the crumbling ruins of the Dragon's Rock. In quick succession follow Linz, Anderach and the Fortress of Ehren-breitstein. Next comes one of the most famous sights of the Rhine, the monument of Emperor William. And then the Lorelei, the Oberwesel, and the ruins of Schonburg and passing through the Rhine Palatine we come upon Kaub and the Castle of Gutenfels. Amongst others we see the famous Rheinstein and Sonneck castles, and finally at Bingen itself the Mouse, or Hatto's Tower, and the vineyards of Rudesheim.

This film is pregnant with interest, giving a true representation of the splendid scenery of this magnificent and incomparable river, and calling to mind the innumerable tales and myths of quaint old German folklore, which spreads its misty veil upon the dark and mysterious waters.

"LOVE YE ONE ANOTHER."—A poor, half-starved wayfarer asks several of the villagers for help or work without avail. No one will give him food or even a kindly word. Even a lad eating bread on the porch of his home refuses him a morsel. Bitter and despairing this poor sufferer ultimately finds himself before one of those gigantic crosses which uplift themselves so conspicuously above the Normandy landscape. Disgusted with human nature he raises his stick and reviles the figure of Christ upon the Cross. At the same moment a laborer appears coming down the road and the outcast feels impelled to fall upon him and strike him. He holds himself in readiness watching the coutryman slowly approaching and then with uplifted stick he springs forward, but in place of the laborer stands the figure of Christ, who leads him back to the foot of the Cross and points out the words carved on the base "Love Ye One Another." The stick falls, hate and curses give way to sobs, and the wayfarer reading understands and continues on his way. Suddenly the alarm bell rings out. He turns and sees one of the farmhouses in flames. The youth who had refused him bread is helpless in the upper part and the villagers are running to and fro distracted. A ladder is raised and with sudden strength the tramp goes up, and, through choking smoke and falling rafters, snatches the lad in his arms and takes him down to safety. Reaching the ground he falls and rough hands are now eager to lend him assistance. Alas! it is too late, he has given all he had to give, his own poor wretched life, to a fellow-creature.

"JINKS HAS THE SHOOTING MANIA."—Tommy's father gives him a popgun for a present, and in showing him how to use it finds out that he can hit the bull's-eye every time. This so excites dad that he gets a mania for shooting. He goes out and purchases a rifle. And now the fun commences. Anything he sees he practices his skill on. Various articles are destroyed, and innumerable are the brawls he finds himself mixed up in. In one case he aims at a parasol on the grass that look like a target, behind which a soldier and his sweetheart are making love. It is fortunate the film does not show the language that soldier used. Finally, he aims at the bunghole of some barrels of beer being delivered to a saloon. His aim, as usual, is sure, and the beer gushes forth in a stream into the street. This time, however, it is his finish, and he himself becomes the target for an avalanche of fruit, eggs, potatoes and turnips that his various victims find real pleasure in throwing at his defenseless head.

"BIG HEARTED MARY."—Mary is the daughter of a rich farmer and her friend Helen is the daughter of a poor farm hand out of a job. Mary calling for her friend one morning on her way to school learns of their great distress, and returning to her parents suggests that some assistance be given to them. Unfortunately the farmer learns that Helen is the child of a man with whom he had quarreled in the past, and refuses to hear another word on their behalf. Poor little Mary is downhearted, but makes up her mind that something must be done to relieve the distress of Helen and her parents. She accordingly takes from her home a rabbit and some eggs and gives it to them in her father's name, so that they have no scruples about accepting the present. The theft is, however, soon discovered, and a farm hand supposed to be the culprit is dismissed. Mary is then in a fix, and she decides to confess her fault. Her father startled at the development, investigates the matter, and rather ashamed of his harsh treatment of Helen, not only forgives his own little girl, but finds work for Helen's father and mother on his farm.

"COL. ROOSEVELT REVIEWING FRENCH TROOPS."—This short topical picture is of great interest at the present moment, inasmuch as it gives a very good picture of the ex-President in conversation with the French commander facing the camera and right close up to it.

"THE CHAMPION OF THE RACE."—There is many a marriage arranged for a young girl by her parents for financial or social advancement, but it is not often that she is as resourceful as Helen Brown in devising a method that enables her to marry the man of her heart with her parents' consent.

George Brown and John Gordon were leading bankers in Longville, and in order to benefit their banks, they had arranged that Helen Brown should marry James Gordon, and the film opens with a reception given in honor of the engagement. Helen was, however, secretly betrothed to a young officer, Harry Castleroy, and at the reception refused to have anything to do with James, and spent as much time as possible with her soldier lover. Brown is an ardent automobilist and has set his whole heart on winning the 24-hour endurance race, and the subject cropping up at the reception backs himself for $20 000 to win the race. Brown makes his preparations and the day of the race arriving is ready early, although it does not start until 6 o'clock. To pass the time he takes his future son-in-law fishing in the sound. Helen now sees a desperate chance to win her father's consent. She sends for Harry and explains her plan. Quietly they cut the rope that moors the fisherman's boat and leaves them to drift at the mercy of the sea with a broken oar. Quickly donning their motoring clothes Helen and Harry speed to the track.

The time for the race to start has arrived, but Brown has not put in an appearance, and the race is about to start without him and he will lose his bet. But Helen jumps into the automobile, goes to the starting point and drives it in the race. We see her and her competitors tearing round the track at over 50 miles an hour. Meantime Brown and James have drifted out to sea and next afternoon are discovered capsized and with the greatest difficulty are picked up by a passing yacht. Safe on land, but soaking and exhausted they hurry to the track in time to see the finish of the race. Protesting against his misfortune Brown is amazed to see that his daughter is the winning driver, and that she has won with his entry. As a return for her having won his bet and the trophy he so much desires with little persuasion he consents to her marriage to the young officer, much to the disappointment of the unfortunate James.

The saving of the two men was only accomplished with much trouble, and if it had not been for the extra aid from the boathook we doubt whether James would have survived to take part in another picture, for he had already gone under twice and was all in.

KALEM CO.

"THE HERO ENGINEER."—In this production the Kalem Company offers a soul-stirring story of heroic daring performed by a railroad engineer and his devoted wife set in a series of novel pulse thrilling railroad scenes.

The first scene finds the engineer in his home surrounded by his happy family. He is departing for his task of guiding the overland "flyer" with its precious freight across the continent. A few days later a delegation from the railroad engineers' union find that their demands for an increase are peremptorily refused by the superintendent and a strike is declared.

The next day as the idle engineers are standing around the deserted roundhouse the superintendent approaches and begs and implores one of them to carry him to a distant town where his little one lies dangerously ill. Engineer Thomas, unable to refuse the appeal of the suffering father, takes out the engine amidst the curses and cries of a "scab." We see them rushing through the crowds of desperate strikers that line the tracks and on out into the quiet country. Arriving at his home station the superintendent learns that his child is out of danger and sets out on the return trip. Meanwhile a friendly call boy has overheard the plot of the strikers to burn up the trestle over which the superintendent and Engineer Thomas must run. He informs the wife and summons the aid of the militia, who hastily mount a hand car and go speeding towards the trestle. The heroic wife follows the strikers even to the dizzy top of the trestle. From their position in the cab of the flying engine the engineer and superintendent with horrified eyes see the strikers applying their torches to the kindling wood. Unable to stop the engine in time Engineer Thomas throws on full speed, and as he dashes through the rolling smoke and scorching flames he catches sigh of his daring wife who is endeavoring to stop the strikers in their dastardly work. Quickly bringing the engine to a stop the engineer and superintendent rush back to the aid of the wife now in the hands of the infuriated mob. They themselves are quickly overpowered when just in the nick of time the militia arrive. Soon the strikers are fleeing and Engineer Thomas lifts his now fainting wife into his arms while the superintendent holds a prisoner, the desperate agitator who urged on the mob of strikers.

SCENE FROM KALEM SUBJECT, "THE HERO ENGINEER."

"ATTACK BY ARAPAHOES."—Continuing the popular policy of putting out a big Indian feature each week, the Kalem Company now offer "Attacked by Arapahoes" a great production for the banners and one which will make good on the screen. "Attacked by Arapahoes" is another historic story of the perils of the Santa Fe trail. A party of gold seekers start out for the Black Hills led by a famous scout and well equipped for the journey. They hope for a safe journey but are soon discovered by a marauding band of Arapahoes who are called "The meanest Indians that roam the plains."

These Arapahoes have sent out a scout in advance and he sees the gold seekers and carries back the news to his camp. A war party is soon organized and we see them making their way over a rough country to the point where the wagon train has to pass a narrow passage leading to the foot hills. Here the gold seekers stop for a meal and while they the unprepared the Indians attack them fiercely. The whites have barely time to get their guns and most of them are shot in the first rush. The Indians capture a young lad with his mother and take them to their camp. Here the boy manages to escape and gets word to Capt. Sumner's Indian fighters. Capt. Sumner's troop of cavalry starts out at once and after a hot pursuit catches up with the Arapahoes and as hot a battle ensues as has ever been shown in motion pictures.

The reunion of the mother and daughter with the young son forms the climax of the story.

ESSANAY NOTES.

The feature picture described in the Essanay Guide for the last two weeks of July is another dramatic story from the Essanay's Chicago studios, under the title of "The Thief." It is a detective story, keenly interesting in plot, splendidly acted, and superbly photographed. In a foreword, prefacing a description of the picture, this explanation is given; "The society thief has always been a picturesque character as has been the social detective. In this story, a man similar to Arsene Lupin is pitted against a well known thief hunter after the style of our world popular Sherlock Holmes. The secret of a good detective story is to present a problem to be solved and presented in such a way that the picture viewers, with the unfolding of the story will find interest in his own deductions and theories, independent of the work of the detective in the story. In this instance a society thief steals the jewels of his hostess. We have seen him commit the theft and we know he has them, but where? The efforts of the detective himself at first fail but at length he obtains a clue which makes his further investigation successful." The story, in brief, is as follows, Carlos Montague, a clever society thief, attends a reception and during the course of the evening he steals a number of very valuable rings from his hostess. A noted detective, Bramwell, is summoned, and following an investigation, in that part of the house where the theft took place, he insists on searching the gentlemen guests. This work is also a failure but he obtains a clue when he finds a stiletto cane among the hostess' curios, which suggests that the stolen jewels may be carried in a receptacle in Montague's cane. Later this proves to be so and the crafty diamond thief is turned over to a policeman. This picture, it is claimed by the Essanay Company, is one of the best dramatic subjects ever released by them. Especial care has been taken to make the film a masterpiece. The principal characters are interpreted by Mr. Marshall Steuben, as the thief, and Mr. Brinsley Shaw, as the detective. The picture is booked for release, Wednesday, July 20.

The Western pictures described in the Guide are a comedy, "The Desperado" and a dramatic subject, entitled "Broncho Billy's Redemption." The first story tells of the efforts of a Western sheriff and posse to capture a wily bad man and their undoing through the strategy of the desperado. He steals their horses, and holds them up, one by one, and forces them to walk back to town. "Black Bart" the desperado, has preceded them with their horses and guns which he has gratuitously restored with a curt note telling them what fools they are. The sheriff is disgusted, resigns his job, and the county board advertises for another sheriff. A strapping big cowboy answers the ad. and is promised a permanent job if he will capture Black Bart. The cowboy agrees, and two days later effects the capture of the bad man. Broncho Billy's Redemption tells of another much-wanted bandit and cattle rustler who sacrifices his chance of freedom in playing a good Samaritan. He is hard pressed by the sheriff and his posse when he comes across a prairie schooner, working its way West, the occupants of which are a young girl and a sick father. When Broncho Billy finds them the girl has also become ill, he drives schooner outfit into town, surrendering himself to the officials. However, the sheriff is touched by the bad man's self-sacrifice and after obtaining his promise to abide with the law Broncho Billy is given his freedom.

The Guide also describes two very funny comedy subjects which promise to be two more Essanay hits. "A Fair Exchange," release of Wednesday, July 27, concerns a leak in a water pipe in the home of a physician, and how it was fixed by a plumber, and what he does to the plumber is certainly a caution. Both bills are exhorbitant, but when it is found out that they balance, the plumber and doctor shake hands and destroy the bills.

Mr. G. M. Anderson, the Western producer of the Essanay Company, returned to Chicago last week, from Morrison, Colorado, where he has been directing the production of the Essanay's Western films. However, he expects to return shortly and the Essanay stock company in the West will continue making Western pictures.

Mr. Anderson expressed himself as exceedingly pleased with the work of their winter's sojourn in the Western states.

"We have had a particularly successful season" said Mr. Anderson, "and we have worked hard to give exhibitors the very best of pictures obtainable. I shall return in a short time and the Essanay Company will continue to make Western pictures, as long as our product is as eagerly accepted by the exhibitors as it is now. We shall retain most of the actors which now compose the Essanay Western stock company and shall continue operations in Colorado."

BUFFALO TO HAVE $50,000 THEATRE.

M. Slotkin, of No. 537 William street, Buffalo, is having plans drawn for a new $50.000 motion picture theatre which he hopes to have completed by the latter part of the summer or the beginning of autumn. GEM THEATRE TO BE READY AUGUST 15.

S. S. Harris, manager of the Majestic theatre, Little Rock, Ark., and also an equal partner with Abe Stiewel in the ownership of the new Gem motion picture theatre on Third street, between Main and Louisiana, returned June 19, from a trip to St. Louis, Chicago, Milwaukee and New York, where he purchased fixtures for the Gem and assisted in completing the bookings for the Majestic circuit.

Mr. Harris declared that he will spring something new in Little Rock in the way of furnishings and fittings for the new moving picture theatre. He stated that the roof on the new theatre is to be on within 10 days, according to the contractor, and that the house will likely be opened about August 15. Mr. Harris also stated that a full orchestra will play at the Gem at every performance, and that he has already secured two high-grade singers from Chicago for the new house. The scenery is now being painted. The stage and scenery will be fireproof. The house will seat 850 people.

All the bookings for the Majestic circuit have been made and will probably be announced by Mr. Harris within the next week.

Mr. Harris will continue as manager of the Majestic and states that the manager of the Gem will probably be named within a short time.

NEW STAR THEATRE OPENS.

East Stroudsburg Has One of Best Theatres In Pennsylvania.

The opening of the new Star theatre, East Stroudsburg, Pa., June 27, was one of the biggest treats given the people of that well known Pennsylvania summer resort in a long time. The new house, which will be devoted entirely to motion pictures, is under the management of Robert Depuy and Clarence H. Dreher, two of the best known theatre managers in that section of the state.

Long before the doors were thrown open, on the initial night, large crowds had gathered in front of the house waiting for the appointed hour to get in. In the crowd were many summer people from the hotels and cottages, all anxiously waiting to get a glimpse of the theatre, and to see what kind of performances they were going to be treated to during the hot, torrid days of July and August.

At the close of the performance all expressed themselves as more than satisfied with all that went on and that they could assure their friends there would be a good place in the old town to pass away an evening in regular "Gotham" style.

The house has been so built and arranged that it will fully meet the demands of the worthy patronage which will be given. The building is 52 by 30 feet in dimensions, and 18½ feet high. There are five exits which prove an ample fire protection considering also that the whole building is fireproof. The ventilation is of the best and is effected by six windows.

The seating capacity of the house is large and there are three wide aisles. The seats are all 27 inches apart, thus making them most comfortable. They are the most improved and comfortable mahogany theatre seats. Instead of the seats being on an incline the curtain or rather the white hard finished wall on which the pictures will be thrown, is raised to such a heighth that the pictures can easily be seen from all parts of the house. The bottom of the picture space is six feet from the floor.

One of the best moving picture machines has been installed—a Powers No. 6, of the February, 1910, type. It is enclosed in an up-to-date fireproof booth.

The exterior of the building has been made particularly attractive. Across the front are three large arches and these will have vari-colored glass in them. Fifty different colored electric lights will illuminate the front of the building.

In the center of the front is a very neat ticket booth with three windows. A large star with an electric light thereon will also be placed conspicuously on the front of the building.

LOST FATHER FOUND

Son Discovers Parent in Motion Picture of Alaskan Scenes

Working on the clew of a scene in a moving picture show, William Larsen of Minneapolis found his father, Capt. Sam Larsen of the schooner Bringgold, Tuesday, and father and son were reunited after a separation of 21 years, during which neither had seen the other nor did they know each other's whereabouts.

Larsen left Minneapolis 21 years ago when his son was 10 years old. Nothing was ever heard of him by his family and he was finally given up as dead.

"All of a sudden, while we were looking at the picture," says the son, in telling of the discovery, "Uncle Olaf jumped up and shouted, 'Sam! Sam! Sam!' Every one thought he was crazy and hustled us out. When we got out in the light I saw Uncle Olaf was all white and shaking. He said that he had seen my father's spook. I told him it was nonsence that those photographs were the same as any others taken in any gallery.

"Then we went back to the show and saw the picture again. Uncle Olaf pointed out a man standing in the stern of a fishing schooner, laughing. He thought it was my dead father. We asked the man who operated the films when the picture was taken. He said he was sure it was about a year ago, because all the films in his show were new and of late subjects.

"The next day we brought Aunt Mary, Uncle Olaf's wife, who knew father very well, as she was once his sweetheart, too. She said it was her brother-in-law, Sam, for sure. I wrote to a firm in New York and learned that the pictures had been taken in September, 1909, at Petersburg, Alaska. So I came West to Seattle and went to Petersburg last month. There I found plenty of men who knew my father as Sam Larsen, but discovered that he was at that time in Seattle. I came back to Seattle and it didn't take long for me to find out that every one on the water front knew Sam Larsen. Later I found him.

"I didn't believe it was Will at first," said Captain Larsen, who sat on the fishermen's sofa at the end of the Chlopeck fish dock. "I had always thought of him as a little shaver. Now I know it's him, and I'm mighty glad he found me. I will take him out to the halibut banks with me and teach him how to fish and run a boat.

"I remember very well when that picture was taken last fall in Alaska."

ROOSEVELT PICTURES MAKE HIT IN ELIZABETH.

The recent Roosevelt parade pictures are bringing high compliments from many out of town exhibitors, who claim that their audience did not miss anything by not being in New York city to see Colonel Roosevelt ride up Broadway. The motion pictures taken of the parade were so clever in all the details that the audience imagined it was there, and more than once did some of the enthusiastic ones start cheering soon as the ex-president put in his appearance.

At Loew's theatre, Elizabeth, N. J., the pictures made a great hit, and were the cause of keeping that popular playhouse crowded all the time they were shown. The management claims, that no pictures ever did so much in the way of boosting receipts, than did those taken of Colonel Roosevelt's return.

MOVING PICTURES IN GERMANY.

Comparatively few American moving-picture films are shown in Hamburg, Consul-General Robert P. Skinner stating that local managers think the German public prefers travel pictures and quieter action to the exciting incidents of American life commonly submitted. Mr. Skinner discusses the film trade and the business in general:

The moving-picture shows of Hamburg are not managed as in the United States. In the best places here the highest admission price is 1 mark (23.8 cents) and the lowest 40 pfennigs (9½ cents). Tickets are stamped with the hour of arrival, and between series notices are displayed on the canvas that certain time tickets have expired and that supplementary tickets may be purchased from ushers without going outside. Ushers pass through the audience and see that persons holding expired tickets do not remain. The same picture is never repeated in an evening. The usual length of one admission is two hours. Excellent music is furnished by small orchestras and in some larger theatres there are brass bands. Smoking is prohibited and beer is not served in the better-class places, but at some of the popular theatres both smoking and drinking are permitted.

The films exhibited in Hamburg are rented from central agencies at a cost of about 2½ cents a foot for the first week and less for longer periods, though films not new to the public can be had for as low as 1 4-5 cents.

WASHINGTON'S NEW OPEN-AIR THEATRE.

F. F. Kidwell, a well known amusement promoter of Washington, D. C., is now producing motion pictures in an open-air theatre at Twenty-third street and the Avenue.

Since the opening, June 22, Mr. Kidwell reports a good business, and the place is crowded every night. It is also his intention to have amateur performances at least once a week.

SALES CO. SURRENDERS

Make Peace with Insurgents After a Long Fight

Once again there is a semblance of peace within the ranks of the Independents. The so-called "insurgents" have gone over to the Motion Picture Distributing and Sales Company, but not without many concessions on the part of the latter organization.

A confab that began in the offices of the American Kinograph Company 124 East 25th street, New York, on Monday night, June 27, and continued all next day at the Sales Company's offices, 111 E 14th street, resulted in agreements being reached between the two camps whereby all hostilities are to be suspended and beginning with July 15, all shipments of the Independent Manufacturers are to be made through the Motion Picture Distributing and Sales Company.

This meeting and its results were brought about largely by the activities of two Chicago Independent film renters.

Backman, of the Twentieth Century Film Exchange and Pluh of the Anti-Trust Film Exchange. The present state of affairs is entirely satisfactory to them but neither faction of the manufacturers seem to be particularly elated.

The Sales Company gave up some of their pet schemes. They no longer get a percentage on the number of feet of film sold, but receive in lieu of that, $50 a week from each manufacturer.

Any manufacturer may, if he desires, have the "C. O. D. payment" returned direct to him instead of to the Sales Co. In this case the Sales Company is relieved of all responsibility such as los of goods, rejection of goods, or bad check.

A board of governors, composed of six members from each faction has been formed to take the place of the corporate board of directors. The original officers of the company have resigned and new ones will be elected by the new board of governors from their own number. The board of governors is as follows: Sales Co., Herbert L. Miles, representing the Atlas Film Co.; Wm. Steiner, the Yankee Film Co.; Wm. H. Swanson, the Defender Film Co.; Carl Laemmle, the Imp. Co.; Chas. Bowman, the N. Y. Motion Picture Co.; P. A. Powers, the Powers Co. From the Associated Independent Manufacturers—Edward Thanhauser, the Thanhauser Co.; G. A. Magee, the Kinograph Co.; David Horsley, Nester and Centaur; I. C. Oes, Great Northern Film Co.; I. W. Ullman, Columbia Film Co., and A. G. Whyte, of the Whyte Co.

There appears to be some doubt as to whether A. G. Whyte will be permitted to remain on the board of governors. It was claimed by members of the Sales Co. that he represents no active company. Horsley covers Nester and Centaur, and the Whyte Co. is not yet releasing. Those most insistent that he be not retained on the board, it is said, were Miles, Bowman and Powers.

But all is not settled yet. In each camp there still smoulders the recent fire of contention. An Associated manufacturer or Sales company man when seen alone will boast of concessions the other side had to make. The election of officers which takes place next week is likely to be the cause of serious disagreement. Each side is hot after the general managership of the company, and possibly for good reason. The Sales Company makes all shipments of films. Should it delay any one particular release, that release would be useless to film exchanges.

These and other fears lurk in the hearts of the Associated men who admit that their members on the board, some of whom are new in the picture game, will have to use some tall diplomacy to hold in check men who have made a life study of how to gain confidence.

To permit the Sales Co. faction to control the management of the company would still place the Associated Manufacturers at the mercy of the Laemmle-Kessel crowd in whom they have no faith.

COVINGTON'S CASINO.

The handsome and substantial house shown in the above illustration is the Casino Theatre of Covington, Ky., located on Pike and Madison Streets of that city. Parker, Stephenson and Freiberg are the owners and managers. The Casino was opened on October 23, 1909, with the licensed service of the Magnetic Film Service Co., and has continued with that exchange since the opening. Straight pictures with illustrated songs constitutes the program at the Casino—no vaudeville.

The capacity of the house is 275 and the admission 5 cents, yet it has been a money maker almost from the start. As a type of the modern picture house, the Casino is certainly a model and a distinct credit to its owners.

JUDGMENTS AGAINST KESSEL.

Pathe Freres and the Kalem Company over a year ago, through their attorney, William O. Wolf, of No. 132 Nassau Street, brought suit against Adam Kessel, Jr., doing business under the firm name and style of the Empire Film Co., to recover for films sold in the latter part of 1908 and January, 1909.

Kessel fought both cases, bitterly interposing counter-claims in each case for $500, asserting that both Pathe Freres and the Kalem Company were members of a combination in restraint of trade contrary to and in violation of the Sherman Anti-Trust Act. Kessel was constantly fighting and fencing for time, but finally on June 17, 1910, Attorney Wolf forced the issue and obtained judgment against Kessel for $247.29 in favor of Pathe Freres and for the sum of $415.31 in favor of the Kalem Company.

Kessel then moved to reopen the case and set aside both judgments and asked leave to defend. The Court granted this motion, upon condition that Kessel deposit the amounts of the judgments obtained in Court as security, or give an undertaking to secure the judgments; otherwise his motions were to be denied, and set the cases down for June 30 for trial.

SELIG NOTES.

"The Red Man's Way" billed for release July 7, has been changed and the release for that date is announced as "The Way of the Red Men." This film will prove a big sensation, replete with startling situations and intense human interest.

While moving our herd of camels across the country to a spot decided upon among the sand dunes of Indiana, for the purpose of making one of those great big pictures for which Selig is famous, an accident occurred that caused no little excitement and likewise expense. The sacred monarchs of the desert were going along in their peaceful but ungraceful strides, unheeding the honk! honk! of the joy riders approaching in the rear. A sudden bump—a cloud of dust—a few feminine screams and more dust, and when the worst was over and the debris was cleared away, it was doubtful whether the camels or the auto had gotten the worst of it; as, in the sudden encounter, a few upper cuts from the camels hoofs had made a telling effect upon the enemy, to say nothing about the ruffled disposition of the speeders who found it was not a milk wagon they had hit, but a new experience they won't forget soon. The camels are back on the job—the auto is in the shop.

The production of "Human Hearts," with Hal Reid in his part created by him almost a score of years ago, is in preparation and will be ready for an early release.

The announcement of the fact that William B. Patten has been secured for a special production of "The Minister's Son," in film by the Selig Polyscope Co. has caused no little comment, and will be looked forward to with favor by every exhibitor in the East, South and Middle West, through which territory he has toured for the past twelve years with his various productions.

The Selig Polyscope Co. has in preparation a production that will cost more money and more time in perfection and detail than any picture yet attempted in the moving picture field. To say that this film will prove a surprise, is putting it mildly. It will represent the laborious effort of over six months and the outlay of a fabulous sum, when it comes to buying exclusive and protected rights. Few would dare attempt even the negotiations for such a deal. For obvious reasons, it is deemed advisable to withhold the announcement of the title for a short time. Watch for page announcement.

"I wonder what these camera men are doing on the train headed for Reno?"

"Don't know, Sid. See their baggage is all marked with a diamond S."

Sid (with suppressed emotion), "Can it be possible then—my dream—?"

(Dejected) "I fear the worst—"

(In desperation) "What! Ho!! he promised—"

"To h—l with the promise. The cook that set your dough used salt instead of yeast."

The train pulls out amid the cheering throng and the knight errants stand like lambs led to slaughter, amid the dying strains of the Swan Song.

In the "Vengeance of Millesaunte," now in preparation the Selig Polyscope Company presents a mediaeval story of great power and interest, affording not only opportunity for strong dramatic work, but for a very great production, including all the pageantry and state of a tournament at arms before King Louis X.

The plot hinges upon the ancient right of an accused person to demand a champion, who shall fight in the lists. The decision of the judges depends upon that champion's success or failure.

NOT FOR ADVERTISING PURPOSES.

John Collier of the Peoples Institute New York, is doing some excellent promotion work for the motion pictures. He has just returned from a big civic society convention in St. Louis, where he did much to popularize pictures, and this week he gives exhibitions before another big convention in Rochester, N. Y. It would seem that the mantle of the late Chas. Sprague Smith had fallen upon the shoulders of John Collier.

MIXING THE GAUMONTS.

The statement was made at the recent meeting of "independents" in Cincinnati, Ohio, that Gaumont had severed his relations with the Motion Picture Patents Company and would join the "independents." It was announced that this was a "great victory."

The fact of the matter is that the American Gaumont Co., organized to exploit the Gaumont Chronophone in this country, is the concern involved in the report. The person who made the announcement at the "independent" meeting failed to note the distinction. Here is the official announcement made by Mr. Herbert Blache, president and treasurer of the American Gaumont Co.:

June 23, 1910.

New York City.

Gentlemen:

We beg to inform you that the Gaumont Co. of New York has no longer any connection with the Societe des Etablissements Gaumont of Paris, or with any members of that Company, their interests having passed into the hands of new parties, at the head of whom is the President of our Company, Herbert Blache, the former Secretary and Treasurer of the Company.

The Company will continue business as heretofore, but will make considerable extensions.

Yours very truly,

NEW HOUSE FOR BROADWAY.

Saxe Opens "Times Square Theatre" With Straight Pictures—Patronage Good.

Saturday, June 25, marked the opening of the Times Square Theatre, recently erected at 1446 Broadway, New York City. It is situated next the New Albany Hotel, Broadway and 41st street, in the very heart of the theatrical district. For the purpose of installing this show, the entire building was leased and remodeled. All floors were torn out to make room for a high, well ventilated auditorium.

The walls, both inside and outside, are covered with sheet metal work. The front is a handsomely designed tower effect with box office protruding and swinging doors either side. Hundreds of Tungsten lamps light the towers clear to the apex and dazzle the passer-by. Even more lights are to lend brilliancy to this tower, according to Manager Eugene R. Lee, who says that before he is satisfied, the front will be a second "Dreamland" towers and one of the sights of Broadway.

Interior decorations of stamped sheet metal, strictly fireproof. The color scheme is dark green—handsome green theatre chairs, and green incandescent bulbs giving plenty of light to the auditorium but shaded from the screen and from the eye by artistic green shades. The auditorium which seats 250 persons has a balcony seating about one fourth that number. Above the balcony is a specious operating booth, thoroughly fireproof. A Motiograph projecting machine is used, giving an extremely clear, steady and well defined picture.

M. H. Saxe, owner of the Times Square Theatre was formerly connected with the Saxe Film Exchange, 14th street, New York City. He is an old one at the moving picture game. He believes in a straight "picture show," eliminating vaudeville entirely. Mr. Saxe runs four reels of licensed pictures and one illustrated song. He says that person after person has expressed the opinion after visiting his place that they were very glad to find a theatre devoted entirely to pictures and not tainted with the lower class of vaudeville.

drawn so heavily had legitimate attractions been of the right type and of the character desired by the theatre-going public. Mr. Emery also claims that just as there are cycles of prosperity and periods of depression in legitimate theatrical business, so there are times when new types of entertainment are the fad, rising rapidly to their zenith and then disappearing in oblivion. Mr. Emery classes moving pictures among the fads and fortells for them a brilliant, but short life; and, in the same breath, he prophesies that legitimate attractions will be more popular and greater money-makers in a short time than ever before.

I quite agree with my friend in his optimistic outlook for the legitimate, with which I was connected for a number of years, just as I agreed with his statement that legitimate business now suffers because due intelligence is not bestowed on the devising and selection of what legitimate theatre-goers want. But I showed him that, so far from being a fad, the moving picture has been "coming" for many years and that, having arrived and finding such fruitful soil, it has become so firmly established and well grounded in public opinion that its expansion and permanency have long since been assured.

Is it not strange that so many people connected with the drama and kindred entertainments are enemies of the moving picture, or, if not enemies, at least depreciators? It is the old "dog-in-the-manger" policy and must be expected; and just as surely is it to be expected that the coddled old dog must cease his growling and be content to lie in his own corner.

The moving picture has been an actual benefit to real legitimate road attractions, in that it has been instrumental in driving the misrepresented, the weak and the undeserving attractions from the road. No longer can a low-browed, so-called "manager" gather together a few nondescript barnstormers and a few sheets of stock paper and hike to the small towns to "skin the Rube." And no longer can that other gentleman of more crafty type get in his fine work—the fellow who sends out an agent with "phony" printing, making people believe that a metropolitan show is coming along, then engages a few "hamfats" of both sexes and sends them out to play at first class theatres at first-class prices. I have seen all this done and rejoice that the picture theatre has made such rascality impossible.

The Henry Millers, the Sotherns and others in their class can ill-afford to speak lightly of the moving picture; but, whether they praise or blame, they can affect but little its triumphant progress.

Chicago Film Brevities.

H. R. Blair, popularly known as Russ Blair, owner of the Princess Theatre, Elkhardt, Ind., was a visitor last week. Mr. Blair has been an engineer on the L. S. & M. S. R. R. for thirty-nine years, and has been engaged, on the side, in the moving picture business for one year. That is, he owns the Princess, but leaves its management to Chas. Baker. The princess uses straight moving pictures and songs. The house will be run all summer, as the ventilation is excellent, the air being changed every seven minutes by exhaust fans.

The Gaiety Theatre, of Galesburg, Ills., will be finished early in July. The new house will have a capacity of 700, and will be opened as soon as finished. This theatre is on the Thielen circuit and is the tenth in number managed by Mr. Thielen.

F. W. Lynch informs me that advance copies of Kalem releases for the week of June 27th, which have already been shown to Exchange men here, have been commented upon most favorably. "The Miner's Sacrifice," a thrilling Western drama, was released Wednesday, June 29, and "The Colonel's Errand," an Indian story will be released Thursday, June 30. Both these films are said to be equal to Kalem's best efforts.

Bill Wright, the hustler incarnate of the Kalem Co., spent Saturday and Sunday, June 25 and 26, in Chicago. He came here after visiting exchange men at Pittsburg and Cincinnati. He reports business and conditions very satisfactory throughout the section visited by him.

PICTURE MEN WIN OUT.

The moving picture shows won a battle at the State House, Baton Rouge, La., June 16, last night, without representation. It was in the instance of the Moise Charity Hospital bill, which provides for an increase of the licenses from $25 to $50. Mr. Sturges Q. Adams, attorney for the Board of Administrators of the hospital, spoke vigorously for the favorable report of the bill when it came up before Mr. Gay's City Affairs Committee, but when it came to a vote it failed by one vote, the committee standing five to four.

COMPLAINS OF BOY OPERATORS.

At a meeting of the Motion Picture Machine Operators' Union of San Francisco, Cal., on June 18th, it was said that the Union in that city was on the down grade and that unless something was done immediately the organization would soon be a thing of the past.

THE JOYS OF AN EXCHANGE MAN.

President Wood, who was the principal speaker at the meeting, stated that a number of proprietors of nickeldeons had recently adopted the plan of hiring boy operators and taking them into the firm. This makes it impossible for the Union to demand that they become members of the organization.

It has been found in many places that these operators were under age and were operating machines without the least knowledge of the mechanical departments. Pretty soon, there will be some big explosion to take place in which some one will be hurt, and then public sentiment will again be brought to bear against the motion picture theatre. It is the purpose of the Union to only have licensed operators who have passed a thorough examination and know fully how to operate such machines.

RECENT SLIDE RELEASES

Synopsis of Production Issued by the Leading Song and Novelty Slide Makers.

DE WITT C. WHEELER.

"DREAMING OF YOU."—Poem by Tell Taylor; music by J. M. Wilcockson; published by Wilcockson Music Co., Hammond, Ind. One of the "dreamy" songs which, when of a high order, always please, as this one is sure to do. The waltz melody of the chorus is in a beautiful theme and captivating in the extreme. The slides are really remarkable for their beauty. They illustrate not only the song, but illustrate what a beautiful country this is and what picturesque spots there are in it, if one only has the artistic eye to find them.

"I WANT SOME ONE TO FLIRT WITH ME."—Words by Sterling and Costello; music by Albert Von Tilzer; published by York Music Co., New York. Sterling and Costello, both individually and combined, always produce good lyrics and this song is no exception. The music by Albert Von Tilzer has made this song a hit and one hears it everywhere. Slides that suit the lyrics to the letter are produced in Wheeler's usual style, including several novelties.

"LOVE KEEPS THE WHOLE WORLD YOUNG."—Music by Will L. Becker; words by Saul M. Aronson; published by M. Witmark & Sons, New York. A waltz ballad of the usual high order published by this house. Illustrations for this song surpass anything yet turned out by Mr. Wheeler. There are not only more novelties, but novelties of a new order that have never before been seen in a song slide. The first good point about the set is that it illustrates the lyrics perfectly. Secondly, much of the scenery was obtained on one of Mr. Wheeler's trips out west; if you don't know what a Colorado sunset is, see this. Thirdly and lastly, the posing is excellent and the coloring rich, true to nature, and very pleasing.

"I'LL BUILD A FENCE AROUND YOU."—Published by F. A. Mills, New York. This is Mills' latest hit and is said to be a "peach." Illustrations by Mr. Wheeler might be called "the set of novelties." By novelties we mean pictures that are out of the class of straight or ordinary pictures; pictures that are the slide manufacturer's own conception of an idea to illustrate a lyric in an appropriate but clever manner. If all ballads were to be illustrted simply with two lovers in different positions, the illustrated song would soon become monotonous. Novelties are now the backbone of the set.

"BACK TO THE BLEACHERS FOR MINE."—Words by Harry Breen; music by Albert Von Tilzer; published by York Music Co., who last summer published the baseball hit of the season, viz., "Take Me to the Ball Game." This year they have outdone themselves, as "Back to the Bleachers for Mine" is far better. The song itself is excelled only by its own illustrations, which are clever, humorous to a high degree, and altogether the work of a master hand. To say it is out of the ordinary is expressing mildly the quality of this set. Nearly every slide is a novelty and is comedy. Baseball "fans" galore. A set that should please all in this baseball-mad country."

"SILVER BELL."—An Indian ballad; words by Edward Madden; music by Percy Wenrich; published by Jerome H. Remick & Co., who consider this song the best in their catalogue, and their summer hit. Their predictions seem to be verified, as the story as well as the melody is captivating. A set of slides with the soft moonlight effects, gorgeous costumes, taken in country abounding in natural beauty, is produced by the ancient firm of De Witt C. Wheeler.

"THE MAN IN THE SILVERY MOON."—Words by A. Seymour Brown; music by Nat. D. Ayer; published by J. H. Remick & Co. The story tells of a moonsick maiden who imagines the "man in the moon" is real. While the idea is not a new one, the writer has worked out his theme in a novel way. The illustrations are a set of highly artistic poses that are a credit to the song slide business. They are clever in conception, beautifully colored, and contain many new ideas in the form of novelties. These novelties are far different, far more delicate and beautiful, and worked out more skillfully, than novelties heretofore produced. It would seem that earnest effort had been employed to make this set one of the best ever published.

SCOTT & VAN ALTENA.

"SOMEBODY ELSE, IT'S ALWAYS SOMEBODY ELSE."—A pathetic little love ballad set to excellent music by Geo. W. Meyer. Words by Jack Drislane; published by F. B. Haviland, New York. A set of slides have been produced for this song that not only contain a more than usual number of the Scott & Van Altena novelties, but are posed for by unusually handsome models in picturesque places, and are colored with good taste by some one with a thorough knowledge of the subject. It is a pleasure to look at this set.

"HELLO, MISS LIBERTY."—March song with music by Fred Fischer; published by the Fred Fischer Music Pub. Co., New York. Words by Thomas J. Gray tell of how Americans, after they have traveled over the various countries abroad, are glad to see their own land again. The slides include many scenes of European countries that are both interesting and instructive.

"BLAZE OF GLORY."—A fine march song by Abe Holzman; published by Leo. Feist. The illustrations are striking scenes, portraying the glories of the good, old U. S. A.; deeds which we have done and of which we are justly proud. Striking novel effects with fine photographic quality and coloring make this a set which all will surely admire.

"THE SONG THAT FINDS AN ECHO IN MY HEART."—Words by Richard Buch; music by Theo. Morse; published by Theo. Morse Music Co. A sentimental ballad with beautiful illustrations. There keeps passing through the mind of the youth the strains of that old-time air, "O, My Darling Nellie Gray," recalling his Southern home and friends. Fine models, charming settings, beautiful coloring, with the usual novelties, make this a very fine set.

"YOU FOR ME WHEN YOUR WIFE'S AWAY."—Words by A. Longbrake; music by Ed. Edwards; published by The Jos. Morris Co. A song with comedy and comedy illustrations. One girl prefers the company of another's husband, consequently the title, music and slides that are full of funny situations, with characteristic high quality of work throughout from poses to coloring. Novelties, too, make this set an attractive one.

"TOOT YOUR HORN KID, YOU'RE IN A FOG."—A novelty song with words by Jos. Mittenthal; music by Jos. M. Daly, and published by Daly Music Co. Obadiah, a country lad, loves little Mary, but to all his pleadings comes her answer of "Toot, Your Horn, Kid, You're in a Fog." Of course the illustrations are fine, with plenty of variety and novel effects. In the last slide Mary and her city friends shout to Obadiah as they fly past his auto in their faster machine.

"IF THIS ROSE TOLD YOU ALL IT KNOWS."—Words by Jack Mahoney; music by Theo. Morse; published by Theo. Morse Music Co. A pretty sentimental ballad with a very sweet tone. Most of the pictures for this set were taken in gardens, making the set a most desirable one, as it abounds in beautiful flowers of all colors, a veritable riot of color. The models are good, exceptionally so. Novelties, too, are not lacking.

"YOU CAN'T FEEL LONESOME WHEN YOU'RE BY YOURSELF."—Words by Arthur Longbrake; music by Ed. Edwards; published by The Jos. Morris Co., N. Y. A tuneful ballad, treating of a lonely youth whose sweetheart had left the day before, never to return. The slides for this song show him in his loneliness, and also during the happy days when they were together. The youth and maid are fine looking and their choice of "loving nooks" is exceptionally good, as the slides will show. The coloring effect is beautiful and the set contains, as usual, novelties.

"HURRAH! FOR THE SUMMERTIME."—Words by Geo. Whiting; music by Harry Von Tilzer; published by Harry Von Tilzer Music Pub. Co. This song has a most rousing air, having already made a hit. The story is about four men who have just put their wives on the train for the country and are jubilant over it. The song is great, so are the slides. The remarkable effects shown in some of the slides of this set are truly wonderful. The set winds up with the men riding swiftly away for a "high old time" on Halley's Comet.

ALFRED L. SIMPSON.

"DARKEY MOON."—Written by Jones and Deeley and Stanley Murphy; published by Shapiro. A good ballad telling the love story of lover and his sweetheart from youth to age. Simpson has made a set of slides that is certainly the kind of work he excells in. The models are not the ordinary "coons," but the real plantation darkies in real Southern surroundings.

"THE KISS OF SPRING."—Words by Phil Staats, composer of "Some Day When Dreams Come True"; music by Walter Rolfe; published by Walter Jacobs, Boston, Mass. This is one of the song hits of the season. The lyric is of great poetical merit, and the music truly classic. Simpson has selected a beautiful girl for his subject and has made a great set of pictures of true artistic merit.

"WHEN THEY GATHER THE SHEAVES, MARY DEAR."—A simple ballad of the pastoral type, set to an appealing and appropriate melody; words are by C. M. Dennison; music by that ever-popular composer, J. Fred Helf; published by the J. Fred Helf Pub. Co. These qualities, combined with the artistic slides Simpson has made for this dainty little ballad, are sure to make a hit with any audience.

"IF I MUST SAY FAREWELL, KATE LET ME KISS YOUR LIPS GOODBYE."—Words by Robert F. Roden; music by J. Fred Helf; published by Helf Pub. Co. A very fine ballad in the best style of the above-named composers, who are so well known to the amusement loving public. The slides are very beautiful and are in the best style of Simpson. The photography is great, the coloring exquisite.

"MY SUNDAY GIRL."—Lyric by Earle C. Jones; music by N. S. Carter; published by J. H. Aufderheide Publishing Co., Indianapolis, Ind. The hero of this ballad has indeed a great many strings to his bow, but his "Sunday Girl" is the only one whom he really loves, as is told in very dainty way, and Simpson has made a pretty set of slides, pretty grils, clever posing, amid beautiful surroundings.

THE HENRY B. INGRAM CO., KINGSTON, N. Y.

"TELL HER I LOVE HER SO."—De Fayes beautiful ballad sung by Brignoli, Patti, Guille and many other famous singers. This song will never die. It is one of the grandest love songs ever written and is a favorite wherever good ballad singing is appreciated.

"WHEN THE ROSES KISSED THE AUTUMN LEAVES GOOD BYE."—One of James Brockman's best songs: published by the Seminary Music Co., New York. A song full of sentiment and pathos.

"I'M GOING MAD OVER YOU."—A plaint of a disappointed lover, published by the Gotham Attucks Co., New York. A good song and pretty pictures made in the Shawangunk Mountain in Ulster County.

"FOR THE LAST TIME CALL ME SWEETHEART."—Song by Cecil Mack and Louise A. Johns; published by the Gotham Attucks Co., New York. A ballad of high merit, beautiful music and ought to be a classic. The pictures for this song were taken on the private estate of Mr. James McElhone, at Ellenville, New York, and are unexcelled in their quality and finish.

"ANYWHERE."—Jeff Branen and Bert Grant's great song; published by the Jeff T. Branen Music Co., New York. Beautiful pictures posed in the romantic Fantinekill Glen in Ulster County, N. Y. Their romantic beauty is hard to equal.

"RED, RED, ROSE."—Song by Alex. Rogers and Will Marion Cook. This is the famous song sung by Abbie Mitchell Cook in Williams and Walker's production, "Bandanna Land." The pictures for this song were made in the famous Pink Laurel Grove on the estate of Tommy Shields, the old New York politician, way up on the edge of Sundown, in the Lackawack Valley, New York. These pictures are surpassing in their beauty.

"LENORE."—Beautiful high class ballad by Henry B. Ingram. The theme for this song was taken from the sad romance of Heloise and Abelard. This song has been sung by some of the best singers in

Released July 4th, 1910

THE PURGATION

A Regeneration, with Love the Mediator

In this Biograph subject is shown the moral influence of love over an unfortunate, misguided youth. He enters the house to steal, but encounters a sleeping girl, who has dozed beside the crib of her baby sister, where she is keeping vigil through a spell of illness. The sight of purity and innocence arouse higher thoughts and he determines to put the past behind him. However, his determination is put to test, and he through a series of trying incidents remains adamant in his high purpose, and at times when his trials are the severest his determination is the firmest.

Approximate Length, 988 Feet

Released July 7th, 1910

A MIDNIGHT CUPID

Love's Messenger in a New Guise

Here is a young man of wealth bored by the artificiality of social life. He finds a drunken tramp who has a letter in his pocket begging him to return to his home in the country from whence he came when but a small boy. The idea to take the tramp's place in the country is irresistible, and so he goes disguised as the tramp to take his place. Here he falls in love with the pretty daughter of a farmer, and all goes well until the real fellow turns up. An elopement is resorted to, the girl not knowing the position of her new sweetheart. She, of course, is amazed, as is her father, who pursuing, enters just after the marriage ceremony is over. The old man is delighted at becoming the father-in-law of a man of station.

CASUAL COMMENT

NOT all Americans are good sports. That must be the conclusion any disinterested person will arrive at in view of the rumpus that has been kicked up over the defeat of Jeffries by Johnson. The talk about race prejudice is all rot; it's just a case of "sore head" with the majority of the fellows who are objecting to the exhibition of the Johnson-Jeffries contest pictures. Their "holler" would have been all the other way if Jeffries had won. Now, why can't they take their medicine like men and view the matter in a sensible light. Because a few drunken bums have attempted a demonstration in one or two cities, the truth of which has been greatly exaggerated by the newspapers, it is proposed to prohibit the exhibition of the pictures of the contest for fear that there will be more rioting. The truth of the matter is that those who propose to stop the pictures are angry because a white man has been whipped by a "nigger."

So far as the question of race supremacy is concerned the contest has proved nothing more than the fact that Johnson was a better man than Jeffries. Neither men are representative, but as a news event the pictured story of the meeting will have real interest and appeal to the thousands of people who were unable to attend the event itself at Reno.

The strangest features of this ephemeral protest is the attitude of some newspapers. Notable among these is the New York Times which editorially asserts that because the fight is a thing prohibited by law the pictures of it should also be prohibited. Now, the New York Times as a great newspaper, took particular pains to provide its readers with a minute account of the fight. It advertised at great length that an exprize fighter of renown had been engaged to report the event and that its readers would have the best obtainable story. When the event took place the Times printed the story with great exactness.

As a matter of fact the pictures belong to the same category of World's information as the newspaper accounts; the only difference is in the method of telling the story. But, if any one should suggest to the Times' editor that he should bar the story from his columns because the flight was barred from New York state he would laugh at the proposer. The Times' editor would take the position, also that by giving publicity to such events he assists in abolishing them. This is not the real reason for the Times printing the news of the fight, but it is what the editor will say if you corner him. The fact is that he did it to sell his paper.

There is no attempt on the part of the picturemen to claim that they are making the pictures in the interests of anyone or thing other than themselves; consequently the Times' editor intimates that they are "low speculators." If they wanted to assume the high moral position of the Times man they might say with greater reason that the effect of the pictures would go farther to abolish such events than would the newspaper stories.

But all this is beside the question. There will be a fine series of pictures of the fight—the finest that have ever been taken of any event of public interest. Those pictures will eventually be exhibited in every city of importance in the world. Even the officials and editors who just now are filling columns of newspaper space in denouncing them will drop around to see the fight pictures, and when they see them, will agree that they are GREAT.

"Fight pictures successfully taken, giving choice of three negatives by different angle lenses. Knockout round probably the most sensational and spectacular scene ever pictured.

"Three Essanay, three Selig and four Vitagraph cameras on the job, ten in all, completely covering everything of interest. Wonderful set of preliminary pictures of principals training and of notable sporting celebrities which will, with fight pictures, constitute the most remarkable motion pictures of their class the world has ever seen.

"Vitagraph staff coming home on Overland Limited with Jack Johnson's party. Ovations, celebrations, brass bands and speeches at every stop. We are taking pictures all along the route. Will arrive in New York on Friday."

What do you know about that?

A LITTLE side excursion to the town Lubin owns for a Fourth of July vacation gave us a glimpse of the wonderful strides being made by the Lubin Manufacturing Co. We regret that the work of equipment of the new plant was not sufficiently advanced to enable us to tell the whole story at this time, but we wish to assure our readers that when the truth does come out it will give them something to think about.

Just to prepare you for what is coming we will say that the new Lubin studio building is big enough to enclose any other studio in the United States. It is a whale for size. Many novel features enter into its structure. Then there is the manufacturing building where the negative films are developed and prints made. It will have an enormous capacity—greater than there would seem to need of. But the Lubin folks have calculated that America is destined to supply the World with motion pictures and that their plans will be none too big.

When all this big establishment is completed the very interesting story of it will be told in The Film Index. It will help you to appreciate how big the motion picture business really is and what efforts the licensed manufacturers are making to produce the finest pictures in the world.

Of course we had to see "Pop" Lubin, but to get a look at him one is obliged to go over to Atlantic City, where he lives. Although he has a fine home in the Chelsea section on Atlantic avenue, "Pop" Lubin really lives on the Boardwalk, and every man, woman and child are on speaking terms with him. It takes him a longer time to walk from the Ilesworth to Young's hotel than any ordinary man would require to go the length of the Boardwalk; and that does not mean that he is not a good traveler, either. But its "Hello Pop," "Morning, Mr. Lubin," "Ho, Lubin," about every other step from the time he sets foot on the promenade until he finally tears himself away and hustles home to get a little rest. That's what keeps him looking so young.

On the occasion of our visit there was a squad of Lubin camera men at the "old pier" preparing to take pictures of the airship flights which took place on July 4. Whether the pictures of that event were a success or not we have not heard. The flights were not as successful as was hoped owing to a strong breeze and the large crowds which fairly swarmed over the machines.

"Pop" will tell you that he is out of the picture business and that he has turned it over to his son-in-law, Ferd Singhi; and to a great extent, this is true, although Mr. Lubin still keeps a weather eye on the proceedings. Mr. Singhi, however, has succeeded in acquiring a wide knowledge of the art of picture making and is practically the executive head of the Lubin Mfg. Co. The works are operated under his direction with the aid of a staff of capable department heads. The results are shown in the excellent pictures which the company is producing these days. Look out for even better things when the new plant gets into commission.

E. H. MONTAGUE, otherwise "Monty," well known in film circles in the United States, went to Chicago for the Fourth. (As if it were not hot enough in New York.) He has returned with a wild yarn about a new toddie said to have been invented by Jim McQuade, The Index's Chicago man. "Monty" claims that McQuade has all the patent and other rights on this toddie and that he was endeavoring to sell them to two of the "licensed" manufacturers of Chicago on the Fourth. Owing to the fact that the Chicago licensees are active members of the "Blue Ribbon Movement" (Pabst), there was nothing doing on Mac's toddie proposition; they even refused to pay royalties. The basis of the idea is that the sugar must be dissolved by the melting ice instead of water. The objection was that one would have to go to a hotter place than Chicago or choke before the tipple could be prepared, and none of the film men seemed quite ready to go to that place just yet.

CONCERNING lighted picture theatres, or, as The Film Index has termed them "light houses," the editor had the pleasure of observing the effect of the latest appliances intended to remove the chief objection to motion pictures—darkness.

Every picture theatre manager knows that parents dislike to have their children attend dark picture theatres.

Every picture theatre manager knows that the reason the law forbidding children under sixteen years of age to attend picture theatres un-

MAX LINDER, THE INIMITABLE

Celebrated and Versatile Pathe Artist

AH, there's Max! Now for something good!" It's thus that the appearance of one of our most popular motion picture artists is greeted in every one of our motion picture theatres that are fortunate enough to show films in which the versatile French artist is seen. American audiences have a real affection for him and cheer and cheer him again and again just as if he could hear and appreciate what a hit, he—with his rare talent and inimitable ways—has made with them. When the fact of the matter is that his American friends have never heard his voice, never shaken his hand nor have they ever seen anything but his picture, and still if you were to ask any one of them if he knew Max, he would answer, "Sure I know Max—and a bully good actor he is too, and one a fellow never gets tired of seeing." It's for these warm American friends of the handsome artist that we are writing this sketch, because we know that they will be deeply interested in hearing something of the life and fortunes of their favorite.

MAX LINDER, THE INIMITABLE.

In the first place Max Linder does not come from a long line of the disciples of the great Thespis. His father is the owner of vast vineyards near the city of Bordeaux, France, and holds the position of Mayor of the town in which he lives. Consequently, he is a personage of some importance and wealth and, naturally, entertained for his son all sorts of high ambitions. He tried in every way to discourage the latter's taste for the stage, but Max's longing for the footlights was altogether too strong to be destroyed by his father's ideas on the matter and after many discussions between father and son the former permitted his boy to take the course at the Conservatory of Bordeaux. After completing this course Max decided to lose no time in establishing himself in Paris, for, notwithstanding the temptations held out by his father, Max remained firm, disliking as he did the very smell of his father's wine vats and longing for "gay Paree," where he was sure to find a field for his unusual talents, which even his enemies (if he ever had any) could not but admit were of no mean order. So he finally shook the dust of the good old town of Bordeaux from his heels, leaving behind him many a broken heart among the rich beauties of the place, only to break more hearts among the beauties of the capital.

It was not until Max Linder was settled in Paris that he thought of posing for motion pictures. This line of work appealed to him on account of his being a pantomimist by nature, instinct and choice. We all know that Max can express every emotion without making a sound. With the thought of the cimematograph the world renowned name of Pathe Freres naturally suggested itself to him and soon the big French firm and Max came together, and we all know the result.

The price paid to Max Linder is probably the highest paid any motion picture artist in the world. This is not surprising, as he not only writes his own scenario, but stages and directs them. His contract with Pathe Freres allows him to appear at the Theatre des Varietes in Paris and also at the Olympia. At present he is playing in a very unusual kind of a piece at the latter theatre. In this play Max is seen both on the screen and on the stage. The audience has become impatient on account of the non-arrival of their favorite as it is long past the time for the play to begin, when suddenly their attention is attracted by seeing the one they are waiting for appear on the screen, hurrying from his house in a great state of excitement, fearing he will be late for the theatre.

Fate seems against him, however, for the more he hurries the greater the difficulties that come in his way to prevent him from getting to his destination. Finally the lights go up and then, to the surprise of all, there is Max in the flesh, tattered and torn after his adventurous trip on which the audience has accompanied him. He greets them and tries to explain, but they let him see that they know all about it and, of course, have nothing but sympathy for him. So the play goes on.

The most remarkable thing about Max Linder is his wonderful versatility. Now we see him as the man of the world, and then again as the timid lover, and still again as a ferocious bandit. Each of these roles he plays to perfection. He can be funny—oh, so funny! And then again he can make his audiences sob and weep when the occasion calls for it. In some pictures you look with admiration upon his wonderful physique and the amazing feats of strength he accomplishes with such ease. It is not generally known that Max Linder is not only a thorough all around sportsman, but the champion amateur crack swordsman of France, which means something in a land where the art of fencing is carried to such a high degree of excellence.

Sometime, perhaps, Max Linder may come to America. And how we hope that "sometime" is not too far away. Still we fear that a bridge of gold will have to span the waters that divide the French and American shores before he will be tempted to leave his native land where he has gathered such laurels of success. There is one thing certain, however, when Max Linder does decide to visit America there will be a welcome awaiting him of that hearty kind that Americans know so well how to give to those for whom they have a high regard and esteem.

ANNUAL CONVENTION OF I. A. T. S. E.

The annual convention of the International Alliance of Theatrical Stage Employes, of the United States and Canada, met in Washington, D. C., June 11. The convention will last one week. Seventeen members from the New York branches chartered a car which will leave New York, on the evening of July 9. Headquarters of the convention will be at the National Hotel, Pennsylvania avenue.

MINISTERS INTERESTED.

Within the past 30 days the Kalem Co. has received inquiries regarding motion pictures from about 20 different pastors of churches located all over the United States and we presume all the other manufacturers have also received letters of inqiury from church people.

This indicates a trend in the right direction and proves what we have all maintained that the motion picture industry is still in its infancy and a better class of people are turning towards our enterprise and are taking it up with considerable gain and pleasure to themselves.

THE ROOSEVELT PICTURE PROVES A MONEY MAKER.

Wherever the Roosevelt picture is being properly put on, that is with a descriptive lecture, it is proving a money maker both for the exchange and the exhibitor.

A. R. Boone of the Theatre Film Supply Co. of Birmingham, Ala., reports that the Roosevelt picture is making a good showing for his exchange. In 42 days the picture earned for the Theatre Film Supply Co. $820.00 through his territory and is continually working and the picture proves its popularity wherever shown. Return engagements have been booked in many instances. This indicates what can be done with a feature film when handled correctly.

Several other exchanges have reported even greater earnings.

CLEVER COMEDY DRAMA

Edison Version of Rex Beach's Story "With Bridges Burned"

IT is in the line of comedy-drama that the best pictures produced these days appear. Those little glimpses of human life; of the real events in the existences of real people. Sometimes they run dangerously close to the tragic; at others there are tense dramatic moments, but usually they swing back to the saving humor of the situation and afford one the pleasure of happy reflections.

The Edison players have but recently turned out one of these delightful comedies in a picture adaptation of Rex Beach's story, "With Bridges Burned." The title is ominous: it suggests portentious events. The term "Burning the Bridges" is coupled with conquest at arms when the invading army strikes into the enemy's country with a determination to conquer or die in the attempt. There's no chance for retreat "with bridges burned." The phrase signifies a desperate chance.

This little definition may lead the reader to believe that the picture is another Edison war story. Not necessarily; are there not desperate chances taken daily in the lives of men and women? Have not many of us risked all on a single throw? Have we not gone into a venture "With Bridges Burned," thinking only of success? That's the thought in Mr. Beach's story and it concerns only a young civil engineer and his young wife, who are just beginning the battle.

The picture opens on the office of a firm of contractors. Business has been bad and economy is the rule. Retrenchment hits one of the young men in the firm's employ, who loses his position. He comes to protest; he has a wife dependent upon his efforts and asks to be retained. The senior member of the firm, loth to decide alone, calls in the vigorous junior partner who "hands it" to the young man "straight" and disposes of him with farewell hand shake, taking all the protest out of him.

Going home very much cast down the hero of the yarn relates his experience to his young and lovely wife, who tries to cheer him up. This young woman takes an interest in her husband's business and has been keeping tabs on the newspaper ads. While he is busy holding his head in his hands, she recalls having seen an "ad" for a big contract. Quickly digging up the paper she shows it to him.

EDISON SUBJECT "WITH BRIDGES BURNED"—A HAPPY FINALE.

The contract proves to be a big project in South Africa to be let by a firm in London. It means an expensive trip to England, for this young engineer lives in New York, and with about one chance in ten thousand of winning. The hero scouts the idea—nothing to it; no money to pay expenses, etc., etc. Little wifey digs up a bank book, $1,006.06 on deposit. He still refuses to take the money. Wifey persists; she takes command of the expedition and orders the chief of the engineer corps to obey. He salutes and consents.

Its a pretty scene, rendered doubly so by the winsome sweet-faced, vivacious little wife, who is portrayed by one of the most pleasing and happy-faced women in current pictures. Impossible to mistake her or to fail to catch the spirit of her portrayals, she is convincing.

Acting under orders hubby goes to the office of his former employers and lays the plans before them. It is turned down in "one, two, three" order. No chance. He gets insistent, pounds the desk and makes the firm take notice. He exhibits his bank book; will pay his own, if they will commission him to go after the job and no risk to them if he fails. That's easy, and the firm gives him a letter of credential and good riddance.

EDISON SUBJECT "WITH BRIDGES BURNED"—SCENE SHOWING DOUBLE EXPOSURE.

Hero reports to wifey, commander-in-chief. She is elated and together they go to the bank for the coin, which is obtained with a little pleasant comedy and show of bank notes; also a glimpse of the bank book with a balance of $1.06—a "burned bridge."

A big "liner" slipping by the pier and a forlorn little woman waving a long farewell toward a ship that is fast disappearing in the haze tells of the hero's departure for London.

Arrived at the office of the London contractors young America presents himself and is reluctantly ushered to the presence of a pudgy and presumably red faced individual who is supposed to be the head of the firm. The head is skeptical, but the insistent American literally beats down all opposition and is finally given an armful of specifications and "blue prints" with the warning that he has "five days in which to do three weeks' work."

Grabbing the specifications the young engineer rushes to his hotel and is next shown after 24 hours ceaseless figuring and checking just about exhausted. As he nods with fatigue he sees a vision of his sweet-faced wife standing before him as if to urge him on by her presence, and he pitches into the work again.

In the meantime the picture takes us back to wifey. She is curled up on a bed in a dingy room of a boarding house. You see the little home has been given up—another bridge burned. She is braving the thing out in her own way all alone.

Back again to London where we find a haggard, sunken-eyed man just completing his computations with fifteen minutes to spare before the last moment for putting in his estimate arrives. He is all in after five days' toil without sleep. His head falls on his desk and he is about to forget everything when his wife's seeming presence arouses him and he grabs his papers and hastens out.

There are other bidders for this big job and one of them is on hand before the American arrives at the office of the London firm. He succeeds in inducing the chief clerk to turn on the clock, which is done by the office boy. When the American staggers in with his bid he is informed that he is too late by a minute and the clock is a silent but convincing witness to his failure. The two conspirators step to the rear of the room to await the effect of their trick.

Thoroughly beaten and exhausted the defeated hero drops his now useless papers and staggers away. As he goes the office boy quickly picks them up and conceals them in his pocket without being seen by the two conspirators.

"There you are; but that same criticism has been madeb y every one who has seen the picture and we have had many long discussions over the scene among ourselves," explained Mr. Plimpton. "Mr. Miller, who produced it, insisted that if we made that point plain we would lose the dramatic effect of sympathy for the young engineer who seemed to have failed and spoil the rest of the picture." To all of this we agreed, admitting that we had answered our own criticism, which proves how conventional one sometimes becomes by too much looking at pictures.

In point of photography the picture is excellent. It is one of those close views, possible with pictures in which few characters appear in a scene. Our only criticism being that in the young man's visions of his wife, the effect is not sufficiently "visionary." The effect was obtained by a double exposure of the negative, and while admitting the correctness of the criticism in this instance, Mr. Plimpton believed that it was something to the credit of the Edison photographers that they were able to get so sharp an image on a double exposure.

Just to show how particular the picture makers are getting these days: The scene where the two "bridge burners" draw their money from the bank was taken again after being approved because the money shown was too evidently "stage money"—a mere trifle which would be noticed only by an actor accustomed to handling that sort.

SCENE FROM EDISON SUBJECT "THE MOTHS AND THE FLAME."

The final scene is the return of the vanquished hero to his wife. He finds her in the little room. She is quickly told of the failure and the picture is one of utter despair. Just then a slatternly servant enters with a telegram, which reads "We have been awarded the contract. You are appointed resident engineer in full charge. Commence at once and draw on us for all kinds of money" or words to that effect. In a trice the scene is changed from deep despair to rapturous rejoicing and the picture is finished, leaving a decidedly good taste in one's mouth, so to speak.

In discussing the picture with Mr. Horace G. Plimpton, superintendent of the Edison production department, we expressed the opinion that the manner in which the bid, which the young engineer believed to be barred by the time limit, was put through was not clearly shown.

"How do you think it got through?" Mr. Plimpton shot at us.

"Why, the boy, of course," we replied as quickly.

Another Jolly Comedy.

"The Moths and the Flame" is the title of a forthcoming Edison comedy which will get an abundance of laughs. The Moths are the three daughters of a painter. The Flame is a violinist who lives just across the area. The girls think they are in love with him and take every chance to gaze upon his soulful, hatful of hair.

The violinist proves to be a married man with a fat wife and six children, but the girls do not discover the sad fact until they have made themselves sublimely ridiculous.

Its high-class and you'll like it.

"N-I" FILM GETS LIMIT TEST

Comes Through Vitagraph Fire, Bent and Twisted, But Wouldn't Burn—Some Reels Undamaged

Conclusive proof that the new "N-I" film stock made by the Eastman Company, and now in general use among the manufacturers of licensed film, will not burn. The supreme test was given in the case of the fire in the offices of the Vitagraph Company, which happened Saturday afternoon, July 2. The fire was occasioned by an electric spark from a switch igniting a reel of old inflammable stock. Owing to the fact that the company had some old stock stored at their exchange offices there was sufficient fire to ignite the woodwork of the offices and to extend to other floors of the building, burning out the window frames. The principal damage was done by water.

While all the old stock was burned to a crisp, the reels of "N-I" stock did not burn. The emulsion was melted and the film destroyed in so far as its value as a picture was concerned, but the base remained. Where it had been subjected to great heat it was warped and twisted and scorched into a useless roll of film, but it did not ignite.

Several reels which were not in the hottest of the fire were found to be in perfect condition and were put in service on the following Tuesday. The desk upon which these reels were found was badly scorched, which proves that they were subjected to considerable heat.

As all licensed pictures made during the past six months or more are of "N-I" stock, exhibitors may look upon this test as proof that the danger from film fires has been reduced to nothing.

The Vitagraph Company is continuing its exchange business in offices on the ground floor until repairs can be made in the old offices. The loss has not been ascertained.

SCOTT A WINNER IN AUTO CONTEST.

John D. Scott of the song slide manufacturing firm of Scott & Van Altena, New York City, is a confirmed automobile enthusiast. So much so that when he gets a vacation (song slide people do take a vacation once in a while in spite of their claim to be always rushed to death) he spends it in his Premier automobile.

On June 11, the Premier Company held a rather unusual touring contest. A 1910 model Premier car, filled with automobile experts, was driven from Philadelphia to Cape May, N. J., at a rate of speed the experts considered comfortable, avoiding unnecessary bumps and observing speed laws in the different places through which they passed. The record of time the trip consumed was sealed and locked up to be held as a model time for that trip. The several hundred owners of Premier cars made the same trip in what they considered a comfortable rate of speed. Our friend Scott, who came within two minutes of the model time, won fourth prize, four Goodyear tires, valued at over $200.

"I certainly do like these unexpected 'bonus things,' " said Mr. Scott the other day; "Its like picking money off a tree."

He's right. His prize was picked from a tree. (Rubber).

NEW PICTURE HOUSE FOR SOMERSWORTH.

Another picture house will be in operation in the near future at Somersworth, N. H., when the new block on Washington street, is finished. The new building will be on the site of the old Empire House. When the building is completed the first floor will be fixed up as a first class motion picture house.

UNCLE TOM'S CABIN

Vitagraph Picture Version of Mrs. Stowe's Famous Story

UNDER the assumption that you never can get too much of a good thing "Uncle Tom's Cabin" has in the hands of the resourceful dramatist (?) been made a quadrupled farce; four "Uncle Toms"; four "Evas;" four "Topsys;" four everything and everybody until a person really familiar with the story would feel like killing every mother's son of them with little Eva and all the rest.

It has been the purpose of the Vitagraph Company to present in motion pictures a dramatized version of the story as written by Harriet Beecher Stowe and they have made good their promise to give us something worth while.

Few persons appreciate the great labor of producing a faithful picture of Uncle Tom's Cabin or grasp its difficulties, some of the situations are positively hazardous in the extreme. Every detail has been carefully reproduced starting with the selling of Uncle Tom by "Mars" Shelby to the slave trader, Haley and the thrilling escape of Eliza with her child, Harry, across the floating ice on the Ohio River into the free state to save Harry from slavery and the hands of Haley to whom he has been sold.

The scene of the Ohio River filled with ice was an exceedingly difficult one to produce. It had to be done in the early spring just as the ice was breaking up. The actress impersonating Eliza showed great courage and nerve, fully realizing the dangerous undertaking as she clasped the little fellow who took the part of Harry to her bosom, she jumped on the first piece of ice; there was no turning back, she had to keep going until she got across. Then came Haley with the bloodhounds. The dogs refused to cross on the ice because the water broke the scent and they lost the trail, besides there was a heavy snow storm and it was only with the most strenuous urging that they were persuaded to make the attempt. This scene is most realistically and geographically portrayed.

The scene on the Mississippi where Uncle Tom first meets the St. Clares and little Eva are exceedingly picturesque and the handling of the small army of negroes who were drafted into the levee scene was a good sized contract in itself, particularly when two or three of them got into a scrap over the handling of a bale of cotton.

The rescue of little Eva by Uncle Tom when she falls overboard is a thrilling piece of acting and one which would give ordinary persons cold feet. You can readily imagine what it means to jump into a swift running stream and take the responsibility of bringing yourself and the rescued one safely on board.

VITAGRAPH'S "UNCLE TOM'S CABIN"—DEATH OF LITTLE EVA.

VITAGRAPH'S "UNCLE TOM'S CABIN"—LEGREE BUYS UNCLE TOM AND ELIZA.

Nothing more beautiful has ever been done in motion pictures than the scenes at St. Clare's country home on Lake Pontchartrain where Eva and Uncle Tom spent so many pleasant hours together and where Eva died. During the taking of this scene, the actress who took the part of Miss Ophelia was so overcome with emotion that she completely broke down and it was a half an hour before the picture could be finished and she was not the only one affected—everybody felt the same way and they weren't ashamed of their feelings either and answered as a commentary on the power of the acting.

Part three is full of pathos and strong climaxes. Uncle Tom is sold once more to Legree, a most brutal slave trader who treats Tom with extreme cruelty and has little more consideration for any of his slaves. It is in one of these scenes with Legree where he instructs two of his slaves to whip Tom that the little child of the actor who played "Uncle Tom" was looking at the scene, rushed forward crying: "Don't hit my papa. He ain't naughty; he's good." In the struggle between Legree and Cassie where she throttles him in the presence of Emmeline and later where Cassie and Emmeline escape from his tyranny and abuse, a person would have to be made of iron or stone to withhold an inclination to lend the two women a helping hand.

The death of poor old faithful and uncomplaining Uncle Tom after he is struck down with a savage blow from Legree just as "Young Mars George Shelby" comes to take him back to Kentucky brings the story to a very dramatic finish.

VITAGRAPH NOTES.

Now that the big fight is done settled and we have had a safe and sane Fourth, our attention can be more fully given to a consideration of a few matters of immediate importance, including "Nellie's Farm," which the Vitagraph Company released on Tuesday, July 13. This has to do with a little bit, or more correctly speaking, a big bit of the human race in the shadows of a great city, throwing some side lights on how the other half live, showing the great work of the Fresh Air Fund Society and the deprivations of the little ones who dwell in the byways of the Metropolis and how their lives are made happy by little deeds of kindness and rays of sunshine which are too seldom shed upon them.

"Her Uncle's Will," made public on Friday, July 15, is a refined comedy of more than usual sparkle in which a purse proud and pretentious father objects to his son wedding a supposedly poor girl whom he afterwards learns is rich, exposes his own weakness for riches and a secondary consideration for love and honor in matrimonial affairs.

"A Broken Symphony," will be seen (not heard) on July 16. This is one of nature's own stories in the lumber camps where the theme of a camp fiddler's unrequitted love is surrounded by the wildest and most picturesque scenery imaginable. "The Broken Symphony" is unbroken in its touching and pathetic sweetness and virile characters involved.

Last Saturday a fire occurred in the Morton Building where the Vitagraph Company's offices are located. The damage was comparatively slight and by strenuous hustling they were soon gotten in shape again and business was going on at the old stand just the same as though nothing unusual had taken place.

A comedy, a circus, a military parade, a regiment of Highlanders in kilties, bag pipers and a film full of the funniest dabs of fun are a combination hard to beat. "Twa Hieland Lads" is this and more too. Tommy Atkinson is there with all his tail feathers and a lot more oddities and novelties seldom seen in one picture and withal perfectly natural in its developments.

VITAGRAPH'S "UNCLE TOM'S CABIN"—ELIZA CROSSING THE ICE.

The two principals are two extremes; one of the lads is seven feet four tall and the other lad is five feet fat. A titter, a laugh and then a continuous laugh, that's all. The date for the appearance of this big hit is July 19.

Miss Florence E. Turner "The Vitagraph Girl" narrowly escaped a serious accident last week. She was riding with her mother in an auto, the wheel of which was struck by a passing machine. The hub was knocked off Miss Turner's car and if it had not been for the quickness of the chauffeur who stopped his auto on the instant, the results might have been fatal.

During the portrayal of "Uncle Tom's Cabin," the Vitagraph Company received this letter:

"Dear Sirs:

"If you can use a good dog in your pictures, send for me."

Referring, of course, to the several blood hounds used in the pursuit of Eliza. There are some things everlastingly popular and "Uncle Tom's Cabin," is one of the most popular. People never tire of it. It will be issued in three films or parts on July 26, 29 and 30.

"Boarding School Romance" is due on July 5. "Between Love and Honor" on the 8th and "Becket" on the 9th. These are all the best and nothing can be better than the best. Nothing more can be said than has been said about these pictures. They must be seen to be appreciated. You must have them because people must see them as soon as you can get them.

This is said for you and yours; for his and "hisn"; hers and "hern" and everybody else. They are waiting for this announcement: "Uncle Tom's Cabin" in three numbers, one, two, and three will be released Tuesday, July 26th, Friday, July 29th and Saturday, July 30.

Now For the Fight Pictures

Camera Men All Home and Picture Makers Busy With the Negatives and Prints—The J. & J. Co. Will Receive Bids For Exclusive State Rights at No. 10 Fifth Avenue.

WHEN the Pennsylvania fast train rolled into the Jersey City Station at 9 o'clock Friday morning, July 8, the last of the corps of camera men who took the pictures of the big contest at Reno on July 4th was at home again. The picture contingent left Reno on Tuesday, July 5th, and made almost a record run on the homeward trip. Johnson, the victor, came back on the same train and there was an ovation awaiting him at every stop, and the picturemen were on the job.

The Chicago contingent arrived at their destination at 1:30 o'clock Thursday. Both Selig and Essanay negatives were hustled to the factories and the work of developing and printing started. It is expected that they will have prints of the event by Saturday night.

Messrs. Rock and Blackton and the camera squad of the Vitagraph Company got busy immediately upon reaching New York. The negatives were rushed by motor car to the Flatbush studios and the entire plant was requisitioned for the work of developing the negatives. It was stated that a complete print of the Vitgraph negatives would probably be finished by Friday night.

At the Vitagraph's New York offiice Mr. Rock spent most of the day entertaining visitors with the story of his experiences in 'Frisco and at Reno. It would read like a fairy tale if we dared to put it in type. Mr. Rock displayed a police badge by which he was designated Chief of Police, the same being his official status at the ringside.

Sid Hester, representing the Johnson-Gleason share of the pictures, also came on to New York with the Vitagraph crowd, and will occupy a desk in the offices of the "J. & J. Co." while looking after those interests. For the present the "J. & J. Co." will be located at No. 10 Fifth Avenue, New York City, where all communications regarding the exhibition of the pictures of the Reno contest should be addressed.

Concerning the agitation against the exhibition of the pictures of the Johnson-Jeffries contest, it has been announced that no attempt will be made to exhibit the pictures in towns or states where adverse legislation has been passed. The pictures are no different in character from those of other similar athletic events and their exhibition will be largely in halls and theatres especially adapted for the purpose. No attempt will be made to exhibit them in houses frequented by women and children, except after due notice; in other words, no one will be compelled to look at the Johnson-Jeffries pictures without their consent.

There are thousands of people who are interested in athletics and other sporting events, and to these the pictures of the Reno contest will appeal. When the complete plans of the picturemen is announced it is believed that all opposition to the pictures will have been dissipated.

By James S. McQuade

A HOUSE divided against itself cannot stand. This is invariably true when the house—meaning a family, or, by extension, a community of interests, or a nation—is set on good, solid foundations. How much more forcibly is it true when the house is built upon sand, and still how much more forcibly is it true when the structure rests upon "hot air"!

Since last touching on the independent "outlook," I am convinced that some of the more wide-awake members have been reading the Scriptures; or that some sympathetic friend has recommended to them a careful study of the quoted sentence with which I open this letter. And, though it is difficult to imagine unanimity among the "independents" on any matter relating to film, it is evident from recent happenings that they have recognized the point of the scriptural truism.

I refer, of course, under "recent happenings" to the meeting held in New York, June 27, in which the members of the Sales Co. and of the Associated Independent Film Manufacturers jointly participated. Unlike the meetings held at Detroit and Cincinnati, this was not a convention of the Alliance. The latter organization, however, was represented in the New York meeting by C. R. Plough of the Anti-Trust Exchange and by R. G. Bachman of the Western Exchange, both of Chicago. Indeed, if my information be correct, the gentlemen just named were responsible for the gathering and, in large measure, for the results obtained by it.

The Sales Co. was represented, practically, by all of its members, as were also the Associated manufacturers, and from all reports harmony marked the deliberations. The avowed object of the meeting was to patch up existing differences, if possible, and to get down to bed rock.

In order to avoid unnecessary conflict, it was carried in open meeting, at the outset that three members should be chosen by each of the opposing factions to go into session with Messrs. Plough and Bachman and devise a plan by which they could come together. Bauman, Powers and Miles were selected to represent the Sales Co., and Ullman, Horsley and Thanhouser for the Associated Manufacturers. Mr. Plough was chosen chairman of this advisory committee.

Among the propositions agreed to were the following:

First, the reorganization of the Sales Co., by which twelve directors should be appointed instead of six, as heretofore—six directors from each faction. The directors named for the Associated Manufacturers were Thanhouser, Ullman, Magee, Horsley, Raver and Oes; the Sales Co.'s directors to remain as at present, until further action.

Second, it was agreed that the Alliance, consisting of all "independent" exchanges in the United States, in good standing, should receive film from the Sales Co., all others to be barred. All shipments are to be forwarded to exchanges, C. O. D., the exchanges to give checks for same to the delivering express companies.

Third, the assessment of $100 per week, formerly paid by manufacturers to the Sales Co., to be reduced to $50. just enough in the aggregate to pay running expenses and to eliminate any chance of an accumulated surplus, which might be diverted to the use of the directors of the Sales Co.

Fourth, the election in due time of new officers to conduct the affairs of the Sales Co., the present officials and directors to conduct its business in the interim.

Fifth, the arrangements made by the committee to go into effect July 15, in the meantime every agreement to be ratified and affairs gotten into good running order.

As the members of both sides agreed in open meeting to abide by the actions of the advisory committee, it was only necessary for the latter to announce the results which are considered binding.

Laemmle was represented at the meeting by his New York manager, Cochrane, and it is significant that he was not selected as a member of the advisory committee. Murdock, of I. P. & P. Co., fame, was absent, rumor having it that he is busily engaged in supervising that factory in New Jersey, which the best airship sleuths, as yet, have failed to discover.

The meeting of the Alliance at Niagara Falls, which was set for July 9 and 10, has been postponed until the first week in August.

"Bill" Swanson as Cook.

George Kleine, Wm. N. Selig, E. H. Montague and myself had just left the Union where lunch had been partaken July 4, on the invitation of the first mentioned gentleman, when who should rush up but "Bill" Swanson, who had just arrived in Chicago after an extended trip in the Middle West. It was in order, of course, on the glorious day mentioned, when the same flag that floats over all makes men forget business or other differences, that cordial greetings should be exchanged and the party should once more enter the hostelry to keep the fierce "independent" company during his repast.

C. R. Plough was already seated at the table and soon Eugene Cline, accompanied by a friend, joined the party. It would be a breach of journalistic good faith to narrate the rapid fire of verbal broadsides that passed between these old acquaintances, although it would make spicy reading; but the exchange of thrusts and counter thrusts had in it the bonhomie of contending forces who are resting on their guns and taking a breathing spell before again engaging in mortal combat.

Just by way of getting off dangerous ground, "Bill" Swanson told a story of his checkered life, when he was cook for the remnant of a carnival company that determined to travel by foot and wagon from a point in Colorado to New Mexico. Bill accepted the job only on the condition that if any one kicked at the food or cooking, he should be immedately relieved by the kicker.

The trip that was expected to last about 19 days was lengthened out to over five weeks by rainy weather, and the supply of food had been reduced to canned beans and corn. Do what he might in the way of atrociously violating the established rules of the culinary art, "Bill" failed to catch a word of complaint from his companions; but when the rations were run down to beans and corn he grew desperate and determined to find a victim.

While concocting the evening mess from the aforesaid ingredients, "Bill" threw two double handfuls of salt into the mixture. Then he added the water and let the fire do the rest. All were present when the meal was served except a mule puncher, an Italian of careful habits. He had gone to the spring near by for a pail of water, to assist his swallowing apparatus. Every man jack that tasted the beans and corn held his mouth tightly closed, while his eyes rolled in aching sockets, until a gulp of water assisted him in swallowing the briny morsel. Tony (the short for Antonio) returned with this pail of water and, eager to fill the void near his waist line in the quickest possible time, he held his plate level with his mouth and shoveled that cavity full in a twinkling. The first mouthful shot down like a rush of molten lead and, breathless, Tony dived for his pail. On regaining his wind, he spluttered out: "There is too d—d much salt in this stuff;" then, like a flash, came the afterthought and Tony spurted out, "But I like it." It was too late, however, and Tony was duly elected chef.

"Bill" thinks that after this, and other experiences which he classes still worse, the licensed people should not be surprised to see him weather the squalls and storms encountered in the film business. Of course, he has learned to be more truthful than he was in the old nomadic days, and some people do say that such a habit is about one of the most pernicious vices in the film business—the "independent" business, of course.

Important to Exhibitors.

The following bulletin, issued July 2 by the Motion Picture Patents Company, should be carefully read by licensed exhibitors and exchanges: "Exhibitors are notified that motion pictures and motion picture projecting machines manufactured or supplied by the Gaumont Company of New York after June 20, 1910, are not licensed by this Company and must not be used by exhibitors licensed by this Company.

"Motion pictures made by the Societe des Etablissements Gaumont of Paris, France, and imported and supplied by Geo. Kleine of Chicago are licensed and may be used by licensed exhibitors."

The Gaumont Company of New York was created to exploit the Gaumont talking machine, which was a financial failure when first placed in the hands of a Cleveland company, and afterward in New York City. Because of its ill-success the New York office was closed, and the small plant that had been established at Flushing, L. I., was shut down.

This adds another to the list of failures of the various systems of talking pictures. The Chronophone is one of the oldest and best, but has been as great a financial failure in this country as its rivals, the Cameraphone, which was handled by the Cameraphone Company, and the Synchroscope, which was advertised by Laemmle with his customary flourish of trumpets and beating of drums, and which served merely to overwhelm him with threats of numerous law suits, because he could not keep his agreements in the matter of supplying films.

In spite of periodical reports that have appeared during the past three years, George Kleine continues to market standard Gaumont films exclusively in the United States, under his license with the Motion Picture Patents Company. There is no connection between the Gaumont Company of Long Island and the Gaumont films, which are handled by Mr. Kleine.

There is a report that Mr. Gaumont is trying to straddle the fence, and that his Company has not really disposed of the talking picture in-

A NOBLE SCENIC FILM

Soon to be Released by George Kleine

James S. McQuade.

OVER in Geo. Kleine's private projecting room one day last week, I was treated to the view of a travel film, made by Gaumont, that made me put on my thinking cap. The subject was entitled "Italian Lakes," and while the film lasted—it was about half a reel—the eye was treated to a continuous series of scenic views, that for beauty, softness of outline and kaleidoscopic change I have seldom seen surpassed. But, after it was all over, and while the pleasing visual impression left on my mind were still vivid and clear, I felt there was something lacking—a something which, if present, would have contributed ten fold to my enjoyment of immediately satisfied myself that it was KNOWLEDGE.

First of all, I had been treated to a view of a picturesquely situated town, called Baveno, as the scenes presented. And, as I sat there, I it was approached in a small steamer. But I had never heard of it, although I studied geography thoroughly in my time and still retain a fair knowledge of the subject. Next, a sub title of the film announced the "Borromee Islands" in "Major Lake." Both were strange to me, and although I recalled to my mind Garda, Como, Maggiore and Leman—the principal lakes in Italy, I had never heard of Lake Major. And so on, throughout the lavish show of scenic beauties revealed in the film, my ignorance of the places visited robbed me of much delight and created dissatisfaction in my mind.

SCENE ALONG LAKE MAGGIORE.

I afterwards seized a volume of the Britannica, it being nearest to my hand, and scanned the pages under "Italy;" but Baveno, Major Lake, the Borromee islands, etc., were all conspicuously overlooked.

I next visited the Public Library, and, with the kind assistance of an attachee, I was put in touch with Baedecker's travels in Italy—Southern, Central and Northern—in three volumes. The first two did not help me; but the travels in Northern Italy gave me the information sought. There I satisfied myself that Lake Major was none other than Lake Maggiore, for the town of Baveno is on the shore of the latter. And in Maggiore I also found the Borromean Islands (not Borromee) and other places treated of by the film. Why the person responsible for placing the sub titles on this film should have named Maggiore, Major, is not clear to me yet. True, I know just as well as he, that Maggiore is the largest of the Italian lakes, and that its name is derived from "major;" but for centuries it has been known as Maggiore. The sub title should aid and not confuse the spectator. It is needless, of course, to state that George Kleine has carefully revised and corrected the sub titles and places named in this film, as is always done by his firm when necessary.

REFLECTION ON LAKE BAVENA.

The information gained from Baedecker's work gave me a greatly increased interest in the film; and, at my request, it was run off for me once more. I can assure every reader that my pleasure was so greatly enhanced that the scenes had a real fascination. All of which serves to show that, no matter how fine the scenic film, there must accompany its exhibition some knowledge of the places visited. And right here, I would strongly advocate the careful preparation of a lecture—and its clear and pleasing delivery—for every travel or scenic film, which treats of places remote, or of such other places as may not be familiar to all. The travel or scenic film will fail in its true mission—To Educate—unless those who view it can view it intelligently.

But now to view the "Italian Lakes" film intelligently.

We are aboard a small steamer, on the blue waters of Maggiore, as it approaches the small village of Baveno, on the central western shore of the lake. The boat is crowded with tourists and sightseers, and all are looking at the pretty hamlet nestling at the foot of the mountains.

Baveno is a favorite resort by reason of the commanding view it gives of the Borromean Islands. It boasts of the Villa Clara, a handsome structure built in early English style, in which the late Queen Victoria resided for several weeks in the Spring of '79, and also the crown Prince Frederick of Germany, in '87.

SCENE OF BELLE ISLE.

Fisherman's Island, the first of the Borromean islands to be touched by the steamer is the home of 300 souls, chiefly fishermen and their families. Along the shore, in the picture, fishing boats are seen with netting stretched, getting ready for the morrow. The shore of the island affords numerous picturesque glimpses.

But the piece de resistance of the film is centered in Isola Bella, which is beautiful from whatever angle viewed. This island was at one time a barren rock, on which might be seen a few scattered dwellings and a church. Count Vitaliano Borromeo changed the forbidding, sun-scorched rock into a beauty spot, a very fairyland. From 1650-1671, the building of the noble chateau that now crowns the island and the laying out of the garden which has become noted as one of the finest specimens of the old Italian style, occupied the time and taxed the resources of the Count. This garden rises in 10 terraces from the waters of the lake, the highest being 100 feet above. It is stocked with lemon trees, orange trees, cedars magnolias, eucalypti, laurels, cork trees, camphor trees and magnificent oleanders, besides numerous other luxuriant products of the South. Shell grottos, arbors and statues meet the eye at every point.

The huge chateau, the North wing of which was never finished, contains a series of handsome reception rooms, a famous gallery hung with 17th century tapestries, and many other art treasures. As viewed from the lake in the Gaumont pictures, this grand old structure and the spacious garden are clearly seen, the spectacle being impressively noble.

Lake Mergozzo, a small lake on the highway westward along the north shore of the central bay, in the West of Lake Maggiore, is next visited. The pictures of this body of water are remarkable for the water reflections shown. These are so perfect that the picture could be inverted without marring the distinctness of outline or detail. The sublimity and grandeur of the mountain scenery here hold one with the force of a great epic.

The film closes with a tinted scene showing sunset as viewed from the waters of Maggiore. This inspiring view will linger long in the minds of all who see it and is a fitting finale to a noble scenic film.

HOUSE WILL COST $75,000

Spokane Will Soon Have Expensive Motion Picture Theatre

A new large picture theatre, which will call for the expenditure of from $50,000 to $75,000 in this city, will be built in Spokane, Wash., within the near future by the People's Amusement Company of Portland.

That this large amusement company will enter the field in Spokane is the positive assurance of Melvin G. Winstock, general manager of the company.

Mr. Winstock considers that Spokane is an excellent city for the establishment of this kind of amusement houses. He says that if suitable arrangements can be made within a week or 10 days with some property owner for the erection of the theatre his company will purchase property and construct the building immediately.

This company now owns and operates 21 theatres in the Northwest, and will within a short time add three in Salem, three in Eugene ahd 10 in Spokane and other cities in Washington. This will make a total of 37 theatres controlled by the company in the Pacific Northwest.

There are 10 of these theatres in Portland, three in Seattle and others in The Dallas, La Grande, Caldwell, Idaho; Nampa, Idaho; Astoria and Albany.

Mr. Winstock has been in the Northwest 25 years and before entering the moving picture field was a newspaper man and an attorney. He was in Spokane before the fire, and many times after the fire. He assisted in the formation of the first Eagles' lodge in this city, almost 12 years ago, and also put through the deal which brought the Pantages Theatre circuit into this city.

WON'T BE READY UNTIL FALL.

A theatre with a seating capacity of 1,000 is to occupy the second floor of the new Peloquin block. It will not be ready until fall, however, The stage has a 40-foot front. The balcony is to have terraced seats. A steel ceiling of pretty design, done in panels and in such a manner as to allow the heavy overhead beams to show will give the hall a pretty and unique effect. When completed and occupied the new building will be the finest in Putnam. Pictures will be the chief attraction.

RECEPTION TO MISS TURNER

Popular Vitagraph Player Receives Ovation at Fulton Auditorium

Filled with photographs and announcements of the "Vitagraph Girl's" appearance and reception, the lobby of the "Fulton Auditorium" of Brooklyn, presented a very brilliant display. A large automobile stopped in front of the theatre and Miss Florence E. Turner, "The Vitagraph Girl" with the Vitagraph representative alighted from the tonneau and were greeted by Mr. Charles Cranides, the Manager, and a large congregation of spectators who were waiting to get a look at Miss Turner to see if she is as attractive in reality as she is in the pictures. Entering the Auditorium which was already crowded, "The Vitagraph Girl" was introduced to the audience by the representative and received a royal welcome. In response Miss Turner said: "I don't know what to say in addition to my flattering introduction to you. I don't know that I look all that has been said about me. I am glad to know I am so well thought of and I will do my best to sustain and merit your good opinions and kind appreciation of me. I thank you all and hope I shall meet you often in person as well as in the Vitagraph pictures."

This little speech was greeted with applause, three or four attendants came forward and handed Miss Turner several bouquets and baskets of flowers which almost hid her from view.

Mr. Arthur Ogden in a rich baritone voice sang the popular motion picture ballad "The Vitagraph Girl" illustrated by a series of beautiful colored slides followed by two or three Vitagraph films in which Miss Turner featured. Afterward an informal reception was given to the guest of the evening by the audience who came forward to shake her hand and make her asquaintance. Manager Cranides arranged a very delightful supper for Miss Turner and her friends and did everything possible to make things pleasant for everybody.

There is a right and a wrong way of doing things. Manager Cranides has the right one. His theatre is run right with all conveniences and comforts. It seats about three hundred; has a pipe organ for special music as well as a piano. The auditorium is large and airy and always filled with an exceptionally refined audience who are always greeted with a welcome smile or a cheerful good evening from Mrs. Crandies who is just as nice as her husband.

PICTURE OPERATORS HAVE GOOD TIME.

The members of the Moving-Picture Machine Operators' Union took possession of the Chutes, San Francisco, Cal., June 24, and gave themselves over to the business of having a good time in honor of the sixth anniversary of the organization.

The Chutes, with all its fun-making apparatus, was leased by the organization and the attaches of the place devoted their time and efforts to providing fun for the men who might after night preside at the machines at the nickelodeons where thousands of people gather nightly to be entertained.

The fun started soon after midnight and lasted until broad day light, with not a dull moment during the time.

There was a banquet in the cafe, dancing in the pavilion and the various amusements of the Chutes were kept busy furnishing enjoyment to the men who spend most of their time in providing amusement for the public. In addition to members of the union, there were present their families, friends and many officials of the Building Trades and San Francisco Labor Councils.

SELIG NOTES.

The Selig Polyscope Co. secures the Big Elks' carnival and grand lodge meeting in Detroit and promises a very interesting film, ready for early release. As there will be representatives from every state in the union, this should prove an interesting subject for the exhibitor and work up a regular B. P. O. E. night.

The new buildings at the Chicago plant are nearing completion and will soon present a sight to picture men that will astonish many and remain a monument to picturedom for some time to come. The new addition enlarges the present plant by 60,000 square feet of floor space, adding new studios, wardrobe, stock and producing rooms, twenty finely appointed dressing rooms, library, green room and other features new to the motion picture business.

"Ranch Life in the Great Southwest" has brought forth more inquiries and comment as regards date of release, than anything the Selig Polyscope Co. have prepared for the market, in some time. It clearly demonstrates that when Selig announces a real cowboy picture the public knows what to expect, especially since it is a known fact that such well-known people as Henry Grammar, Tom Mix, Chas. Fuqua, Johnny Mullens, Pat Long and others were especially engaged at a big expense for this picture. This subject will be released within a very short time and we predict a record run.

BROCKTON HOUSE WILL SOON BE READY.

The hall on the second floor of the new Marston building at Main and Ward streets, Brockton, Mass., which will be completed soon, has been leased for a term of years to George A. Mulford, who will conduct a motion picture show there. The hall will be called Music Hall. Mr. Mulford plans to have, in addition to motion pictures, three soloists. The chairs for the new hall have arrived and will be put in place as soon as the building is a bit near the finish.

Mr. Mulford, who has been for the last two years manager of the opera house at Amsterdam, N. Y., and before that at Manchester and Danbury, is well-known in this city, where he has appeared a number of times with theatrical companies. His wife is a Brockton girl, formerly Miss Jennie Alma Yeager. He sang in local stores also in the interests of a music publishing house in New York. His wife was the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. J. G. Yeager of 981 Warren avenue.

The hall is on the Franklin street side of the building. It has a seating capacity of 1,400 in orchestra and balcony. Entrances will be from both Main and Franklin streets. Shows will run most of the afternoon and again in the evening, and it is expected the new theatre will be open in two weeks or so.

A MODEL PICTURE THEATRE.

Mr. Thomas, the new manager of the Orpheum motion picture theatre, at corner of Third street and Jefferson avenue, Wheeling, W. Va., is making some elaborate improvements on the place. An addition is being built to the rear end of the building, which will easily double its present seating capacity. The new addition is of brick and will be fireproof. The old portion is also being refurnished, and when the improvements, planned by Mr. Thomas, have been completed, the little theatre will be the coziest and most attractive in the county. It will have a seating capacity of about six hundred and will be provided with all the safeguards against fire. Mr. Thomas expects to have all the improvements completed some time in July.

THE DESPERADO

An Essanay Western Comedy Feature

AMONG the Essanay's recent comedy releases from their Western stock company, "The Desperado," to be released Saturday, July 23, is an Essanay feature of notable strength, with the usual snappy vigor and originality which mark these films as headliners wherever they are shown. The Essanay's Western stock company is to be congratulated that, through the intelligent and clever work, and earnest endeavor of every member of the organization, they have produced pictures which have won the hearty endorsement of every licensed exhibitor. The Essanay Western product is distinctively characteristic of what, it seems, only the Essanay company can produce. Every one has learned now to classify the Essanay Company's excellent comedy subjects apart from the rest of their product. There is something refreshing and appetizing in originality of the ideas which go to make the Essanay comedies, the atmosphere is always pleasing, and the story is told by actors, whose earnest desire to make good to the fullest extent of their ability, makes their work convincing and sincere. There is dash and go in these comedies, always enlivening and maintaining the interest, and the humorous and droll situations contrived by the producers never fail to arouse hearty laughter.

SCENE FROM ESSANAY SUBJECT "THE DESPERADO."

"The Desperado" is a typical Western comedy and one which will prove as humorous as any on the Essanay's list of sure-fire laugh-getters. Yet there is subdued, a serious undercurrent of plot, handled so dexterously that even the many alarmingly perilous situations into which the hero of the story stalks unhurt, emphasizes or magnifies the rich vein of humor running through it.

The story concerns a much-wanted bad man who is sought by the sheriff and a posse of four men, all armed to the teeth, and further inspired by the reward of $5,000 for apprehension and capture of the outlaw. They track him to the vicinity of his shack, but when they leave their horses coralled in a ravine close by to reconnoitre among the rocks of the canyon, "Black Bart," the man wanted, steals their ponies, and later, encountering them one by one, deprives them of their weapons and they are forced to walk back to town afoot.

After a ten mile hike under the blazing desert sun the sheriff and his posse pull up in town, whereat their irate and disgusted chief immediately resigns his commission and solemnly promises: "Never again."

A new sheriff is advertised and a big, strapping cowboy answers the ad. He is promised a permanent position in the capacity of sheriff if he can run down "Black Bart" and agrees fearlessly to make the attempt.

Alittle strategy on his part, (but how he does it is not to be told here) and the bad man is rounded up and hauled into town.

Worked out in exquisitely humorous vein, backed by the wildest and most beautiful Colorado scenery, and faultlessly photographed, the picture is a feature and should be sought by every exhibitor.

CHAMBERLAIN BUYS THEATRES.

The National and Pennsylvania Amusement companies, owned by J. M. Shindel and L. J. Chamberlain, of Shamokin, Pa., have been dissolved. The companies controlled the Mt. Carmel Theatorium and Shamokin Theatorium, two of the highest class motion picture theatres in the state.

Mr. Chamberlain, who is interested in many amusements and who is a practical theatrical man, will continue to manage both theatoriums, he having secured Mr. Shindel's interests. Previous to the latest transaction Mr. Chamberlain acted in the capacity of president and general manager. Mr. Shindel has not made his plans known. The deal will not affect other interests in which both men are concerned.

Mr. Chamberlain stated that many improvements would be made at both houses in the near future and that shortly some important theatrical transactions will take place, which have important bearing on Shamokin's progress. The plans have not yet fully materialized and as soon as everything is in readiness, they will be given for publication.

The above-mentioned gentlemen are the pioneers in the moving picture business in the two towns, being the first to successfully conduct moving picture theatres.

QUINCY FOLKS WILL BE ENTERTAINED.

Quincy, Mass., will not be without first-class entertainment this summer, as the Music hall will give their big vaudeville and motion picture show every Saturday night providing the public care enough about being entertained to give the management their patronage. The vaudeville will be the highest priced acts in the country as during the summer a great many large theatres close, and the acts can be secured to play one night a week at Quincy Music hall. The coolest spot on a warm night in the city. Each seat will be supplied with a palm leaf-fan and ushers pass ice water. Only the best motion pictures will be used.

A GOOD HOUSE ORGAN.

There is no doubt that motion pictures have become the real source of entertainment in the West. From all parts of Western states we hear the good news that Western exhibitors are reaping a good reward by running straight pictures, eliminating the cheap vaudeville from their programs.

In a spicy note from H. H. Buckwalter, manager of the Denver Film Exchange, he mentions the fact that the western managers find that by running straight pictures, they do a much better business than by using vaudeville. He firmly believes that such shows are of a much cleaner character and cause less unfavorable comment, by a class who look forward to the opportunity to give pictures more knocks than boosts.

To show how business is prospering in Colorado, Mr. Buckwalter tells us how John Cunningham, manager of the Isis and Bijou motion picture theatres, Leadville, started in that well known mining city a year ago.

Cunningham is one of those fellows who has not only plenty of ambition, but nerve. He started in business without a dollar so the saying goes, and to-day he is doing one of the best businesses in the state of Colorado. Mr. Cunningham uses only straight pictures and runs one of the cleanest shows west of the Rockies; he is known from one end of the state to the other. To keep his patrons up-to-date Mr. Cunningham issues a pamphlet every week with the full descriptions of all the new films. This sheet is a pretentious eight-page affair of about the same dimensions as the Index. Apparently the advertising pays the cost of printing.

NEW PICTURES AT BAYONNE.

Washington Park Theatre, Avenue C and First street, Bayonne, N. J., opened for the season, June 28, under the management of Charles E. Ball, who has changed the policy of the house to high class pictures and the best of vaudeville. The theatre has been renovated and redecorated and is cooled by breezes from the Kills. Performances are given every afternoon and evening, and the matinees are particularly for ladies and children. Popular prices prevail.

A COLONIAL BELLE

A Kalem Production Remarkable for Good Acting and Its Colonial Effects.

UNDER the title of "A Colonial Belle" the Kalem Company will shortly release a picture love story of Colonial Days, more particularly of Revolutionary times, when the soldiers of George III were appropriating for their own uses such necessaries of life as they desired without asking. The plot of this tale is laid in Virginia and centers about a fine old Colonial mansion, of a wealthy proprietor, richly furnished according to the time with rare old mahogany furniture including hand carved four posters, opulent highboys, rag carpets, etc., etc.

To assemble all this property and to secure the real old Colonial mansion was no easy matter for the producers, but they succeeded to perfection, as you will agree when you see the picture. But it was only after much labor that the proper effects were secured. Antique shops of New York were ransacked and bit by bit the right material was assembled, even to the "four-poster," which is a rare specimen of its kind, with beautifully hand carved posts. An attempt had been made to build a "four-poster" when the real thing was discovered, and though the rental price was ruinously high, picturemen have to get the real things these days at any price, so the "four-poster" was engaged for the occasion.

There was quite an extended hunt for the proper Colonial house and a splendid example of that stately style of architecture was eventually secured, its imposing columns with Doric capitals extending to the roof. Therefore, when you see this picture you may be certain that you are viewing an excellent example of a real Colonial home.

The properties are by no means the best part of the picture; there is lots to be said for the work of the Kalem Players in this production, for they have given it the true dramatic touch. The story is a conventional love tale in which the heroine plots with the lover, an officer in the Revolutionary army, and effects the capture of the British officers quartered in her father's house. It opens with a love scene in the hallway of the old mansion, rather indiscreetly, it would seem, in the presence of the girl's father who is asleep on the hall-seat in the corner. Father is aroused, possibly by the sound of a hurried kiss, and proceeds to object. All fathers object—at first. But the girl wins him over and he gives the parental blessing.

SCENE FROM KALEM SUBJECT "A COLONIAL BELLE."

When the British troops become too thick in the neighborhood of the old mansion the lover departs with his soldiers, presumably, for one day he visits his sweetheart and bids her an affectionate farewell and then rides away. The arrival of British officers on horseback shortly afterward confirms the suspicion. They take possession of the old house and proceed to make themselves at home. Two of them have been drinking and are quite badly soused; their attempts to maintain their dignity are quite amusing. Presumably several days pass before the plot begins to thicken, and the time is spent by the British officers in card-playing and drinking. The efforts of the girl to entertain two drunken officers is one bit of comedy that strengthens the picture.

Finally the lover comes and slips past the sentry to a position where he can throw a message into the girl's chamber window. We are shown the girl in her chamber, which is in the attic, and a bit of clever lighting is given which suggests that it is a moonlight night. The girl hears something strike her chamber floor and, by the aid of a lighted candle, finds the message and reads it. We wish to thank the producer for sparing us the annoyance of having to read that message on the screen. It is enough that the girl understood it and got busy at once. Going down stairs she finds the officers busy at the card table and at once starts to play her part in the plot. She dances a few figures of a minuet with one of them and then induces them to lay their swords at her feet.

While this is going on inside the house the lover on the outside is active. The sentinel is bound and gagged and other soldiers approach and enter the house with the officer leading the way. Once they are inside we are again shown the scene between the girl and the officers. She has thrown some flowers on the floor and all the officers are scrambling about on their knees for them. While they are thus engaged the Colonial officer and his troopers slip in behind them and take a commanding position on the stairs. When the trap is properly set a surrender is demanded and complied with, the captives marching out in charge of the soldiers.

Left to themselves the lovers have a very happy meeting at which point the picture closes.

The Kalem players have every reason to feel proud of this effort. It is a consistent portrayal of a wholesome and pleasing comedy-drama; the kind that ought to win favor wherever shown.

NEWBURGH'S OPEN AIR THEATRE OPENED JUNE 25.

One of the big amusement events of the summer at Newburgh, N. Y., was the opening of the new Palatine theatre, at 14, 16, 18 and 20 Lander street, June 25. For a long time the building of this theatre had been attracting much attention and its opening had been looked forward to with much interest.

The house, which is purely an open air theatre, has a seating capacity of 1,200. In case of rain there is a covered pavilion which will seat a large number.

The new house is devoted to motion pictures, which consist of the most recent subjects. Vaudeville and illustrated songs will also comprise part of the program.

BUSINESS GOOD IN LOUISVILLE.

In spite of the rainy, muggy weather that has been prevailing in the neighborhood of Louisville, Ky., the motion picture theatres have been doing a good and profitable business. The management of the Hopkins reports that his house keeps well filled every night and that there can be no kick coming to any managers in that Southern city.

Nearly all the houses running straight pictures, are so equipped with electric fans and other cooling devices that there is no trace of foul air in the theatres. Each morning the houses are cleaned and given a thorough airing which keeps the atmosphere pure and clear during the afternoon and evening performances.

BIOGRAPH CO.

"WHAT THE DAISY SAID."—"He loves me, he loves me not, he loves me!" What faith have we not placed in this floral prophet when we were in the spring of lfie. Infallible was its answer when we pulled off each petal, repeating the above litany. At the opening of this Biograph subject, we find Martha and Milly, two sisters, in the daisy field asking of that little mystic flower the momentous question, "Does he love me?" The answer in both cases is "Yea!" and off the happy little maids skip towards the homestead. Martha learns of the presence in the village of a band of gypsies and is anxious to have her fortune told by one of these Nomads, curious to know if the story of the daisy is true. Foolish girl not to believe implicitly in the daisy. For this skepticism, or, rather, lover's apostasy, she incurs the displeasure of the daisy and vengeance is certain. A handsome young gypsy appears, reads her palm, planning her future to suit himself. Martha is fascinated by the young Nomad and later really loves and believes in him, meeting him clandestinely at the foot of a waterfall as often as possible. Finally she persuades her sister Milly to have her fortune told by the gypsy, of course, not hinting of her love for the young man. However, the gypsy now makes the sisters unknown rivals of each other for him, each girl guarding her secret carefully. But the daisy wreaks its vengeance when Martha comes suddenly upon her sister and the gypsy at the waterfall. She witnesses the wretch's perfidy unseen by them, and so she stealthily departs, vowing never to see him again. At this time the old father of the two girls, remarking their absence, goes in search of them. He is amazed upon surprising his daughter Milly in the company of the gypsy, and an argument ensues which results in the old man being knocked down. The girl's cries bring several farmhands, who, thinking the old man killed, start after the gypsy to annihilate him. He is in a fair way of being apprehended when he arrives at the gate of the homestead where Martha is seated, weeping from chagrin and disappointment. He appeals to her to save him, which she at first is loathe to do, but the realization that she once cared for him softens her and she directs him into a barrel and covers him with potatoes, so that when his pursuers arrive he is safely under cover. Meanwhile, the old man is found to have been only stunned by his fall and in no way hurt, so the hands are asked to desist in their dire design. Still they proceed to camp where the young scoundrel has now arrived and order him to leave the neighborhood at once, following him for a distance to be sure he obeys their injunction. The girls are now regenerated in their faith in the daisy, each going to her sincere rustic sweetheart.

"A CHILD'S FAITH."—Who is there who really disbelieves in the efficacy of prayer? The most hardened and indifferent worldly man will in time of desperation or danger almost involuntarily breathe a prayer to the Almighty for help or protection. Many are the occasions where calamities have been averted by a sincere prayer, and in this Biograph subject is shown the efficaciousness of a little child's appeal for help for her mother. At the opening of the story we find Alice Paulton incurring the extreme displeasure of her father by rejecting the suit of the favored young man of her father for one of her own choice. Determined to marry this man, she is disowned by her father, and so leaves his roof and is married. Mr. Paulton, being a widower, at first grieves over the loss of his daughter's love, but later becomes a monomaniac, money being his only thought, and to hoard this his only aim. He becomes a veritable tyrant, grinding his debtors most unreasonably. Thus things go on for several years. Meanwhile a girl child has blessed the young couple, and at the end of ten years the young father is in the last stage of consumption, with little strength left to work. Dire poverty reigns in the household, and in desperation the wife goes to her father to implore his aid. He is now in the extreme of money-madness, and almost throws her from his house. The worst is to come, a ndit comes soon —the young father dies. Here the poor woman is left destitute, with her little girl to care for. Her attempts to secure employment are in vain and starvation stares them in the face. But the little child has faith in prayer. The old man's temper has now gotten worse and his niggardliness more excessive, until finally he sells his home that he may add the returns to his hoard and moves into cheaper quarters. Fate leads him to engage the squalid room directly above his own daughter and granddaughter, although he is quite unaware of it. He is at a loss to find a place to hide his money until he espies a stove-pipe hole in the chimney wall. This he reckons a safe bank, so here he keeps it. On the floor below we see the poor woman despairing, until when she leaves for the next room, the child kneels and prays for aid. At the same moment the old man is replacing his gold in his chimney bank, and shoving it in too far, down the chimney it falls, striking the fireplace below and rolling out in front of the kneeling child. She at once believes it came from the Heavenly Father, and so kneels in thanksgiving. The old man becomes a raging demon at the loss of his money, and when the janitor directs him to the apartment beneath he bursts in and snatches the money from the child's hands. The confusion brings in the mother, and a recognition occurs. The old man is adamant, however, and still refuses aid to his daughter. While in the hall on his way to his own apartment, the thought of the little child on her knees praying with such faith impresses him, and changes his entire nature. Well, he returns to his daughter and granddaughter for good.

EDISON MFG. CO.

"OUT OF THE NIGHT."—A love story with a distinctly novel plot is unfolded in this film, which it seems to us ought to be equally as acceptable to the patrons of moving pictures as have been Mr. Rex's previous dramas, although the story is a radical departure from its predecessors.

Robert Austin, a man of sterling qualities, self made and self reliant, meets and falls in love with Marmion Moore, a charming young New York society woman. The love story progresses to the point where Austin has almost declared himself, when the current of events is turned. Austin and Miss Moore are riding in the park one day when her horse takes fright and bolts. Austin, in attempting to save Miss Moore, catches the bridle rein of the runaway, but his own horse swerves and he is dragged and trampled, without, however, releasing his hold. Miss Moore, though thrown, is practically unhurt, but Austin is so severely injured that his life is despaired of. He recovers his health, however, but it is soon manifest that his eyesight is going. This fact becomes painfully evident to him, and the opinion of the eminent specialist whom he consults, far from giving him encouragement, only convinces him that it will be a matter of only a very short time when the light of day with him will give place to the darkness of night.

Miss Moore is a constant inquirer at Austin's home, and we see her on some of her visits. Austin is merely formal in his manner, concealing his affliction because he fears that if she knows she may accept him out of pure sympathy. His old manner of loving embarrassment has given way to set determination. Miss Moore marvels at his changed manner. Austin falls deeper and deeper in love, and so does the charming object of his affections. He fights his great battle and holds himself in check. At the end of each of her visits, as Marmion leaves the room, he gropes his way toward the large window which overlooks the street. He can see but faintly the outlines of figures and faces on the sidewalk. In order to be sure that Marmion is the one to whom he is about to bow, he counts what he imagines will be the number of steps she will take between the hall door and her carriage. When the proper moment comes he bows and smiles from the window. Marmion returns his bow, little knowing that she is unseen by the pathetic figure at the window.

Austin cannot longer bear the strain of repressing his love for Marmion. In order to bring matters to a conclusion he writes her that the strain of overwork necessitates his going abroad, and in saying farewell wishes her every happiness. Marmion comes to say good bye. Austin is unable to see her, but cleverly conceals his blindness and represses the emotions that almost overwhelm him. His words are formal, almost cold—they speak a few words of parting and Marmion goes away, forgetting in her confusion her handbag, which she has left on the table. Austin listens for the door to close. As it does he begins to count—"one, two, three, four, five, six—ten, eleven, twelve—" He gets this far when Marmion re-enters, having missed her handbag on reaching the hallway. Austin continues to count, oblivious of her presence, and makes his way toward the window. She stands rooted to the floor until after he has bowed and smiled toward the street and then turned away in an agony of despair. Marmion can keep silent no longer but, stretching out her arms to the man who has unwittingly declared his great love for her, she calls him by name.

It is impossible for us to describe the pathos and dramatic force of the scene which follows. Suffice it to say that even as sunshine breaking through the clouds dispels all memory of the storm, so does the knowledge of their great love for each other bring to these two people happiness and content to replace sorrow and suffering.

In "Out of the Night," Mr. Beach fully demonstrates that his talents are not confined to depicting the rugged life of the West, but that in any atmosphere his facile pen can depict situations which fascinate. It is almost needless to say that the portrayal of this picture by the Edison Company is in all respects worthy of the story, and that the acting is finished to the highest degree.

"A VACATION IN HAVANA."—Far "out on the bounding ocean over the bounding sea," as Harry Lauder would express it, is where the heart of the hero of this picture, while on an ocean liner bound for the port of Havana, Cuba, begins to bound in a way that is bound to lead to the binding bonds of matrimony.

A brisk walk on deck—a moment's pause at the rail to gaze at the dim, far-off coast of Florida—two eyes meet eyes gazing into eyes—and there you are.

Harry knows that his winter vacation in Havana is going to prove an exceedingly interesting one. Of course, there is a father—there always is—to make the course of true love never to seem to run smoothly; but if love laughs at locksmiths why not at gray locks as well? At any rate, Harry does not hesitate to write his friend that he has just met a "peach" on deck, and that before his vacation is ended he is going to win her, or his name is not Harry Lightley.

Scarcely has the ship dropped anchor in the harbor of Havana before Harry is close upon the heels of his lady love, as she trips lightly on board the tug boat with her father. Soon they leave the ship's side and steam past the old wave-washed wreck of the Maine, which stands in the center of the harbor. Nor does Harry intend to lose sight of his ocean charmer; for no sooner does the coach land father and daughter at the Miramer Hotel, which overlooks the harbor, with the famous Morro Castle looming up across the bay, than Harry dashes up in another coach. A feeling of sweet joy steals into his heart when he realizes that he is to lodge under the same roof as the idol of his heart—as fair a maiden as ever was guarded by a grisly old father, whether it be in the days of the "Knights of the Round Table" or in the present time of aeronautics and pneumatic tires.

It is the same all the centuries through—the same old shy looks are flashed from downcast eyes, the same old, fascinating toss of the head which so plainly says "Come! Win me if you can, but beware of my father." The old, old game—love's young dream—is played over and over again. It matters not if it be while President Gomex and Vice-President Zayas are reviewing the rural guards or at the little thatched roof village where cherry lips are given a cool drink of water. What care lovers for the beauty of Yumuri Valley or the charming City of Matanzas nestled by the sea? The old grisly father spouts his knowledge.

"HOW BUMPTIOUS PAPERED THE PARLOR."—This is another of the uproariously funny comedies in which our friend Bumptious shows how much he doesn't know. This time he objects to the price asked for re-papering the pretty little parlor in his little home, and decides that the operation is so simple that any child ought to be able to perform it and that consequently it will be an easy trick for him.

The picture shows his reaching this decision, his selecting the wall paper at the store and then the beginning of the difficulties. Rolls of wall paper are hard things to carry, and when he finally does get them home he finds that the making of the paste is an operation which causes some trouble in addition to its practical difficulties. He tries to soothe the injured feelings of the cook with a kiss and thereby creates another set of injured felings in his wife, who happens to enter at the psychological moment.

And then the real fun begins, for Bumptious' management of the paste brush and paste proves disastrous to the parlor furniture, the curtains and floors, as well as to the wall he is trying to decorate. He does get one piece of paper up, but it is pretty crooked, which fact promptly starts an argument. He appeals to one of his friends, who is brought in by the wife to see the operation, and by making the appeal loses his balance from the top of the ladder, with the result that the wife and the friend and Bumptious himself are deluged with paste when he falls, and the whole room is made to look as if a cyclone had struck it. The last scene of this uproarious story shows the "easiest way," and with some very effective trick work brings a final laugh to close the picture with.

This second picture of the Bumptious series ought to prove even more popular than its predecessor and add new laurels to those the Edison comedies have been winning of late.

"AN ADVERTISEMENT ANSWERED."—This is an exceptionally pretty comedy picture, funny from the first foot to the last. It is another of our big full reel comedy pictures, and fully up to the standard of these big laughing hits.

Young Robert Earl, a prosperous farmer, is a bachelor, good looking, but who, up to this time, has overlooked the subject of matrimony. In the beginning of the picture we have a view of the laborers and hands returning from the field, when they are met by their wives and children. Young Earl watches them go down the road, all happy and contented, and he sighs for just these sort of companions to fill the void in his life.

He is further induced to try a hand at matrimony when he has finished with his supper, cooked by himself, and the washing of the dishes, done by himself.

Therefore, straightway after he has finished his household work, he writes a note to a city paper requesting them to print a personal in the matrimonial want ad. column requesting a wife.

A day or two later he receives a dozen or more letters from certain ladies, all anxious to be his wife.

The number of letters confuse him, and as a final mode of solving the problem, he writes a letter to each, seals and addresses them, and then, shuffling them up, closes his eyes and selects one at random.

Satisfied with this, he goes out and sends one of his hands in for the letter which he wishes mailed. The hand becomes confused and takes the bunch of letters, unconscious that he is implicating his employer in a rather disagreeable predicament.

The next day young Earl goes to the train to meet the elected bride. She arrives—a dozen of her. Earl sees that something is wrong and beats a hasty retreat with the bunch of women at his heels.

The pursued and pursuers do a marathon through meadows, orchards, woods, until the young farmer is exhausted. He finallly reaches home and runs in, but the foremost and most athletic of the ladies follows him into the kitchen, pleading with him to have her. He looks at her face, then jumps out the window. She follows, and the rest of the mob, having caught up, join in the pursuit. Out through the orchard they go, when young Earl espies an apple tree which seems to offer refuge. He quickly climbs into the branches, but Miss Athlete is not feazed by this and goes on up after him as actively as a polar bear.

The hunted farmer drops to the ground and is seized by the ladies, each demanding that he marry her, according to the invitation she has received.

Now it happens that there is a little lady, who had always brought up the rear in the chase and who was even now lingering in the background, and it is she, with her dreamy eyes under the lace bonnet, who Robert deigns to smile upon.

"You are the one," he says, freeing himself from the rest. And the little girl is lead off timidly, while Earl's other farm hands hold back the infuriated female husband-seekers.

Two years later we have a pretty scene at Robert's home. Things have changed. Mrs. Earl and the baby have filled that empty void in his heart, and he is a happy and contented man.

"TRAILED TO THE WEST."—This Western story is one which is overflowing with heart interest, a story of the East and West, with a powerful theme, intensely interesting plot, and, like in all our previous Western pictures with which most exhibitors are familiar, it is convincingly acted and superbly photographed.

Harry Forsyth a young Easterner, happy in the belief that his wife loves him above all others, bids her good-bye one day to leave for a neighboring city. The next few scenes show him at his room in the hotel in the distant town, eagerly awaiting some message from home. Two days go by, and the letter is not forthcoming. Worried about what may have occurred at home, young Forsyth, over a long-distance telephone, is put into communication with his butler at home. The butler reads him the following message, with the statement that his wife left the house a few days before in company of another man:

"Dear Harry—I am going away with another man I love better than you. Forget me and be happy.

"Your GLADYS."

After young Forsyth recovers from this terrible shock he decides to hunt out the man who wrecked his home and have revenge. After many weary days of search, he finds his wife in a dismal attic room, half starved and dying from a broken heart. The man she had loved and for whom she had sacrificed everything had grown tired of her and gone away.

Forsyth, learning that Phillips, the villain, has gone West, kisses his wife good-bye and makes a solemn vow to run down the traitor.

His wanderings take him West. Occasionally he loses the trail, but finds it and continues his search, with but one ambition in life and that—revenge. Into mining camps, cattle ranches, through the timberlands he traces Phillips, the quarry seeming to just slip through his fingers at the moment when he has him.

However, the pursuit ends one night in a gambling dive in one of the mining camps. Forsyth enters, scans each face and seats himself at a table. The man opposite looks at him covertly, unsuspicious, as Forsyth brings forth a locket which contains Phillips picture. He compares the face with the one in the locket, then rising, pulls his revolver. There is a flash and Phillips tumbles over on the floor, while Forsyth, covering the others with his gun, leaps over the tables and chairs and runs out of the place.

An exciting chase follows, after the sheriff has been acquainted with the murder and a posse has been organized, but the fugitive eludes him.

The scene shifts to the interior of a miner's shack two or three days later. The miner enters, studying a poster which advertises a reward for the arrest of Forsyth or Andy Reel, as he is known in the West. He is preparing his frugal meal, when there is a knock at the door and he opens it to the fugitive murderer. There is no mistaking the identity, as the poster prints a picture of the fugitive.

The miner gives the starving murderer food, but as he is about to leave the miner whips out his gun and threatens to shoot if his captive moves a muscle. Forsyth drops into the chair in despair. Then he brings out a note which he has carried with him for many years and shows it to the miner. This affects the latter strangely, and when the sheriff and posse ride up a few moments later the miner denies having seen anything of the fugitive, and they go out of sight.

Forsyth is grateful and asks the miner's reason for his sudden change of mind.

The miner brings out a note, which he, too, has kept for many years. It reads:

"Dear Tom: I am going away with a man I love better than you. Forgive and forget me and be happy.

"Yours, Mary."

Then he stretches out his hand and the two men look into each other's eyes.

"I got my man," says the miner, "did you?"

Forsyth nods his head.

GAUMONT.

"A HIDDEN SERPENT."—Because few dramas have been shown dealing with the life of India, this film should be welcomed.

A Hindoo servant is fascinated by the wife of his master. By a forged letter he gets the husband out of the house, and then declares his love, but is repulsed. Thirsting for revenge he places a snake in the revolver case of his master who, upon returning, opens this to take out his revolver, and is fatally bitten by the snake. The success of the Hindoo's ruse, however, is short, for he is shot by the heart-broken wife.

"IN THE REALM OF THE CZAR."—This is a film of good quality, showing views inside the city of Moscow. Views of every place of interest are seen, the market places especially noteworthy. The fine quality is preserved throughout.

We first see the Theatre place. Then the Traitskiia gate. Next the Iberian gate and chapel which the Czar always visits when going to the Kremlin.

Now the Red Place and Savior Gate.

The St. Basile cathedral, built by Ivan the Terrible in 1555 in remembrance of the capture of Kazan. The Russian Czars are crowned in this cathedral.

The church of the Savior on the banks of the Moswa.

The Kremlin—a view of Sophie Hill. The Kremlin is the most famous monument in Moscow.

Then we see different markets. Among others, the bird market on the Aroubnaia place.

The heavily bearded merchants are an especially picturesque group of men.

"JUPITER SMITTEN."—A semi-humorous account of an incident in the days when the Gods from Mt. Olympus often took upon themselves human forms and visited the earth.

Our hero, Amphitryon, has been for some time absent from his home while engaged in battle with a hostile nation.

Alqmene, his wife, longs for the return of her husband. He, attacked with the same complaint, prepares himself to visit his wife. Jupiter, looking from his throne, notes these plans and things being slow in his realm, he resolves to have a little game of his own, so disguised as Amphitryon, he journeys away to visit Alqmene, reaching her before her husband does. He is effusively greeted, but things become a trifile confused when the real Amphitryon appears. Swords are drawn and blows are exchanged when Jupiter changes himself to the original image of Jupiter. Amphitryon and Alqmene fall on their knees, are forgiven, and Jupiter departs.

"THE JOLLY WHIRL."—The trick picture never seems to outgrow its popularity with the laughing public. In spite of the many exposes and explanations which have been written, the fact remains that few know how the marvels are accomplished.

Several young men are enjoying an especially happy hour at lunch in a cafe when one announces that he is possessed of mediumistic powers.

His companions challenge him to display his ability in affecting inanimate objects. This serves to introduce a series of remarkable exhibits in which he thoroughly mixes chairs, tables, carts, and people. The situations follow one another very rapidly and keep the onlooker in a first-class state of suspense.

URBAN-ECLIPSE.
(George Kleine.)

"THE WICKED BARON AND THE PAGE."—Intensely dramatic film of the Cavalier days, most beautifully staged and acted.

Boy and old mother gathering firewood, are beaten by the Lord of the Manor, but on being found by a neighboring squire's daughter are carried to her home. The boy is engaged as her page. The Lord pays court to the lady, but is repulsed. Engages bandits, who waylay and capture her and her maid. The page, escaping, runs for help—Her father comes to the rescue, and is disarmed by the Lord, when the little page steps in and keeps the Lord at bay until the ladies have escaped. The page rewarded for his bravery, vowing allegiance to his benefactress.

Two young fellows being compelled to make a hasty exit from their lodgings let down their furniture through the window. A policeman interferes, but they, with great resource, hook the officer of the law by the belt, and haul him midway between the ground and the window, where he cannot interfere. The poor man looks very comical in a state of suspense. When the rogues have gone the policeman is rescued, and succeeds in getting possession of their property. In the end the young men get it back again, and set up house elsewhere.

"THE HIGHBINDERS."—A story of Chinatown that has seldom been excelled for gripping interest. Sung Loo and his cousin, Sung Pho, are star pupils at the Chinese Mission, their close attendance serving as a moral alibi for their characters. Sung Loo is janitor of the Mission and the favorite of all the teachers, but when away from the Mission he is a hatchet man for one of the powerful tongs, working in conjunction with Sung Pho. Pretty Bessie Radcliffe is his particular teacher, and she is very proud of her apt pupil. When the Reverend John Grismer comes to Chinatown and recognized the teacher as a schoolmate, she introduces Sung Loo as her most able pupil. Sung does not fancy the intrusion of the good-looking young minister, for he has hopes of winning Bessie for his own wife, and this dislike is brought to a focus when the minister discovers the Sungs to be hatchet men, and prevents the murder of a Chinese merchant who has refused to pay blackmail to the

"THE ALMIGHTY DOLLAR."—On the same reel with "The Highbinders," "The Almighty Dollar" supplies a sprightly comedy relief. It's one of those little Lubin farces that mean a lot to the man who makes up a balanced program and finds small supply of comedy. Some wag solders a tack to a silver dollar and drives it into the seat of a chair in a saloon. A man must be more than human who would let an ownerless dollar get past him, and every one who enters makes an effort to get the dollar unperceived, then joins the crowd to wait for the next victim. But a peddler who is "stung" along with the rest proves himself quick-witted, for he makes away with the coin, even though he has to take the chair with him. The rest of the victims give chase and for a time it looks as though the peddler would not get away with his plunder, but he slips into a barber shop, where the removal of his beard effects a permanent disguise. He looks like a new man, and perhaps that is the reason why he walks off with another man's coat and hat, well pleased with the result of his capture of the dollar. It's a short subject, but there is about a thousand feet of fun crowded into the story.

"THE ADOPTED DAUGHTER."—Laura Townsend is the adopted daughter of an evil couple who keep a roadhouse in the Southwest. The girl is treated more like a slave than an adopted daughter and, worse yet, her parents favor the suit of a Mexican who is the sometime partner of their crimes. The girl detests him and when he seeks to urge his suit as she is on her way to town she struggles desperately to avoid his caresses, but is saved only by the arrival on the scene of Gordon Harvey, a young ranchman, who puts the Mexican to flight. Harvey is on his way to town and he takes Laura with him and brings her again to the inn. On their return they are overtaken by the Mexican, who disables the wagon and forces Harvey to stop at the road house for repairs. It is plotted that he shall be murdered and robbed, but Laura overhears the conversation and warns her benefactor, urging him to flee. Harvey is not disposed to run away, but when he finds that his revolver has been put out of commission he determines to escape and carry the girl with him. They are pursued and caught, but in the altercation that follows the foster father and his accomplice fall over the cliff while Harvey takes the girl to his ranch, where she is welcomed by his mother, and it is evident that her troubles are over.

"THE GOLDEN SECRET."—No suffering is so acute as the pangs of thirst. They sap vitality, ambition, reason and leave the thirsty one limp and dying, while visions of running brooks and shady springs torture his fevered senses and encourage him briefly to try to reach them, only to be mocked in taunting manner by the unattainable.

A Navajo Indian has crossed the great desert, and his water bottle has been emptied. He is in a frenzy from thirst and sees mirages of water everywhere. He comes upon Nat Perry, a young settler, who is conveying his household goods across the burning sands. Perry has just taken a drink from his precious canteen when the Indian falls at his feet and implores a little water. The young pioneer heartlessly turns him over with his foot and leaves him to die.

Kate and Will Brown are passing in a prairie schooner. They see the Indian's plight and revive him, load him into their vehicle and proceed on their journey. Two years later the Indian is a valued friend and servant, when he has an altercation with Perry, over the latter's conduct in the desert and is fatally wounded. He crawls to his employer's home and dies, but before he passes to the great beyond, he tells the young settlers the secret of a lost gold mine and gives them a rude map which will help them to find it. Perry has overheard this conversation, and while he has not seen the map, he resolves to follow Kate and Will when they start on their search.

The Indian is decently buried and the search begins. By rude drawings and familiar land-marks, the mine is finally discovered. Brown immediately sees its great value, and in his haste to communicate their good fortune to his wife, he turns his ankle, on a stone and sinks to the ground under the pain.

While Kate is binding up the injured member, Perry who has followed them closely, appears and commands them to throw up their hands. They are taken completely by surprise, relieved of their revolvers, their horses driven down the side of the mountain and Perry writes a location claim and rides away to file it at the nearest land office for himself.

Kate is in despair at the sudden change in their fortune, but conceives a plan intended to outwit the villainous Perry. She knows that he must ride a long way around and around the mountain in his descent, while if she can succeed in climbing down the side of a steep cliff, she can be ahead of him. The difficulty is to find a horse, but she suddenly sees, far below her, a rider. His attention is attracted by means of huge stones, which she throws down. He sees her and stops and is astonished when the plucky girl swings far out from the top of the cliff on a stout lariat and climbs hand over hand down the mountain. Her story is quickly told, and the gallant cowboy lends his horse.

Then begins a race for the land office in which the plucky girl is the victor. Perry arrives shortly after her and is arrested by the sheriff who happens to be there. The richness of her nugget excites the interest of an Eastern capitalist and an option is sold on the mine which insures the young couple a handsome competence, and luxury for life.

"JUST FOR LUCK."—A hunchback for luck is a curious superstition which has been utilized for the foundation of the plot of this film. The hunchback in the present instance marries a young lady who is afflicted with a fatal propensity to drop every article of crockery she happens to touch. After her marriage she becomes as skillful and adroit as could be wished for, and she daily congratulates herself upon the wisdom of her mother, who directed her choice of a suitable husband.

Science accomplishes all things, however, and the hunchback, reading one day of a doctor's back straightener, seeks a consultation with the physician and is persuaded to be operated upon. After being immured in a formidable looking machine, in appearance something like a small gasometer, he is subjected to the treatment, which consists of the upper half of the contrivance being raised by means of a lever. The hunchback emerges fairly straight, and the operation is completed by the application of an enormous iron.

At the same moment, the wife commences again to smash all the crockery in the house, and the return of her husband and as straight as a dart explains the cause. Hurt and angry, she and her mother drag him back to the physician for the purpose of having his hump restored, but here he strenuously revolts, and declares that if a hunchback is necessary in the family, his mother-in-law must be sacrificed, which she accordingly is with satisfactory results.

"VERONA."—An educational film of great merit. A picture that portrays with great vividness the architectural beauties of this old city that still clings to her old customs and methods.

"THE POLITICAL DISCUSSION."—Two friends are engaged in a fiery discussion on politics at the dinner table, and this discussion as so often happens, ends in blows which become more vigorous, until one of them, in the heat of the moment, is killed. Haunted by gruesome visions of an untimely end, the survivor stuffs the body into a trunk and makes tracks for the frontier. Stopped, however, by the customs officials, he thinks it better to retrace his steps, but this decision arouses the officers, who set out in pursuit, accompanied by two of the police. The criminal to avoid being captured, leaves the trunk in the field, first hiding the body in a haystack, his victim, however, is not dead, and presently emerging is taken into custody by the officers of the law. Meanwhile, the friend, repentant and remorseful, resolves to give himself up, and is thrown into the cell already occupied by the man he believes to be dead. Mutual recognition and reconciliation follow and politics are forgotten in the joy of the reunion.

"THE OVERLAND COACH ROBBERY."—The driver of the mail coach running between Ajaccio and Bastia is handed orders to stop at the Treasury office and receive a large amount of gold to be conveyed by the coach to the bank at Bastia. These orders are stolen from him by two of a band of bandits, whose crimes and depredations have terrorized the country. We see the coach start out with its human freight and the bags of gold, and take the hard road that winds through a wild part of the country. At one point where the road takes a bend the bandits spring out from an ambush, and wounding the faithful driver, secure the gold, unharness the horses and lead them off, together with the passengers as captives. The driver, left lying on the ground, after a while recovers sufficiently to be able to stagger along the road until he meets two policemen. He tells them his story and aid is summoned. With the aid of a big dog they scour the country, and the hiding place of the brigands is soon discovered. A successful attack is made, the gold is recovered, the captives released from their bonds, and the police have the satisfaction of knowing that they have at last cleared that part of the country of a very dangerous community.

"THE FAITHLESS LOVER."—It is a spring night in the picturesque old town of Grenada, and a handsome young lad is seen serenading his ladylove, under whose window he stands singing to the accompaniment of his guitar. The beautiful senorita knowing the musician to be none other than the youth to whom she has long since given her heart, soon steps out on the veranda and joins him. Her father, however, calls her in to help him with his work. The thought of the love that her childhood friend bears toward her has been the one bright spot in the motherless girl's uneventful life, and consequently bitter indeed is her awakening a few days later when she finds that the one she thought so true has been unfaithful and now prefers another in her place. Avoided and spurned by him she implores her father to avenge her. He takes his gun and, finding the gay youth making love to his new conquest, himself becomes enraged and follows the fickle boy through the beautiful country until at last coming up to him he is enabled to avenge his daughter.

"A GOOD LOSER."—The widow Hillman and her charming daughter, Maisie, have just entertained to lunch in their home, their friend, Paul Phillips, a young man who ardently admires Maisie. His affection is not, however, returned by the young lady. While he is helping Maisie to wash up the dishes, Franklin Steele, a rich, handsome young fellow, also an admirer of Maisie, calls, and joins them. Meantime an old miserly lawyer who has a mortgage on the house, calls upon Mrs. Hillman and informs her that unless she pay off the mortgage she must vacate the old home. Franklin coming into the room with some of the clean dishes, overhears the conversation and secretly tells the lawyer to await him outside. Shortly after Franklin makes his excuses and leaves. He meets the lawyer and arranges to settle for the mortgage on condition that the Hillmans must on no account suspect that they are indebted to any one but the lawyer. The next day we see Franklin ride up just as Maisie is going to the well for some water. Leaving his horse in her care, he relieves her of this duty, and Paul coming up in his absence proposes and is refused by Maisie. Angry and irritated that she will not have him, and suspecting that Franklin is his rival, he endeavors to vent his ire on the poor unfortunate horse, but Maisie snatches the whip from him and bids him leave. Running in to tell her mother she finds the lawyer there, and he takes out an envelope and draws from it the mortgage, and to their utter astonishment destroys it. While her mother is thanking him for his unaccountable generosity, Maisie picks up the envelope and find in it a letter from Franklin to the lawyer, and then sees through the whole affair. Franklin enters the house in time to see this denouement, and unable to conceal the real facts, bids the lawyer depart and is accepted by Maisie as her future husband. About to depart, Paul is still hanging round the horse, and on his learning the state of matters proves himself a good loser and congratulates heartily the young couple.

"PLEASE TAKE ONE."—Bonehead is not a success in distributing handbills to the passers-by, according to his arrangement with the exacting owner of the market, and is therefore fired, and his late employer fastens the packet of throwaways on a slate in the centre of which he chalks the words—"Please take one." The slate is then put outside the door. Seeing this, Bonehead seizes the slate, and tearing away the handbills, plants it in the middle of the fruit, vegetables, and fine poultry displayed for sale outside the store. At the sight of the invitation, two policemen quickly take advantage of it. Thrifty housewives need no second bidding to fill their baskets, and Bonehead himself collects all the idlers of the neighborhood to do honor to the notice. The storekeeper is soon alive to the situation, and, beside himself with rage, he shouts for the police. The two members of the force, who have already passed, return, and, under the impression that order is required to be restored, distribute the provisions themselves. Naturally the storekeeper complains still more forcibly, and the two policemen, disgusted to see their efforts so little appreciated, retaliate by taking him into custody.

"ALGERIAN STUD."—This picture gives a very good idea of the breeding stud maintained in Algeria by the French Government. We are enabled to see at close view the beautiful thoroughbreds and their graceful foals and fillies at close quarters. The coloring adds greatly to the effect and the film is a very interesting one.

"THE HALL-ROOM BOYS."—In presenting the emperor of silent comedy, Mr. Fred Walton, in the above picture story, the acme of film comedy has been reached and no better vehicle than "The Hall-Room Boys" could have been secured for his advent into picturedom.

They are seen to enter the boarding house previous to preparing to attend the mask ball at the Union Club. Donned in their best they take a taxi to the fountain of merriment. The formality of having the proper tickets of admission causes them no end of trouble—but being thrown out of a public place fails to efface the redoubtable pair, and they pass an evening full of surprises and a few bumps—even if they were stung by the fair charmer—so, as the excitement draws to a close, they repair to their apartments, and dream of the eventful night. The morning after bring a fresh supply of trouble—they are informed their places at the ribbon counter have been filled—completing one of the best comedies ever offered in moving photography.

"THE SHERIFF."—Tom Lawton and John Mason were rival candidates for office of County Sheriff. The election was near at hand and excitement plentiful. Mason was in love with Lawton's sister, but the feeling existing between the two men rendered their marriage impossible. When votes were counted Boulder County had elected John Mason as their sheriff, who took oath to do his duty as he understood the law.

Lawton becomes involved in trouble and a warrant for his arrest is placed in the hands of his political enemy for service. Thus we see the stalwart Mason standing between love and duty; for the sake of the girl he loves he permits Lawton to escape, but not without its attending mishaps and sadness, making a most unique story, embodying deep heart interest.

"A HUNTING STORY.'—A palatable comedy, and, as the name signifies, is a worthy successor to the time-honored "Fish Story" told at every fireside. Don't overlook this little story!

"NELLIE'S FARM."—Thousands who are shut in by the brick and mortar forming impregnable walls that shut out the fresh air and bright sunshine, long and wilt for nature's breeze and hunger for a view of its refreshing scenes.

In the midst of such environments little Dick and poor little crippled Nell dwell and dream of the country of which they have so often heard but have never seen. The "Fresh Air Fund" has given to these poor children an invitation to go on one of its excursions to the country. It is impossible for Nell, sick and lame, to go. Dick, however, accepts and starts full of anticipation and life to live for two weeks in green fields with a good whole souled old farmer who has chosen Dick as his guest.

While Nell is confined to her bed racked with pain, surrounded by the tiresome monotony of poverty and lack of home comforts, left alone while her hard-working mother has gone to deliver a day's washing, little Dick is seen in the country busy on the farm of the kind old friend, who is showing Dick how to milk, hunt eggs and learning the things which seem like wonderland to the poor boy. We see Dick in other scenes, in the fields plucking flowers and drinking in the invigorating breath of nature.

And yet while buoyant and happy in these new-found joys, Dick has not forgotten his little sick friend Nellie. He is planning and arranging to take some of the country to her, digging bits of grass and plants to take back to the city so she can share in his joys and pleasures. The day for the little man's return to the fetid city tenements has arrived and Dick begins to pack his scant belongings. The old farmer brings him some apples, eggs and two little chickens for Nellie. These with the grasses and ferns, Dick bundles up and now he is on his way to the special car which is to carry him back home.

Kissing the good farmer good-bye and waving a long farewell Dick mingles with the rest of the Fresh Air youngsters as they sing and shout with glee and the remembrance of their two weeks of outdoor life amid the green fields and bright sunshine. At home, while his mother is away for the day, Dick gets to work at the surprise which he has brought to Nellie. After a hard day's work, the boy's mother returns and Dick shows her "Nellie's Farm" with its green grass, little house, trees and the real live chickens.

The question of how to get it to Nellie has been solved by Dick and with his mother's assistance, early in the morning places the little farm on the fire escape outside the window where Nellie usually rests her tired little form each day. Later Nellie's mother is up and about. She removes the piece of crash which serves as a curtain and reveals to Nellie a view of the real country, a farm of her own right outside her own window. She is deilghted, her face is all smiles and she almost believes she is dreaming.

Dick comes in to share her happiness and explains what it all means. Peacefully and seemingly with visions of the green fields, waving trees and limpid streams, Nell lies sleeping at the window, near her farm when suddenly the winds blow, the rain descends and the lightning flashes. Nellie, in alarm, raises herself from her couch and places her hands over her farm to protect it from the cruel storm, then she throws herself across it to cover it with her little body, and while the relentless rains destroy her earthly possessions, they beat upon her poor body until chilled and exhausted she becomes unconscious as she lies helpless on her precious toy.

Her mother comes home and discovers Nellie, changes the child's clothing and puts her to bed. Exposure and over weakened constitution have left their mark and poor little soul falls into a deep restful sleep. Little Dick comes in to visit Nellie bringing a little bunch of flowers which he has purchased for her and another reminder of the country which she had never seen and as a token of friendship and love.

Looking upon the form of his little companion he places the bouquet upon her breast, for she has awakened in the country far away, where the river of life flows eternally through the hills and glens and the trees are evergreen and the flowers never fade and sweet music and perfume fill the air.

"THE UNCLE'S WILL."—Ruth, a young society girl, is left a large legacy by her uncle with the understanding that she exclude herself one month each year during the height of the fashionable season, passing this period of exclusion on a dairy farm in the country, occupying her time in the ordinary pursuits of a dairy maid. While she is thus engaged, George Temple, a young son of a wealthy old fellow, is spending a vacation in the same country place.

Ruth and he meet and fall in love. The young beau takes her home, carrying her pails for her, and frequently he is seen calling on her at the farm house entirely unaware of her real station in life. He declares his love and proposes. Ruth consents to become his wife. An old busy body of the village happens to see the young chap in company with Ruth and loses no time in imparting the news to his father, who is disgusted and utterly opposed to his son marrying a dairy maid as quite unbecoming and disgraceful.

He at once proceeds to the house of the young lady and tells her housekeeper, whom he thinks Ruth's mother, that he strenuously objects to his son marrying her daughter. The joke is on the "old gent." He learns from the young girl's lawyer of the vast estates and interests of which she is the owner in her own right and that she is merely living on her own farm for health and pleasure. With chagrin and many apologies, he asks Ruth's pardon and as gracefully as possible under the circumstances, he acknowledges his mistake. George and Ruth are left to themselves and their own happiness.

"A BROKEN SYMPHONY."—An old forester lives with his daughter Meg in the midst of a lumbering district. A stalwart young lumberman in charge of a crew of "lumber jacks" meets Meg and falls deeply in love with her and she with him. Noah, a young hunchback, and a wandering camp fiddler, also falls in love with the girl. Tom, the young lumberman, takes pity on the poor hunchback, gives him food and has him come to the lumber camp and play his fiddle for the boys, who immediately get busy dancing "Money Musk"; "Turkey and the Straw" and "Hoe Down" and sure enough whoop things up at a lively rate.

Many a lively tune is played to a sad heart. The fiddler's thoughts are not on the dancers; his heart is with Meg, as sadly he feels that his chances of winning her love is handicapped by his poor crippled and deformed body when he looks upon the manly form and splendid physique of Tom, but hoping against hope, he does not entirely despair until he sees Tom and Meg in fond and loving embrace, then and not until then he realizes his case is hopeless.

Tom and Meg are engaged and the wedding arranged. Noah is engaged to play his fiddle at the festivities. The wedding day has come, the guests are assembled and Noah takes his place. The ceremony is performed and the dance begins. Noah fiddles with vim and vigor to appease his aching heart. As he thinks of his cherished and unrequited love, the strain is too much for him, he rushes from the place, smashes his violin across his knee and departs into the forest.

The bride and groom go to their new home, the guests depart and Meg's poor old dad returns to his lonely cabin which, without his little Meg, seems cheerless and deserted. Sadly the poor old man goes about his duties, thinking only of his little girl. While thus engaged the hunchback appears on the scene, sad and depressed. Meg's father lays his hands on his, trying to cheer him and telling Noah of his own loneliness and offering the poor fellow a home with him, both being sad and lonely, they will at least be company for each other.

Noah declines his kind offer, but is finally won over when the old man goes into the house and brings out an old fiddle, a companion of former days, telling the young fellow that his ear for tune has grown dim and his skill departed and he will give the instrument to him. Noah takes it and plays while the old forester sits by attentively listening and carried into sweet dreams and happy thoughts on the sweet strains of the playing of the hunchback's soulful music.

KALEM CO.

"GRANDMOTHER."—In "Grandmother," the Kalem players present a heart interest story of unusual merit and considerable novelty. The story centers around the escapades of the pampered son of a wealthy father, who falls in love with a popular dancer years older than himself, and who is only slightly amused at the young man's ardor. Of course, there are other admirers and when the young man finds that the way to the dancer's heart seem to lie through the giving of expensive presents, he bethinks himself of his mother's jewels. His idea is that she has so many beautiful treasures that she would hardly miss a rope of pearls, and with easy conscience he opens the family safe, takes the pearls and presents them to the lady fair. Of course, the loss is discovered and a detective is summoned to solve the mystery. In the meantime the boy's grandmother, a most lovable old lady (played in person by Mrs. Healy, one of the most famous old ladies of the stage), notices the boy's great distress of mind and persuades him to confess to her, and knowing the truth the old lady goes to the dancer and tells her the story of the boy's impending disgrace. Her touching appeal softens the heart of the adventuress and she restores the jewels to the old lady, who brings them home in time to prevent the boy's disgrace.

The story is beautifully presented by the leading people of the Kalem company, and is a gem both in dramatic work and photography.

"CORPORAL TRUMAN'S WAR STORY."—"Corporal Truman's War Story" is in a way a historic film, as it shows in exact detail the touching scene yearly enacted in every Northern village where a handful of the Civil War veterans gather with the little children of the schools, to decorate the graves of the nation's dead.

The story opens as Corporal Truman leaves home to join the G. A. R. parade, shows his reunion with his old comrades and the parade itself and the decorating of the graves and all the real happenings in a noted New England village.

Following the Memorial Day exercises, the veterans have a dinner and at this dinner Corporal Truman is asked to tell the story of his empty sleeve. The story is told in pictures, and is one of the liveliest war incidents ever portrayed on a moving picture screen. It affords such a sharp contrast with the scenes which have gone before that when the picture again reverts to the banquet table and we see the veterans rising to cheer Corporal Truman and to join in his toast for the Stars and Stripes, we all feel like joining in the outburst of applause.

Owners and managers of moving picture theatres have their share of tribulation, and the obtaining of suitable electric current at reasonable prices is not the least of their troubles.

Alternating current is not well suited for moving picture work, and under many conditions is almost intolerable, especially in the lower cycles, with its ceaseless flicker, as well as in the large number of instances in which the regulation is poor.

Direct current with good Regulation, at the proper Voltage, and at a reasonable Price, is ideal, but almost never obtainable.

In most of the smaller cities, and many of the large ones as well, the station equipment is inferior or poorly looked after, resulting in a variation of from 5 to 15 per cent. in the voltage. This is particularly true of those stations which furnish electrical energy for street car and power service.

So much for regulation. As to proper voltage, a moving picture lamp requires only 40 to 50 volts at the arc. Allowing for resistance, an input of 60 volts is ample, but the current supplied by lighting companies is never under 110, and from that up to 220 volts, so that from one-half to three quarters of the current paid for is wasted in the rheostat.

As to price, this is a serious question. One of the principal items of expense of a picture theatre is the electric current. The attitude of lighting companies in most towns, both small and large, towards the moving picture theatre is most aggravating. They figure, with much shrewdness, that the theatre must have electric light, and usually push prices up to the last notch.

It is not unusual to find a theatre using 1,000 to 1,500 K. W. monthly, charged at the rate of 12 to 15 cents a K. W., while an auto garage, saloon, or butcher shop a few doors away is paying from 3 to 5 cents per K. W. on a consumption of one-tenth as much.

In very many of the smaller towns, a serious loss to the show owner lies in the inability to get current in the day time, which cuts into his possible revenue to the extent of 20 to 40 per cent.

Revolting against these conditions, many owners have within the past year or so put in their own electric light plant, thus cutting the cost of current materially; but, as most of these plants consist of the ordinary type of gas engine, the regulation is not improved, because the standard type of gas or gasoline engine is not suitable for this work, and will not regulate closely. Besides, these are usually put out with dynamos of 110 to 125 volts, so that half of the current is wasted in the arc lamp.

Again, these equipments, consisting of a gasoline engine belted to a dynamo, require a great deal of floor space, which is not always convenient or obtainable.

Further, if the show be a traveling one, the standard engine of even medium capacity weighs, with dynamo and equipment, from 2,500 to 6,000 pounds, involving much extra labor in handling on cars, or expensive wagon and team equipment.

In the Brush Electric Lighting Set, made both portable and stationary, and shown herewith in the portable style, all the difficulties referred to in the foregoing are overcome. The 100-page catalogue issued by The Chas. A. Strelinger Co. Bates street, Detroit, Michigan, is undoubtedly the most complete work on small isolated electric lighting plants ever printed, and gives a mass of information of great value to users of electric light and power. This catalogue is sent free to any address, and will be found invaluable, even to those who do not remotely expect to make their own electricity.

LUBIN NOTES.

Rosemary, scheduled for release the eighteenth, is one of the first subjects made in the new Lubin studio to be shown. The interior photography has all of the photographic excellence of the exteriors and is but the forerunner of other equally good films. It is something more, however, than an example of perfect photography, for both in matters of action and stage direction the film is unusually good.

The 20,000 square feet of glass in the new Lubin studio offered a tempting target for rocket sticks and other evidences of a "safe and sane" Fourth but not a pane was broken though several small rocket sticks were found on the roof the following morning. The glass used is of an unusual thickness and this, in part accounts for its immunity from injury.

Most of the Lubin players spent the holiday at Atlantic City, those of the stock company having summer homes there inviting their less fortunate companions though several preferred Ocean City.

The scenic artists at the Lubin studio are working overtime on the new paint frame turning out settings for the big new productions. A single set on the floor of the studio almost suggests a doll house, so tiny is it in comparison to the huge structure that houses it but the effect is even more remarkable when a dozen or more settings are in place, dotted here and there over the big space. The players greatly appreciate the convenience of being able to play all interior scenes in one day, passing from set to set.

The Lubin Directors have in preparation a western story that is going to wipe out all existing records and establish a new one that it will be hard to beat. It is a mining camp story very much out of the ordinary. It will appear some time in August. The productions will be made with even more than the usual care and will employ a cast of about forty.

Last week a woman wrote the scenario department that she wanted to write picture plays and that she had a number of stories well fitted for production. She might have made a hit had it not been that the sample scenario was one of the Lubin subjects for last February. She was trying to sell the stolen story to the firm that originally made it. It is the third time within a month that the same thing has happened, to say nothing of the stories stolen from other manufacturers that are submitted almost every day.

BUSINESS IS GOOD IN BROOKLYN.

John Volk, manager of the Huntington motion picture theatre, Brooklyn, N. Y., is one of the managers who reports a good business during the hot, summer days. While Mr. Volk's theatre is not elaborately furnished, outside of having the best machine and pictures, has one big advantage—the cooling breezes of the river to sweep through the building.

While the house seats but 300, it is never allowed to be crowded. Mr. Volk is a firm believer of giving patrons comfort during a performance; he does not adhere to crowded or congested houses; he claims business is better and patrons appreciate the fact the manager is catering to their comfort as well as the dimes.

CANONSBURG'S OPEN AIR THEATRE OPENED.

The open air theatre on South Central avenue, Canonsburg, Pa., opened July 2, to an excellent business. The place has been crowded ever since the opening and the outlook for business during the remainder of the summer is most promising?

Independence day brought on the largest crowds in the history of any amusement place in Canonsburg. People from far out in the neighboring sections were present to view the pictures, which were of the best patriotic subjects. The vaudeville, was also up to the standard, for motion picture theatres.

The management of the house has spent considerable money in making the place up to date and to be in a position of giving its patrons every comfort possible. New pictures will be shown every day and the vaudeville will be changed twice a week.

LIVE TOPICS ABOUT TOWN.

Over in Brooklyn there is a motion picture show manager who seeks originality in his business. His latest novelty is to entertain his patrons with grotesque shadows formed by running the films backward on his machine. "You have no idea how funny your movements would appear if reversed," he advertises. "Come in and see!" That the adventure is profitable is shown by the increased gate receipts, he says.

Synopsis of Production Issued by the Leading Song and Novelty Slide Makers.

SCOTT & VAN ALTENA.

"MY MORNING ROSE."—Words by Arthur Longbrake; music by Ed. Edwards; published by the Jos. Morris Co., New York. An Indian song of great merit, for which Scott & Van Altena have made illustrations posed for in rich native Indian costume. The costumes, campfires, etc., give an excellent opportunity for fine coloring that has not been lost to the manufacturers. The woods, where Indians lived, play a large part in this set, as do also many novelties—clever ideas by Scott & Van Altena.

"YIDDLE ON YOUR FIDDLE, PLAY SOME RAGTIME."—There is hardly a person who has not heard this great ragtime song hit of Irving Berlin's; published by Ted Snyder Co., New York. Its popularity, like a gale of wind, has traveled from one end of the continent to the other, casting its currents in every direction. Its contagious rythm affects everyone, creating a hilarious feeling. This feeling is portrayed humorously in a set of illustrations which contain what we are all glad to see when appropriate—a little "rough house."

"SOMEBODY ELSE, IT'S ALWAYS SOMEBODY ELSE."—A pathetic lit'le love ballad set to excellent music by Geo. W. Meyer. Words by Jack Drislane; published by F. B. Haviland, New York. A set of slides have been produced for this song that not only contain a more than usual number of the Scott & Van Altena novelties, but are posed for by unusually handsome models in picturesque places, and are colored with good taste by some one with a thorough knowledge of the subject. It is a pleasure to look at this set.

"HELLO, MISS LIBERTY."—March song with music by Fred Fischer; published by the Fred Fischer Music Pub. Co., New York. Words by Thomas J. Gray tell of how Americans, after they have traveled over the various countries abroad, are glad to see their own land again. The slides include many scenes of European countries that are both interesting and instructive.

"BLAZE OF GLORY."—A fine march song by Abe Holzman; published by Leo. Feist. The illustrations are striking scenes, portraying the glories of the good old U. S. A.; deeds which we have done and of which we are justly proud. Striking novel effects with fine photographic quality and coloring make this a set which all will surely admire.

"THE SONG THAT FINDS AN ECHO IN MY HEART."—Words by Richard Buch; music by Theo. Morse; published by Theo. Morse Music Co. A sentimental ballad with beautiful illustrations. There keeps passing through the mind of the youth the strains of that old-time air, "O, My Darling Nellie Gray," recalling his Souther home and friends. Fine models, charming settings, beautiful coloring, with the usual novelties, make this a very fine set.

"YOU FOR ME WHEN YOUR WIFE'S AWAY."—Words by A. Longbrake; music by Ed. Edwards; published by The Jos. Morris Co. A song with comedy and comedy illustrations. One girl prefers the company of another's husband, consequently the title, music and slides that are full of funny situations, with characteristic high quality of work throughout from poses to coloring. Novelties, too, make this set an attractive one.

"TOOT YOUR HORN, KID, YOU'RE IN A FOG."—A novelty song with words by Jos. Mittenthal; music by Jos. M. Daly, and published by Daly Music Co. Obadiah, a country lad, loves little Mary, but to all his pleadings comes her answer of "Toot Your Horn, Kid, You're in a Fog." Of course the illustrations are fine, with plenty of variety and novel effects. In the last slide Mary and her city friends shout to Obadiah as they fly past his auto in their faster machine.

"IF THIS ROSE TOLD YOU ALL IT KNOWS."—Words by Jack Mahoney; music by Theo. Morse; published by Theo. Morse Music Co. A pretty sentimental ballad with a very sweet tone. Most of the pictures for this set were taken in gardens, making the set a most desirable one, as it abounds in beautiful flowers of all colors, a veritable riot of color. The models are good, exceptionally so. Novelties, too, are not lacking.

DE WITT C. WHEELER.

"OH, YOU SPEARMINT KIDDO WITH THE WRIGLEY EYES."—Guess that's going some. It takes William Jerome to write the clever lyrics. When it comes to "Tutti Frutti beauty" and "peptonized kisses," he's right there with the sticky stuff. Jean Schwartz is there with the right music dope, too. Published by Jerome H. Remick. You all know what Wheeler does when he gets hold of a funny song like the "Spearmint Kiddo." He does it up right and makes a set of slides that make a hit. This one will.

"TO-NIGHT, SWEETHEART, TO-NIGHT."—Lyric and music by Evelyn Bloom; published by Jerome H. Remick, New York. A sentimental love ballad set to waltz music. Illustrations by Wheeler show that the improvement in song slides still continues. Each slide contains besides good posing a picked background of remarkable distinction. This gives the slide a scenic value as well as illustrative. The set is a good one from every standpoint.

"DREAMING OF YOU."—Poem by Tell Taylor; music by J. M. Wilcockson; published by Wilcockson Music Co., Hammond, Ind. One of the "dreamy" songs which, when of a high order, always please, as this one is sure to do. The waltz melody of the chorus is in a beautiful theme and captivating in the extreme. The slides are really remarkable for their beauty. They illustrate not only the song, but illustrate what a beautiful country this is and what picturesque spots there are in it, if one only has the artistic eye to find them.

"I WANT SOME ONE TO FLIRT WITH ME."—Words by Sterling and Costello; music by Albert Von Tilzer; published by York Music Co., New York. Sterling and Costello, both individually and combined, always produce good lyrics and this song is no exception. The music by Albert Von Tilzer has made this song a hit and one hears it everywhere. Slides that suit the lyrics to the letter are produced in Wheeler's usual style, including several novelties.

"LOVE KEEPS THE WHOLE WORLD YOUNG."—Music by Will L. Becker; words by Saul M. Aronson; published by M. Witmark & Sons, New York. A waltz ballad of the usual high order published by this house. Illustrations for this song surpass anything yet turned out by Mr. Wheeler. There are not only more novelties, but novelties of a new order that have never before been seen in a song slide. The first good point about the set is that it illustrates the lyrics perfectly. Secondly, much of the scenery was obtained on one of Mr. Wheeler's trips out West; if you don't know what a Colorado sunset is, see this. Thirdly and lastly, the posing is excellent and the coloring rich, true to nature, and very pleasing.

"I'LL BUILD A FENCE AROUND YOU."—Published by F. A. Mills, New York. This is Mills' latest hit and is said to be a "peach." Illustrations by Mr. Wheeler might be called "the set of novelties." By novelties we mean pictures that are out of the class of straight or ordinary pictures; pictures that are the slide manufacturer's own conception of an idea to illustrate a lyric in an appropriate but clever manner. If all ballads were to be illustrated simply with two lovers in different positions, the illustrated song would soon become montonous. Novelties are now the backbone of the set.

"BACK TO THE BLEACHERS FOR MINE."—Words by Harry Breen; music by Albert Von Tilzer; published by York Music Co., who last summer published the baseball hit of the season, viz., "Take Me to the Ball Game." This year they have outdone themselves, as "Back to the Bleachers for Mine" is far better. The song itself is excelled only by its own illustrations, which are clever, humorous to a high degree, and altogether the work of a master hand. To say it is out of the ordinary is expressing mildly the quality of this set. Nearly every slide is a novelty and is comedy. Baseball "fans" galore. A set that should please all in this baseball-mad country.

ALFRED L. SIMPSON.

"WHEN YOU AND I WERE YOUNG, MAGGIE."—This is the old time ballad, so well loved by our mothers, with a new arrangement by the well-known and up-to-date composer, Eugene Platzmann. Published by Shapiro. This well-known ballad needs no description. The slides Simpson has made are artistic.

"BABY FACE, MY BABY FACE."—Words and music by Melville J. Gidion, author of the "Yankiana Rag." Published by Chas. I. Davis, Cleveland, O. This is a very beautiful plantation song, full of love and sentiment, and touches the heart of the observer. It is now making a hit wherever it is being sung. The slides for this song are Simpson's best and carry out in perfect detail the story.

"JUST BECAUSE YOU'RE A POOR LITTLE GIRL."—Words by Ed. Gardenier; music by Gus Edwards. In this exquisite ballad, these two well-known composers have done justice to a very pleasing theme. This is the story of a poor little tot who is loved by a rich boy. The slides are truly beautiful and we can only say that this song will make as big a hit as the well known "Only Me."

"ALL I ASK IS LOVE."—Words by Edgar Selden; music by Herbert Ingraham. A great love song. Published by Shapiro, and is now making a big hit everywhere. The slides for this surpass anything that Simpson has done of late and reflect great credit on his general musical and theatrical knowledge.

"MR. JOHNSON, GOOD NIGHT."—A comedy coon song with the story of how a fashionable colored lady turns down a white-wash man. Words by Andrew Sterling; music by Herbet Ingraham, the author of the celebrated song, "Roses Bring Dreams of You." Published by Shapiro. The slides for this song are posed by colored models and bring out in great detail the humor intended by the author, and is a diversion from the usual love ballad. It is very funny and entertaining.

"MY LOVE FOR YOU IS LIKE THE STARS THAT SHINE."—Words and music by Robert G. Irvy; published by Columbia Music Co. of Washington. It is a beautiful love ballad in the usual flowery style. The slides of this ballad are very picturesque and the models cannot be excelled. Simpson has certainly done himself great credit in this set of slides.

"YOU LOOK JUST LIKE A GIRL I USED TO KNOW."—Another beautiful love ballad written and composed by the celebrated author, Don Ramsay, author of "Some Day When Dreams Come True." Published by Walter Jacobs of Boston. This is a great song and is making a great hit. Slides for same are very beautiful and in the usual loving style.

"NOW YOU CAN HAVE YOUR O. U. KID, BUT IT IS A LOVIN' WIFE FOR MINE."—Words and music by Herbet Ingraham; published by Shapiro. This is a very novel and comic song and shows how the devotion of a good husband will overcome any desire for the pleasures of the wine table, etc. Slides for this song are very funny.

"DARKEY MOON."—Written by Jones and Deeley and Stanley Murphy; published by Shapiro. A good ballad telling the love story of lover and his sweetheart from youth to age. Simpson has made a set of slides that is certainly the kind of work he excels in. The models are not the ordinary "coons," but the real plantation darkies in real Southern surroundings.

"THE KISS OF SPRING."—Words by Phil Staats, composer of "Some Day When Dreams Come True"; music by Walter Rolfe; published by Walter Jacobs, Boston, Mass. This is one of the song hits of the season. The lyric is of great poetical merit, and the music truly classic. Simpson has selected a beautiful girl for his subject and has made a great set of pictures of true artistic merit.

"WHEN THEY GATHER THE SHEAVES, MARY DEAR."—A simple ballad of the pastoral type, set to an appealing and appropriate melody; words are by C. M. Dennison; music by that ever-popular composer, J. Fred Helf; published by the J. Fred Helf Pub. Co. These qualities, combined with the artistic slides Simpson has made for this dainty little ballad, are sure to make a hit with any audience.

"IF I MUST SAY FAREWELL, KATE, LET ME KISS YOUR LIPS GOOD-BYE."—Words by Robert F. Roden; music by J. Fred Helf; published by Helf Pub. Co. A very fine ballad in the best style of the above-named composers, who are so well known to the amusement loving public. The slides are very beautiful and are in the best style of Simpson. The photography is great, the coloring exquisite.

"MY SUNDAY GIRL."—Lyric by Earle C. Jones; music by N. S. Carter; published by J. H. Aufderheide Publishing Co., Indianapolis, Ind. The hero of this ballad has indeed a great many strings to his bow, but his "Sunday Girl" is the only one whom he really loves, as is told in a very dainty way, and Simpson has made a pretty set of slides, pretty girls, clever posing, amid beautiful surroundings.

THE HENRY B. INGRAM CO., KINGSTON, N. Y.

"WAITING."—Song by Wm. H. Bevan; published by the Vandersloot Company, Williamsport, Pa. A beautiful ballad posed by Mr. Arthur Britt and Miss Alice Van Keuren in the Fantinekill glen, Ellenville, N. Y. Marvelously beautiful pictures for a beautiful song. Mr. Ingram has exceeded himself in this song.

"MY WESTERN ROSE."—Song by F. W. Vandersloot, and Harry J. Lincoln; published by the Vandersloot Company, Williamsport, Pa. A breezy Western song full of the flavor of the prairie and snapping with go of the girl who rides her pony and punches cows. An attractive set of slides of the very best posing.

"MY SOUTHERN HOME."—A song of the sunny South by the Rev. J. A. Patton and Harry J. Lincoln. A beautiful old home song filled with the remembrances of magnolias and cotton fields. The southland of long ago is depicted in this song with all the beauty that nature can provide or love can sustain. A grand song. Impressive pictures.

"I WONDER HOW THE OLD FOLKS ARE AT HOME."—A beautiful song of where is my wandering boy, to-night. The wanderer on a foreign shore sees his father and mother before the fireplace; he hears the cattle lowing in the fields; he sees the splashing waterfalls and fields of ripening grain. Yearning for the old home again he soliloquizes and sings of the old place. Characteristic pictures. Song by Herbert S. Lambert and F. W. Vandersloot. Published by the Vandersloot Co., Williamsport, Pa.

"ONLY YOU."—A beautiful love song by Harry J. Lincoln and Reba Vandersloot; published by the Vandersloot Company, Williamsport, Pa. This song is a marvel of musical and literary beauty, and Mr. Ingram has chosen the best looking girl and young fellow in Ulster County, N. Y., for his subjects. Posed at Ellenville, N. Y.

"MY SUNNY SUE."—Song by Andrew B. Sterling and George Hamilton. Published by the Vandersloot Company, Williamsport, Pa. Posed for by Miss Alice Van Keuren and Howard Richard at Mt. Meenhaga, N. Y. A grand set of pictures.

"SUNNY, SUNNY JUNE."—Song by W. P. Merrick; published by the Vandersloot Company, Williamsport, Pa. A fine waltz song with splendid illustrations.

"LUCKY MOON."—Song by Jeff T. Branen and George Stevens. A great moon song with appropriate pictures. Fair Luna and the spoony lovers at their best. Great pictures.

"DREAMING IN THE OLD ARM CHAIR."—A grand old mother song by Burdick and Washbon; published by same, Lockport, N. Y. A story of an old lady who is dreaming away the sunset of life in her old arm chair. She smiles in her slumbers as she hears the happy voices of the children in the long ago life as she lived it passes before her in a dreamy panorama, as she waits patiently for the Master's call. A beautiful song full of pathos and sentiment.

"ONLY A DREAM OF YOU."—Beautiful semi-classic song by Carl Loveland and Harry J. Lincoln; published by the Vandersloot Company of Williamsport, Pa. The pictures for this song are beautiful and appropriate in the extreme. This song is a favorite with the best class of singers.

"PONY MAID."—Great cowboy song by Carl Loveland and Harry J. Lincoln; published by the Vandersloot Company, Williamsport, Pa.

"MY PRETTY MOUNTAIN QUEEN."—A grand mountain song by W. P. Merrick; published by Vandersloot Co., Williamsport, Pa. Grand mountain scenery tuned to the music of the brooks and tinkling waterfalls. Pretty pictures all through and a sweet, melodious production.

NOVELTY PUZZLETTES.

Exclusive original puzzle pictures by the famous puzzle man, Sam Loyd:

CHANGING LETTER SERIES.—This is a particularly clever set, done in Loyd's best style. The puzzles seem hard, yet how easy to solve when you know how.

HIDDEN GEOGRAPHICAL NAMES.—A very interesting lot of puzzles, that wil lmake theatre patrons think hard, and at the same time amuse them immensely.

CITIES OF THE UNITED STATES.—Clever puzzle pictures, representing in puzzle form cities in this country. Beautifully colored and well illustrated. Entertaining, amusing and of a highly educational character.

STATES OF THE UNITED STATES.—Representing in puzzle form the states of the United States. Second set of series of puzzle slides designed to increase box-office receipts.

POPULAR FLOWERS.—Puzzlettes of the best-known flowers. Beautifully colored. Six puzzle slides, as usual, and explanatory slides and answer slides.

URBANA AIR DOME OPENED.

June 30 was opening night at the new Airdome, Urbana, O., and judging from the crowded houses it will be a big success. The house was crowded to the doors and all seemed to enjoy the performance greatly. The theatre was very cool and comfortable and to say the least it is a big novelty. The pictures are very clear and steady. The band played the opening overture as well as before each performance and were applauded liberally.

The Orpheum Theatre on Main street and The Airdome are both running with a complete change of bill every night. The price of admission to both houses is five cents, with the exception of nights when there are vaudeville acts.

JOHN B. ASHTON BUYS NEW HOUSE.

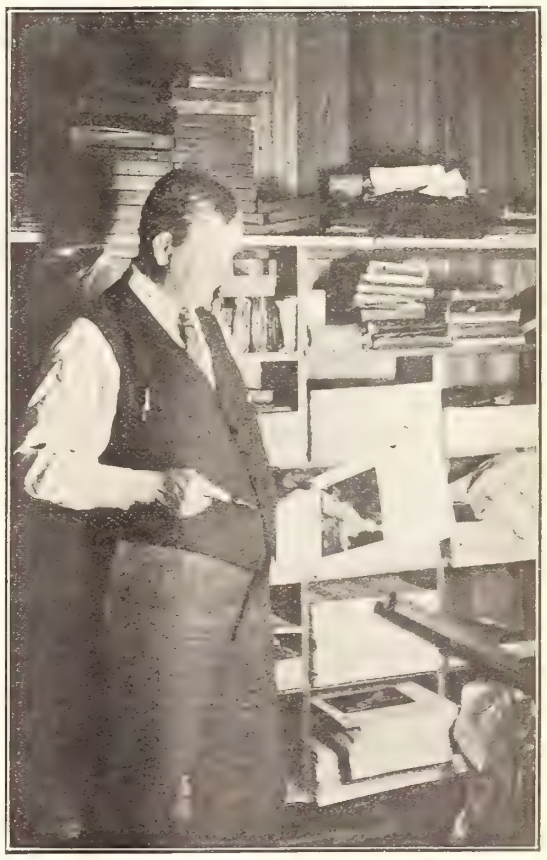
John B. Ashton has purchased the Rex motion picture theatre from J. K. Cobb, of Provo, Utah, and will soon start making extensive repairs. Work on the balcony has already begun and when completed will seat 75 persons. This will give the house a seating capacity of 375.

Mr. Ashton already owns two houses in Provo, the Ellen and Majestic.

MAKING GOOD AT KINGSTON.

Henry B. Ingram, song slide maker, who for many years was at 42 West 28th Street, New York City, writes that success is coming his way at Kingston, N. Y., where he moved his plant.

Besides illustrating many more songs than he did while in New York, Mr. Ingram has opened a slide rental bureau and has obtained the business of most of the theatres in that locality. He also does a large souvenir postal card business.



We print some illustrations of Mr. Ingram's latest slides, giving some idea of the beautiful backgrounds to be obtained without much trouble near Kingston.

Y. M. C. A. SHOWS PICTURES.

A motion picture, showing the development of a chicken from the egg to the full grown garden destroyer was presented at the Y. M. C. A. tent, St. Peter's street near Seventh, St. Paul, Minn. Another film representing scenes from the life and times of Abraham Lincoln were also thrown upon the curtain.

ASSOCIATION WILL BRACE UP.

New York Exhibitors Resolve to Strengthen Their Organization—Also Want Law Observed.

About forty members of the Greater New York Motion Picture Exhibitors' Association met at Nickoland, Joseph Driscoll's picture theatre, at Third avenue and 162d street, Bronx, on Friday evening July 1, to discuss the necessity of building up the organization. President Frank G. Poulson was in the chair.

The first business to be considered was a series of resolutions relating principally to the law forbidding children of less than 16 years to attend picture theatres alone. The resolutions also took notice of the recent action of the Grand Jury in criticising the conduct of picture theatres. In full it reads as follows:

WHEREAS, there appears to be a very strong public impression that moving picture shows are sources of evil and that they are places dangerous to the morals of children;

AND WHEREAS, this public sentiment has been strong enough to induce a grand jury of New York County to make a presentment against moving picture shows;

AND WHEREAS, public sentiment demands the enforcement of section 484 of the Penal Law making it a misdemeanor to admit or permit to remain in a moving picture show, any child under sixteen years of age unattended; therefore

RESOLVED, that the members of the Moving Picture Exhibitors' Association hereby pledge themselves honestly, earnestly and zealously to enforce not only the letter but the spirit of Section 484 of the Penal Law and neither to admit nor permit to remain in his place any child under the age of sixteen years unattended by parent or guardian and to instruct his ticket sellers to refuse to sell any ticket for admission to and his ticket takers to refuse to admit any child under sixteen years of age unattended, to his moving picture show;

RESOLVED, that each member of this Association be requested to place a sign in large and conspicuous letters announcing that section 484 of the Penal Code will be strictly enforced;

RESOLVED, that the Board of Aldermen are hereby requested to pass an ordinance establishing a municipal censorship of all moving pictures to be exhibited in New York City and to make it a crime to manufacture, dispose of or exhibit any moving picture which has not received the approval of such municipal board of censorship.

There was scarcely any discussion on this document and it seemed that every member present fully realized the necessity of doing something to place the picture theatre right in the minds of the people. It was adopted without dissent.

Mr. F. Britz, organizer for the Association addressed the meeting at some length upon the necessity of obtaining more members. At his suggestion a letter stating the situation that confronts the picture theatre manager in New York was prepared to be addressed to all members. The following is the text of the letter:

At no time in the history of the motion picture business has there been a more urgent need and demand for an Exhibitors' Union than there is at the present time. The sooner you, Mr. Exhibitor, get together with the rest of us the better for us all. You may be surprised to learn that, within the last few weeks, through the activity of our ministers, police and the Gerry Society, no less than 150 exhibitors have been brought before the courts and fined from $25 to $100. If we allow these conditions to go on there is no telling which one of us may even be imprisoned for the terrible crime of admitting children to our shows. You may be picked out as the next victim.

The above organization, through the advice of its councillor, has offered a remedy. Now, realizing, as we assume that you do, that in unity there is strength, and also, wishing to remove all obstacles from your way to join us, this Association, at a meeting held on Tuesday, June 21, 1910, at 1565 Third avenue, in the city of New York, has resolved that, in order to present a solid front to the various bodies, to reduce its initiation fee to the small sum of $1 and the dues to $1 per month, for which amount you are entitled to the services of our attorney when in need of his services pertaining to your business, thereby giving you every chance to join this association.

We think that it is high time for you to wake up from your long sleep and to realize the condition of affairs which are confronting us at this present time. None of you can afford to stay out from this association which holds everything for you in the future.

Do not delay this matter, for if you do you will have no one to blame but yourself. Think of the 24th day of December, 1908. We trust that this letter will appeal to you and that you will return the enclosed card to the secretary, expressing your willingness to join. He will immediately notify you of our next meeting. However, this association reserves the right to reject any applicant who may prove to be undesirable.

It is hoped that this letter, together with the personal solicitation of the organizer, will have the effect of bringing many new members into the organization.

During the session Mr. Driscoll demonstrated his method of lighting his theatre and the advantages of the Simpson Solar Screen. It was shown that the auditorium could be perfectly lighted by the use of two 100 c. p. Tungsten burners in the reflector supplied by the National X-Ray Reflector Company, where previously 28 16 c. p. lamps had been used. Mr. Driscoll estimated that the saving in the lighting current was about 80 per cent. The value of the Simpson Screen was clearly shown in the fact that, even in the strong light, gave a clear sharp image. In fact, it was the screen that really made possible the use of so much light during the running of the pictures.

The members of the Association present were delighted with the results obtained and many expressed a determination to have the system installed in their houses.

AMERICAN GAUMONT CO. LICENSE CANCELLED.

Notice has been given by the Motion Picture Patents Company that the pictures and projecting machines manufactured and supplied by the so-called American Gaumont Company, of which Mr. H. Blache is president, are not licensed and must not be used by licensed exhibitors. George Kleine, of Chicago, Ill., is the only representative in American of the Gaumont Company of Paris, and only such pictures as are supplied by him may be used in licensed theatres.

FIRE CHIEF'S DAUGHTER MAKES HIT.

"The Fire Chief's Daughter" one of the best films ever produced by the Selig Polyscope company, made a great hit at the Lincoln Square theatre, Sixty-sixth street, New York city, last week. In spite of the good vaudeville acts, the audience applauded "The Fire Chief's Daughter" picture more than anything on the program.

The film was most realistic in every detail and kept the audience at attention at all times. The orchestra effects—such as the clanging of the fire bells—the engine whistles and the galloping of the horses added greatly to the success of the picture.

MONTGOMERY SELLS OUT.

Memphis Famous Picture Man Disposes of His Theatres and Will Retire for a While.

The following communication from Mr. F. T. Montgomery, of Memphis, Tenn., is self-explanatory. The picture exhibition business loses a good man through his retirement, but it is only temporary, and we hope to see him in the harness again:

Editor Film Index, New York City, N. Y.:

Dear Sir—I have recently consummated a deal whereby all of my theatres in Memphis have been sold to Messrs. Bridges & Tarleton. My health has been very bad, and I intend to take a much needed rest. For the last two years I have devoted 14 hours daily to my office, and to say that I have made a success of my business would be putting it very mildly. I have been told that my shows were the best in the South, and if spending money on improvements and performances is a criterion to go by, I should judge that this statement is true. My advertising account alone has averaged nearly $1,000.00 per month. My theatres have been patronized by the elite of our city. My business has been recognized as legitimate and worthy of the patronage of even the clergy.

In leaving Memphis, it will be my intention to soon locate elsewhere, I am a moving picture enthusiast, and would feel out of place in any other business.

In leaving this profession temporarily, I wish to extend to these gentlemen, through your paper, my heartfelt congratulations upon their products.

You may continue to forward my paper to the Majestic theatre at Memphis until further notified.

Enclosed you will find copy for next week's issue. Please insert and send bill to the address herein given.

Thanking you for past favors, I beg to remain,

Yours very respectfully,

F. T. MONTGOMERY.

ENTERTAINED THE SAILORS.

Recently, while the U. S. S. Michigan was in New York harbor, the Kleine Optical Company, now a branch of the General Film Co., gave the sailors of that ship a complimentary picture show, running he Johnson-Ketchel fight pictures. As fistiana is in great favor among the big and little "dogs of war," the fight picture was enthusiastically received.

terest, but has turned it over to his employee. Mr. Blache, who has not hitherto been suspected of being a capitalist of sufficient weight to buy even the Flushing plant.

Chicago Orpheum Defies Hot Weather.

I called last week on Sam I. Levin, General Manager of the Jones, Linick & Schaefer theatres, on his return from a short vacation, and secured some interesting figures on the year's business at the Orpheum. The fiscal year at this house ends June 30 of each year, and on asking Mr. Levin the number of people entertained at the State street theatre, from July 1, 1909, until June 30, 1910, he had only to refer to his carefully kept book records to furnish the desired information.

After a few minutes figuring he showed me that 1,947,000 people had paid admission for the period mentioned. He also figured from the preceding year's records an attendance of 1,754,000, thus showing an increase of 193,000 for the year just closed, or of 11 per cent. This reduced to dollars and cents means a gain of $19,300 in the gross business of last year over that of the year running from July, 1908 to June 30, 1909, at an admission of 10 cents per head.

This is strong evidence of the healthy and continuous growth of moving pictures in popular favor, where the conveniences and surroundings are first class and where a superior film service is assured. The Orpheum exhibits two first runs daily and backs them up with high class vocal and instrumental music. Formerly, only three changes were made weekly, and Mr. Levin attributes the increased attendance to the new daily bills, which have largely increased the list of regular patrons.

For the year ending June 30, 1909, the regular patrons formed 20 per cent. of the gross attendance; the year just ended shows that the regular patrons have mounted up to fully one-half of the gross attendance. This is remarkable, on a busy thoroughfare like State street, where so many transients can be depended upon as patrons, and yet it can be easily explained. The numerous shoppers that frequent the "Loop" daily have learned that a new show is given every day and they make it a custom to take in the Orpheum. So with the many employes in department stores and office buildings, who make it a point to see as many of the Orpheum bills as possible. Then there are the guests in the principal hotels nearby who attend regularly, when convinced that they can see new subjects daily.

I learned from George H. Moore, manager of the Orpheum that the recent hot waves had not materially affected the attendance, and that, on Independence Day, nothwithstanding the imposing military and parade spectacles which occupied the entire day, the theatre was continuously taxed to accommodate the crowds.

"Let me see your ventilating apparatus," I asked, knowing that the comfort of patrons must be carefully provided for, in order to score such a record. And this is what I found: an immense exhaust fan on the third floor, connecting with the theatre by a large boxed flue, and capable of emptying the entire volume of air in the theatre every two or three minutes, the motor controlling the fan being 7½ horse power; down in the basement a similar intake fan, which draws the air from outside through an air washing machine, all the dust and smoke particles being separated from the inrushing air by means of numerous water sprays, the latter also cooling the air as it passes through. No matter how high the thermometer may range outside, the temperature of the Orpheum never goes above 75° F. and is seldom higher than 70°.

And so Orpheum patrons are not only provided with a good show; they are also guaranteed personal comfort and all the conveniences and courtesies customary at a first class modern theatre.

General manager Levin informed me that the personnel of Orpheum audiences has improved considerably within the last fiscal year, and that he can number the best people in the city among his patrons. The American Film Service books the Orpheum subjects.

The Jones, Linick & Schaefer Company is now building the Willard, at Fifty-first street and Calumet avenue, an imposing modern theatre that will seat 1,500 people. This makes the twelfth house in the chain of Chicago theatres owned by the Company mentioned. It will be run as a high class vaudeville and picture house, with admissions of 10 and 20 cents.

Chicago Film Brevities.

Frank R. Roberson, possibly the most widely traveled lecturer in the world, arrived in Chicago, Thursday, June 30, from Oberammergau, where he witnessed the presentation of the "Passion Play." During his European trip he traveled through Germany, Italy, France and the United Kingdom. Mr. Roberson uses moving pictures and slides to illustrate his new series of travelogues, and especially shows his preference for the product of Gaumont and Urban-Eclipse. He left Chicago Saturday, July 1, on a summer lecture tour of the Middle West to cover 58 night appearances.

W. F. Lynch, Chicago representative of the Kalem Co., made a trip to St. Louis, last week, in the interests of that Company, and reports that he found conditions there most encouraging. The O. T. Crawford Co. and the Western Film Exchange informed him that although they are well into the Summer season, very few houses have closed. Those exhibitors, whom Mr. Lynch found time to visit during his stay, were all doing a fine business. Many of the St. Louis houses have what they call "request" days, and this innovation adds considerably to the interest of patrons. Mr. Lynch tells me that about 100 airdomes, or open air picture shows, have been opened in St. Louis for the Summer, and that they have helped the exchange men very materially. Mr. Lynch is well pleased with the outlook in Chicago for the Kalem product.

The Rev. P. H. Barker, pastor of the First Congregational Church of Maywood, a Chicago suburb, lectured, Sunday before last, in his church on the "Passion Play," using moving pictures as illustrations. He announced that on the following Sunday the Opera "Parsifal" would be the subject of his lecture, and that moving pictures would be employed to illustrate it. In these lectures Mr. Barker is assisted by a young lady violin virtuoso and by an operatic tenor.

George Breck, Edison jobber, of San Francisco, was requested recently by his company to ascertain the effect of water proofing on films, with special regard to the wearing quality of the film itself. Mr. Breck wrote as follows to his Company: "We beg to advise that we have this morning received a report from the Novelty Moving Picture Company, answering our inquiry regarding water-proof films. They state that the film appears to be strengthened, and that films wear much better than those previously furnished." This is a decided boost for the National Waterproof Film Company of this city, which has spared neither time, expense nor labor to demonstrate the value of its process.

W. R. Scates, formerly manager of the Theatre Film Service Company, and still holding an important official position in the Chicago branch of the General Film Co., which recently purchased the former concern, has been confined to his home for the last ten days with pleurisy. The latest reports show that he is rapidly recovering.

E. H. Montague, fomerly Chicago Western manager of the Pathe Freres and now stationed in New York City, paid a flying visit to his numerous friends here on Independence Day. It is unnecessary to state that he was cordially welcomed. He returned to New York Tuesday, July 5.

Wm. H. Swanson, the old war horse of the "independents," stopped over in Chicago, July 4, on his way back to New York, after a business tour of the Middle West. Mr. Swanson reports that business throughout the section visited by him was encouraging.

The Health Department of Chicago ordered the "Fly Pest" and the "Acrobatic Fly" from George Kleine last week, for use in the present campaign against the winged nuisance. The "Fly Pest" still continues in big demand, and Mr. Kleine is led to believe that the Summer months will bring out numerous orders for the film.

CASUAL COMMENT.

attended, was passed because of the scandalous things that happened in dark theatres whose owners were unscrupulous.

Many theatre managers know that the evil conditions complained of still exist in large cities. A New York grand jury has recently recommended that those conditions be eliminated and that picture theatres be properly supervised.

Now, knowing these things, what's the use of waiting until the hand of the law gives your neck a twist before you wake up to the necessity of putting your house in shape to withstand criticism?

Keep on as you are and there will be a few picture theatre managers looking for new jobs, sure as shootin'.

BUT to return to the subject: A week ago Friday evening the Editor of the Index attended a meeting of the New York Picture Theatre Men's Association, held at Joseph Driscoll's theatre at 162d street and 3d avenue, Bronx. Entering the auditorium we stepped into an almost brilliantly lighted room from which one might easily see a pin on the floor, and pick it up, if one wanted to without a search warrant.

This condition was brought about by two agencies: First, the light was produced by a comparatively new system of reflection which throws the light to the ceiling from whence it is again spread by reflection about the room. To light Driscoll's "Nicoland" house, which is about 40 feet wide by 80 feet deep, two 100 c. p. tungsten and two 16 c. p. Edison lamps were used. As we observed before, a pin could be readily detected with the naked eye and a newspaper read without hurting one's eyes in any part of the auditorium. That was all the light needed.

The second agency was a Simpson Solar Screen, which will show pictures in almost daylight.

In the matter of cost the expense of these two agencies for the betterment of pictures is but a small item when the equipment of a new house is being considered. The cost of installing them in old houses is not great. The screen is the lowest in price, the most convenient and practical of several devices intended to give clear pictures in a lighted auditorium. We have heard of glass mirror screen which is fragile and bulky and difficult to install, besides being extremely high in price. The Simpson Screen is of curtain material; rolls up easily and can be hung in the same manner as a window shade on a spring roller if desired.

With such convenient devices as the light and the screen mentioned there can no longer be a valid excuse for operating a "dark house." Wise managers will serve the interests of their patrons and, eventually of themselves, by adopting these devices and lighting their houses.

ANOTHER argument in favor of the light house has to do with the effect of the "flicker" of the projecting machine upon the eyes. Few people can look at pictures for any length of time without experiencing irritation of the eyes. This is caused by the strong contrast between the dark room and the glare of light on the screen. The eye is concentrated on the spot of light, more or less unsteady, which concentration strains the muscles of the eye frequently causing permanent injury.

In a "light house" there are no such contrasts. The light of the auditorium modifies the "flicker" and relieves the eye-strain.

A GREAT deal of credit is due Mr. Driscoll for demonstrating the possibilities of lighting a picture theatre. Until he began experimenting with the subject of lighting no one imagined that a picture theatre could be anything but dark—the darker the better. After spending several hundreds of dollars on various styles of lights and shades, Mr. Driscoll now believes that he has reached the highest degree of perfection obtainable.

Picture theatre managers present at the meeting held in Driscoll's theatre were deeply interested in the results obtained and it is quite probable that many of them will adopt the "light house" idea.

REMEMBER what we said last week about the picture theatre manager who ran vaudeville for the best part of his performance, and then cut it out for economy during the summer? Well, he closed his show the same week while the straight picture man on the next block is still packing them in.

That Mirror man is still gnawing the bone that Bradshaw man threw him a couple of weeks ago—or was it a rag? Heard bones were sweater after having been buried awhile.

Fact, though, you really can't blame the picture actor for looking at the camera. Can you imagine a more hopeless task—to an actor—than posing for pictures. No enraptured, applauding audience to thrill you and urge you to greater effort; no flowers over the footlights; no "wash notes" no nothin'. The best you can do is to get in the camera and then go and pay five cents to see yourself in the picture. And now the Mirror man wants to take that one last pleasure away. O, what's the use!

WHAT THE DAISY SAID.

This is a pretty Biograph pastoral in which two sisters, after consulting the daisy as to whether their sweethearts loved them, meet at different times a handsome young gypsy, who, in telling their fortunes, plans their futures to suit himself. He induces the love of both, each unknown to the other, only to be discovered in his perfidy. After having their hearts wounded by the unconscionable Nomad, they decide to follow the daisy's prophecy and return to their former sweethearts. APPROXIMATE LENGTH, 987 FEET.

Released July 14th, 1910.

A CHILD'S FAITH

How the Little One's Prayer Was Answered.

In this Biograph subject is shown the efficacy of prayer. A young woman weds against her father's will and is disowned. Later the husband dies, leaving her to care for their little ten-year-old child. In the meantime, the old father has become a veritable miser, and to reduce his expenses moves into cheaper quarters, which happens to be, quite unknown to either, just above those of his disowned daughter. Not trusting the banks, he hides his wealth in the chimney. The poor mother and child are on the verge of starvation, when the child kneels and prays for help. At this moment the old man is returning his money, after counting it, to the chimney bank, when it falls through to the fireplace below. The child, of course, imagines it comes from Heaven in answer to her prayer. In regaining his wealth the old man is so touched by the child's faith that a reunion is effected. CASUAL COMMENTS

DURING the recent reign of hysteria which ruled the utterances of press and pulpit and caused otherwise sensible folk to predict dire results if certain motion pictures of a widely heralded athletic event were exhibited to the public, it was refreshing to note that there was an occasional official not influenced by newspaper clamor or the much pounding of pulpits.

First in mind is Mayor Gaynor, of New York City, who upon receipt of an urgent communication from the superintendent of a so-called "International Reform Bureau," requesting him to prohibit the so-called "fight pictures" in New York, made this reply:

I thank you for your favor of July 6. If it lay in my power to say whether the pictures should be exhibited it would not take me long to decide it. I do not see how it can do any one any good to look at them.

But will you be so good as to remember that ours is a government of laws and not of men? Will you please get that well into your head?

I am not able to do as I like as Mayor. I must take the law just as it is, and you may be absolutely certain that I shall not take the law into my own hands.

You say you are glad to see that the Mayors of many cities hace "ordered" that these pictures shall not be exhibited.

Indeed? Who set them up as autocrats? If there be some valid law giving any Mayor such power then he can exercise it, otherwise not.

The growing exercise of arbitrary power in this country by those put in office would be far more dangerous and is far more to be dreaded than certain other vices that we all wish to minimize or be rid of. People little know what they are doing when they try to encourage officials to resort to arbitrary power.

W. J. Gaynor, Mayor.

It is a fortunate thing that there is at least one Chief Magistrate of Cities in the United States who is mindful of the limitations of his office and recognizes that there are still laws to guide and govern the administration of his office.

Under the stress of "hue and cry" many mayors of cities and other persons in authority have proclaimed that the Johnson-Jeffries pictures should not be shown in their respective cities. Just why they took such a position few if any of them could give a valid reason for so doing.

As a matter of fact all that has been said against the pictures in question was said before they were seen by anyone. Those who have since had an opportunity to see them are wondering what all the fuss was about.

Here is a mayor who takes a sensible view of the matter; he is Mayor Rich of Lynn, Mass., and this is what he said about the pictures:

"I do not believe in all this hypocrisy about such a show degrading the morals of the people and I cannot see what possible harm can come from showing the fight just as it was.

"While the fight was in progress all of the newspapers of the country were rushing thousands of copies off their presses as fast as they could and every copy was eagerly bought as soon as it was on the street.

"These accounts of the fight were all highly colored after the style of newspapers in putting up such exciting stories, and if the minds of the populace was to be put in a dangerous condition it would have been then and by the time the pictures get into the show houses much of the excitement will have been allayed and I see no danger to be feared.

"As far as I have read there was no particular brutality about the fight, no riotous scenes about the ringside nor anything else which could figure in the pictures to give unusual excitement to those who see them.

"I believe the whole trouble is that the victory did not go to the popular man, and that what excitement there is at present is on account of that disappointment, so that when the people get into normal condition regarding the contest, they will look on the pictures more to compare them with what accounts have been read in the newspapers than for anything else."

We might give other illustrations of similar expressions, and, as the foregoing from private citizens and there will be more after the pictures have been shown.

There is no particular necessity of prolonging the agony. Beginning Monday, July 18, the Johnson-Jeffries pictures will be shown simultaneously in all the principal cities of the United States. In New York Percy G. Williams, the vaudeville magnate, will have charge of the exhibition end. Five New York and two Brooklyn theatres will be opened for this special feature, and those interested in athletics will have an opportunity to see as interesting a glove contest as has ever been pulled off.

We have seen the pictures and failed to discover the slightest suggestion of brutality or moral depravity which has been charged would be shown.

Really, there is nothing to it.

ONE of the amusing phases of the anti-fight picture agitation is the haste with which certain vaudeville and "nickelodeon" managers rushed into print to assure the public that they "would not allow the degrading fight pictures to appear in their houses." These announcements were made, we believe, after it was announced by the managers of the J. & J. Co. which controls the pictures, that they would not be available for "nickelodeons," or houses playing regularly to mixed audiences.

Imagine Marcus Loew, those of you who know him, turning down any thing that would net him a nickel. If there is anything more degrading than the cheap vaudeville that is to be seen in Loew's houses we have failed to observe it.

STILL another interesting phrase of the situation is the attempt of certain "independent" interests to get in on these pictures. First, they made a strong play for the real pictures; failing in that they tried to bribe a representative of one of the picture companies that made them. $1,200 in lovely new $100 bills was laid down for the man to look at, but it was not strong enough to land a single copy.

To provide against utter failure to have something that would resemble a "fight picture" some one of the "independent" picture pirates faked a fight between a negro and a white man, and it was this "fake" that the Empire Film Co., owned by A. Kessel, Jr., tried to deliver to William Morris in place of the genuine print it could not get.

Funny thing about Morris: he has been running "independent" pictures in his houses for some time, and though he knew that the fight pictures were "licensed," he did not hesitate to contract with an "independent," exchange for them. He claims that he was fooled and that he will sue for damages. Guess "Foxy" William knew that he was taking as big a chance to get the pictures as was the Empire Exchange.

But Morris was more fortunate that Walter Rosenberg, who runs a picture show at the Savoy Theatre on 4th street, New York. Walter advertised "Johnson-Jeffries Fight Pictures—first shown in New York." The ad. pulled a large house, but the pictures shown were lantern slides of still pictures taken by Robert Edgren. When the people in the audience discovered the fake they rose in their wrath and almost demolished the interior of the theatre. The police reserves were called to quell the riot and Rosenberg changed his sign in a hurry.

After these several efforts to obtain the fight pictures failed the "independents" joined the hue and cry against such "degrading exhibitions."

Wouldn't it make you laugh?

OUR criticism of the proneness of "Spectator" of The Mirror to holler "Jersey Scenery" whenever he suspects its presence in a picture has brought forth a column and a half comment on the aforesaid criticism, which leads us to suspect that "Spectator" is also hard up for copy. Evidently, "Spectator" proceeds upon the principle that familiarity breeds contempt, else he would scarcely object to the frequent appearance of the grandeur of the Palisades in pictures. Rather than to assume that it is unfortunate that nine-tenths of the pictures have been taken in Jersey, we would say that it is fortunate that the picture makers have Jersey in which to take pictures. This of course does not excuse the picture man for making too frequent use of the same part of Jersey or for getting the real estate signs in his scenes. As a matter of fact such incidents are the exception and do not justify the use of the term "Jersey scenery," as a general application. It is the abuse of the privilege that we criticise.

Preconceived ideas of what should or should not be a proper background for a picture of a certain type frequently leads one to error. For example, there is an impression that Indian and cowboy pictures should be only upon a prairie background, which would be true if one is thinking about or picturing plains cowboys and plains Indians. But there are Indians who live in the mountains and cowboys who live between them. Also, Indians used to inhabit Jersey, so there is an excuse for even "Jersey Indians" along with Jersey "skeeters," and Jersey "lightning," and all three relatively bad. There are also spots in Jersey where even a cowboy would feel quite at home; and we do not mean Louis Cooke's Continental hotel in Newark, or Go-Wan-Go Mohawk's comfortable teepee at Edgewater, either.

We reiterate that "mountains is mountains and woods is woods," etc., etc., and it matters little whether they are in Jersey or Pennsylvania when mountains and woods in general are called for by the story. It is only when the picture maker alleges that his picture is a "Rocky Mountain" picture, or a "black forest" picture that he should be careful to get the real thing lest some picture enthusiast should discover that the formation of the rocks or the foliage of the trees is not characteristic.

MR. HERBERT WATERBURY comes back again on the question of "camera consciousness" in the following communication to The Index:

In regard to a question the writer raised a few weeks ago concerning the "Mirror Man's Player's Camera-consciousness":

The awkward glances the writer had in mind was when the player in "The Season of Buds" delivered a note to the lead. He is facing the camera and glances to the ground while the lead is reading and twice closes his eyes when their vision would come in contact with that of the lens. It's that quick winking and everlasting gazing at the ground which the writer has reference to. Gazing at the ground during this particular scene was quite natural, but the eyes could have been lifted without blinking. If this is clearer: A manly character when looking off right gazes straight in front of him, when looking to left gazes straight in front of him, but when he faces the camera he drops his eyes as though he were ashamed you'd recognize him. The writer admits the artist should ignore the lens. Conspicuously avoiding it, as in these cases, is not ignoring it. The Vitagraph players seem to have the correct idea in this regard, as they move their eyes naturally.

Whether or not an artist should move his lips during a soliloquy depends entirely upon the character he's portraying. In any event, his soliloquy should be understood by the spectators and the artist should make clear his meaning by his eyes and facial expression. This cannot be done unless the spectators can see his eyes or face.

Awkward glances are what the writer criticized, not the lacking of gazing into the lens.

ESSANAY NAME CONTEST

Offers $100 for One-Word Name of Substitute for "Moving Picture Show"

The Essanay Company has announced a contest in which they offer $100 for a new one-word name as a substitute for "Moving picture show." The full details of the terms of the contest are explained in the Essanay Guide, a special enlarged edition, just received by the Index.

The article in the Guide says, in explaining the reason for the contest: We believe the "moving picture show" or "Five-Cent Theatre," as it is commonly labelled, is rapidly outgrowing these rather limited appellations. There is certainly a limitation in the description "picture-show" or "nickel theatre." And we may reasonably put the question: Will the description "picture show" ascend in dignity and command increasing respect as the art side of moving pictures continue to be perfected?' And, is it not a possibility the title "Nickel Theatre" may be a barrier in the way of those exhibitors who have charged five-cent admissions, and who would desire to increase the admittance price?

The terms of the contest are explained further along in the article, and are these:

One Hundred Dollars are offered for a new one-word name for "moving picture show."

The contest is open immediately to all who desire to contribute a word or a number of different words.

The word or words should be type-written, or written plainly in ink on the face of an envelope, while the name and address of the contributor of the name should be written on a separate slip and sealed within the envelope.

As the envelopes are received they will be time-stamped, so that in case there is more than one contribution of the prize-winning word, that envelope, which is received first will contain the name of the winner of the $100.

The judges in the contest, whose names will be announced later, will be men of acknowledged authority in moving picture affairs.

The contest opens immediately and will be concluded at noon September 1, and the name of the prize-winner will be announced as soon as is consistent.

Contributors should address their contributions to the Contest Editor, Essanay Film Mfg. Co., 435 N. Clark Street, Chicago, Ill.

ESSANAY NOTES.

The Essanay Guide, dated August 1, is an artistic little booklet of some twenty-four pages and contains, besides it's regular film descriptions, a number of newsy articles which should prove of live interest to the exhibitors. There is an illustrated article on "With Essanay Out West," the moving picture story of the Jeffries-Johnson fight, "Essanay Personalities," and the article announcing the Essanay $100 name contest. The booklet is artistically illustrated and typographically attractive. The Essanay Guide is now mailed to about 8,500 exhibitors and it is the hope of the company that if any exhibitor has been overlooked he will notify them immediately and his name will be placed on the Guide mailing list.

The Essanay Company's two releases for August 3, "Mulcahy's Raid" and "A College Chicken" are two comedies of the familiar Essanay style. "Mulhay's Raid" is a sequel to "Where is Mulcahy?" and other Mulcahy pictures will appear from time to time. In this instance the Sergeant apprises a bunch of gamblers at a cock fight and enlists a number of moving picture policemen to help make the pinch. The amateur policemen enjoy the joke and help make the arrest, leaving Mulcahy at the station with none to share the glory of having arrested such a crowd but himself. The cock fight is the real thing and the feature of the film.

"Under Western Skies" is the Essanay's Western dramatic offering for Saturday, August 6, and "The Girl on Triple X," Saturday, August 13 are exceptionally strong in plot, splendidly produced and photographed. "Under Western Skies" tells of a young girl who is attacked by a bunch of drunken cow-punchers and is forced to marry one to protect herself from the others. She succeeds in reforming her brutal husband but is unable to love him and later runs away with a former sweetheart. The elopers are lost on the desert and the young man shows his yellow streak, leaving the girl to die on the desert. He staggers into the camp of the husband, who rescues his wife and orders his wife's sweetheart on his way.

"Up-To-Date Servants" and "Feeding Seals at Catalina Islands," is booked for release August 10. The first is a pretty comedy story, patterned after the plot of Cinderella. The short educational subject is a filler and shows a party of tourists feeding seals on the beach at Catalina Island.

THEY MADE GOOD.

When Pathe Freres first proposed to make pictures in this country, exchangemen and exhibitors awaited their first American release with interest, for they knew that, if Pathe Freres could produce good American subjects with the same photography and finish that they placed in their French films, they would have some great features for their audiences. They were not disappointed. The first release of an American production by Pathe Freres was "The Girl from Arizona," on the 16th of May, just two months ago. This was followed by some fine features, the best of which have probably been The Flag of Company H, The Great Train Holdup, and White Fawn's Devotion. But Pathe Freres with their well known energy and push are never satisfied, and are always striving for something better. They are now announcing for early release some American productions that they state far excel those mentioned above. The most pretentious is "Under Both Flags" announced for release on Wednesday, August 3. This is a tale of the civil war portrayed in the most realistic manner and staged regardless of expense. The story is a good interesting one and the battle scenes are most vividly shown. They will release on Friday, July 22, a Western drama, "The Cowboys Sweetheart and the Bandit" which is full of snap and go, and which is as good a Western picture as was ever yet projected on the screen. Two full reel comedies are also slated for release "Tommy gets his Sister married," will appear on Friday, July 29, and "Her Photograph" on Saturday, August 5. Both of these are crackerjacks and full of original situations that are sure to please. This last film is especially good and has won great praise from some of the film men who have seen the sample.

VITAGRAPH NOTES.

The Vitagraph studio is a hot place, but they always take it cool and never get excited down there; that is the reason they are turning out some hot stuff. Fine photographic weather this and they are making the best of it, nothing but the best of it; in due season you will get it. Just at present they hand you one on the 19th of July entitled "Twa Hieland Lads." The "lads" are a breezy pair that make you forget all about the weather and everything else. If a friend asks you "Is it hot enough for you?" tell him to go to——see the "Twa Hieland Lads" and forget it. You can laugh yourself into a cool titter and you will find yourself shaking all over before the film is half through. It's a refreshing frappe of fun with a maraschino and cherry finish to it.

It's easy sailing when you go along with the tide and the wind and there's nothing that dances over the rippling waves of laughter so easily as Davy Jones and Captain Bragg starting on its voyage July 22. Both "Davy" and the "Captain" run afoul, but Davy tacks to the windward. The Captain loses his head, deserts his smack and "Davy" triumphantly wins the prize. It's a comical contagious comedy; it's a regular side shaker and makes your timbers shiver from keel to topmast. "Davy Jones" is a gay old sea dog, "a deevil among the weemin" and a whole comic supplement of fun. From the funny to the serious is but one day, Saturday, July 23, when "Hako's Sacrifice" is offered. A Japanese drama of Eastern splendor with a beautiful story of self sacrifice, gratitude and love. Those who remember "The Love of Chrysanthemum" and "Ito, the Beggar Boy," will appreciate the richness of scenery and the beautiful tale of "Hako's Sacrifice."

WILL OPEN NEW PICTURE THEATRE.

W. L. McClure and Moe S. Berger, violinist of the Bijou orchestra, Lansing, Mich., will open a picture and vaudeville theatre at 223 South Washington avenue, where Mr. McClure formerly conducted a liquor business. Contractor Joseph Bernard began the alterations on the interior of the building July 1.

JOHNSON-JEFFRIES CONTEST PICTURES

Six Reels of Fine Motion Views—Will Give Full Evening's Entertainment—Champion Says "They're Fine"

"THEY'RE great pictures, all right," was Jack Johnson's verdict after a private view of the six long reels of the Johnson-Jeffries fight series at the Vitagraph studio, Wednesday of last week, and that was about all the black champion did say about them, but he seemed to be tickled all over and enjoyed the exhibition immensely in a quiet way.

In one round he suddenly exclaimed, "there's where Jeff stepped on my foot." Some one asked if Jeff did it on purpose, but Johnson refused to confirm that version of the incident.

At the conclusion of the exhibition Johnson and his party made a hasty escape for he had a matinee engagement at Hammerstein's.

As a record of an athletic event the Johnson-Jeffries contest series is probably the greatest motion pictures ever taken of such an event. There are 5,500 feet in the series, divided into six reels, picturing almost every phase of the event. There are pictures of the training quarters, views about Reno, views of the big arena just before the battle and of the dispersing crowds. Then, of course, the event itself, covering the entire 15 rounds.

JOHNSON-JEFFRIES CONTEST—SCENE AT RENO POLICE STATION—CHIEF OF POLICE AND SOME OF HIS SPECIALS.

Johnson and his party were scheduled to reach the Vitagraph studios about 10.30, Wednesday morning, but he was not familiar with the route and neglected to ship a pilot, so it was 12.30 o'clock before Jack and his racer followed by a big red touring car, slid through the big gate at the Vitagraph plant down in the wilds of Flatbush.

"Hello, old pal," was Johnson's hearty greeting to Mr. Blackton as he entered the studio. "We got lost comin' down, or we'd been here sooner. Gee, I wish I had some beer."

While the boy went for the beer, Johnson and his friends went to the exhibition room, followed by every body connected with the Vitagraph plant not actually chained to his or her respective job. One or two policemen and some of the neighbors dropped in to see the champion and the pictures, and so there was a fair sized audience present to see the pictures and the champion.

Five reels were shown beginning with the views of Johnson's training quarters and winding up with the finish of the fight in the 15th round. Then a reel of extra views of the last rounds taken with a stronger lens and giving a greatly enlarged picture was put on.

If Johnson had any opinions on the subject he kept them to himself, but it was evident that the pictures had a great fascination for him, for he just glued his eyes on the sheet and never missed a move of the pictured fighters, even though the operator "raced" the film through as rapidly as possible. His characteristic grin was about the only audible expression he made.

Pictures Perfect and Interesting.

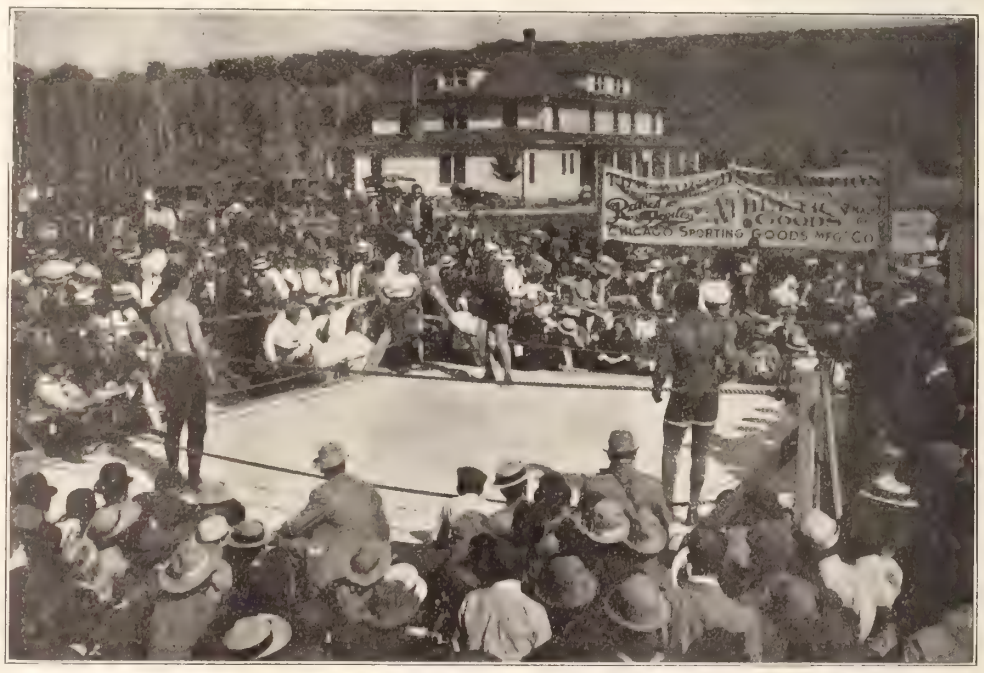
Photographically the pictures are excellent. So clear and steady are they that the faces of the people about the ring are easily recognizable. Most interesting is the introduction of various fistic celebrities just before the principals appeared on the scene. One after the other Rickard, Gleason, Tim Sullivan, John L. Sullivan, Tom Sharkey, Bob Fitzsimmons, and others of note in the world of sport were formally presented to the cheering throng. Finally Johnson and Jeffries came into the ring and made their bows, and the hostilities commenced.

Jeffries Forced Fight.

The details of the fight have been minutely told by all the newspapers, and all the several experts have given their opinions of the event and have guessed why it ended as it did. It is just possible that the pictures may cause a slight revision of opinion. They give an unmistakable impression that Jeffries literally wore himself out. Contrary to his old-time ring tactics, in which he always compelled his opponent to bring the fight to him, standing on the defensive, as it were, on this occasion he tried to take the fight to Johnson. The latter simply held his big opponent off, jabbing him when he got a chance, but playing a waiting game so that, when Jeff was about all in on account of his hard work in the clinches and with one eye out of business he became an easy mark for Johnson, who finished and drove him through the ropes with two or three punches.

No Objectional Features.

At no time during the entire 15 rounds is there the slightest exhibition of vicious infighting. Johnson's grin is of the kind "that won't come off," and Jeff's favorite pastime consists in laying his head affectionately upon his black brother's neck.



JOHNSON-JEFFRIES CONTEST—SCENE AT JOHNSON'S TRAINING QUARTERS—JOHNSON, AL KAUFMAN AND NICK COTTON IN RING.

What ever disfigurement Jeff may have suffered by repeated jabs over the eye is not shown by the pictures, they having been taken in such a manner as not to accentuate anything of that nature.

Getting the Pictures.

Speaking of the trip Mr. J. Stuart Blackton, of the Vitagraph Company, under whose direction the pictures were taken for the associated manufacturers, said that it was the pleasantest and the hardest job of the kind he had ever tackled. He was especially proud of his corps of camera men, three of whom were from the Selig Polyscope Co. and three from the Essanay Company with four furnished by his own company. "What is most remarkable," said Mr. Blackton, "all the negatives are good. The conditions seemed to be just right and every camera worked just right, so that we have three complete and excellent pictures of the event.

"The talk about the pictures being brutal is rot. A cleaner, fairer contest was never held and better pictures were never taken. When the series is shown not a word will be said against them.

"All the talk was raised upon the supposition that they would be shown in the nickelodeons patronized by women and children. There never was any such intention. It has always been the purpose of the licensed manufacturers to exhibit the series in special theatres leased for that purpose. Those who attend will know what they are going to see. The entertainment will last the entire evening and the price of admission will be from one to two dollars. Women may go if they wish to, but if they do they will know what they are going to see."

Public Exhibitions Begin.

It is announced that the first public exhibitions of the Johnson-Jeffries contest series will be given simultaneously in Boston, New York, Brooklyn, Philadelphia and Chicago on Monday, July 18. Percy G. Williams will have charge of the exhibition in New York and Brooklyn and will exhibit the series in seven theatres, five in New York and two in Brooklyn. He will use his own houses and two Broadway theatres not yet named.

On Sunday, July 10 the Associated manufacturers viewed the points of the several negatives taken at Reno, at the offices of the Motion Picture Patents Company and decided upon the pictures to be used for public exhibition. About 30,000 feet of film was vised.

Messrs. W. N. Selig and George K. Spoor came on from Chicago with the prints made by their cameras. Mr. S. Lubin of Philadelphia, and representatives of the several New York firms were present at that meeting. Mr. C. Spencer, of Australia, on his way home from London, was an invited guest.

J. & J. Co. Busy.

Since the J. & J. Co., opened offices at 10 Fifth avenue, New York, for the sale of territory for exhibition purposes, it has been bombarded by telegraphic and cable messages and thronged with applicants for territory. Among the visitors last week was Mr. Aaron Jones, of Jones, Linick & Schaefer of Chicago. Others interested in the project have arrived and the corner of 5th avenue and 8th street is quite a busy center.

"Independents" Desperate.

Elsewhere in this issue are mentioned some of the features of the opposition to the series; also the efforts of certain "independent" picture pirates to get possession of a copy of the Johnson-Jeffries series. Desperate attempts were made and frustrated each time by the watchfulness of those entrusted with the interests of the licensed manufacturers.

Fakir Mobbed.

Fakirs also discovered that the public could not be fooled with impunity. Walter Rosenberg who runs a mixed picture and vaudeville show at the Savoy theatre on 34th street, New York, advertised Johnson-Jeffries pictures and gave lantern slides made from still pictures. The riot that resulted nearly wrecked his house; only the timely arrival of the police reserves saved him. He at once changed his announcement.

Several engravings from still photographs of the event are published herewith.

NEW THEATRE FOR ANSONIA.

A real estate deal, which has been pending for the past two months has been closed, whereby, McKenzie and Kimberly, out of town parties, have secured a lease on the Gardner building on Main street, Ansonia, Conn. It is the intention of the lessees to completely remodel the place, converting the top floor into a theatre. Vaudeville and motion pictures will be exhibited there, it being planned to open the place on September 1. The block is generally known as the old Y. M. C. A. building and Celtic hall is at the present time located there. The store of Guider and Healy, will be narrowed to the extent of 1½ feet in order to allow for a five-foot entrance to the new playhouse.

An attractive frontage, thoroughly illuminated by electric lights, will be installed. The present partition up stairs will be torn out, the floor raised, and a stage of ample proportions erected. An exit by way of the back to the alley way leading to South Cliff street will, be constructed, in order to facilitate the emptying of the hall in case of fire. All safety appliances will be installed in order to meet with the requirements of the state law.

Building Inspector Corcoran has already approved the plans of the alterations. The performances will be much on the same plan as those staged at the Sterling Opera House in Derby.

BILKALEM LOOSE AGAIN

Hustling Film Salesman Breaks Away and Visits Exhibitors in Four Cities

OUR mercurial friend, William Wright, general sales manager for the Kalem Company, has been paying calls upon the exhibitors of several cities. He sends us a detailed report of his wanderings, which is interesting.

"Following the general policy of the Kalem Co. of keeping in touch with the exhibitors, the men who feel the public pulse and note what kind of pictures their patrons want, I visited Rochester, Buffalo, Cleveland and Columbus, where I had several pleasant chats with a number of the principal exhibitors.

Rochester.

"Rochester has a number of successful motion picture theatres and with the exception of three, all are licensed.

"The Hippodrome, on Main Street, having a seating capacity of 550, is an excellent legitimate moving picture theatre. Mr. George Simpson is the manager and Mr. Jack Farren is assistant manager. Mr. Farren is a man of marked intellgence and knows how to operate a picture theatre in a manner that will attract the best people in the community. This theatre is kept scrupulously clean and is well ventilated. Business is reported as being excellent.

"The Knickerbocker Theatre, located on Main Street in the heart of the city, is operated by the Knickerbocker Theatre Co., and is managed by Mr. Fred Gerling and has a seating capacity of 250. The building and ground is owned by Mr. Gerling, Sr., and leased by him to the Knickerbocker Theatre Co. This is one of the cleanest and best ventilated houses I have ever had the pleasure of visiting. Mr. Fred. Gerling is constantly on the job and like a wise man makes a specialty of featuring Kalem pictures.

"The Genesee Theatre, operated by the Genesee Theatre Co., has a seating capacity of about 1400. Mr. M. E. Gates is the manager. This theatre was formerly a skating rink, recently having been converted into a picture theatre. The progressive management of this house makes it a money producer. They show a nice steady picture which bespeaks continuous success.

The Lyric Theatre located in the residence section of the city is another successful house. It has a seating capacity of about 400 and is under the management of Mr. Irving Salyerds. The building was erected for theatre purposes and is kept scrupulously clean and well ventilated.

"Directly across the street from the Lyric theatre is the Merryland Theatre. This house seats about 400 and is managed by the owner, Mr. Harry Wicks.

"The Venice, owned and managed by Mr. Jerry Vergolas, is located directly opposite the New York Central depot and has a seating capacity of 350. Its excellent location assures a continuous and profitable business.

"Mr. L. A. Sherwood is the owner and manager of Fitzhugh Hall, where moving pictures are run exclusively. Mr. George Campbell, the able assistant manager, is a hard worker, having always in mind the comfort of his patrons. The theatre has a seating capacity of about 300 and is doing an excellent business.

"The Fairyland Theatre, located on Main Street has a seating capacity of about 200. Mr. Harry Hall is the owner and manager. On a large lot in the rear of his present theatre Mr. Hall is erecting a theatre that will have a seating capacity of 1,400. When the new building is completed his present theatre will be used as a lobby and entrance to the big house. The Fairyland theatre is doing a good business and success is predicted for the large house.

"I called at two of the 'independent' theatres and watched their show all through. Both of these theatres are well located and should be running licensed pictures. In both cases I was impressed with the fact that the pictures shown were not proving satisfactory to the better class of patrons. In one house the two principal pictures were made by 'independent' manufacturers who are said to be the leaders in their camp. Both pictures danced a regular jig on the curtain and were a class long since discarded by American manufacturers. One picture was supposed to be a farce comedy. It was a farce, all right; but I failed to note any comedy. The other picture was a dramatic effort along lines that would appeal only to a small portion of the usual motion picture patrons. The heroine in the story was shown as a bartender in a saloon located in a mining town. The sheriff of the county was made the villain in the story and was shown several times in a low saloon drinking with women patrons of the place. Such pictures surely will not tend to elevate the business generally or improve the business of the houses running them.

Buffalo.

"The Bijou Dream, located on Main Street, is owned by Mr. William Wood, of Philadelphia, who is also owner of eight or nine other houses located through the eastern states. George W. Erdman is the local manager and an admirer of Kalem films. The Bijou Dream has a seating capacity of 300 and charges 5c admission.

"The Academy, located on Main Street, has a seating capacity of 1800. Brock & Mark are the owners. M. S. Epstein is the hustling manager. The theatre runs pictures and vaudeville and charges 5, 10 and 20 cents. They run two reels of pictures and change twice a week. House opens at noon and runs until 11:00 P. M. continuously. Its service consists of new pictures.

"The Hippodrome Theatre is operated by the United Vaudeville Co. Mr. R. Wagner, manager. This house seats 300 and is maintained in excellent condition. Mr. Wagner tried out vaudeville, but discontinued it and runs pictures exclusively, making a daily change and charging 5 cents. This is a nice, clean, up-to-date theatre, doing a good business.

"The Grand Theatre is also owned by the United Vaudeville Co. and operated under the same management. It has a seating capacity of 250 and charges 5 cents admission. This house uses a commercial run of pictures.

"The Comique Theatre, owned and operated by the United Vaudeville Co., has a seating capacity of 350. First run pictures are used here with a change daily. Mr. Al Schlaghter is the local manager and strictly on the job. He says that Kalem pictures are the real thing, and he never loses an opportunity to feature them. Admission is 10 cents.

"The Vendome runs pictures and vaudeville and has a seating capacity of 300. Lewis Holtzborn is the manager.

"The New Savoy has a seating capacity of 1500 and cost to erect $85,000. This theatre runs pictures and vaudeville, showing three reels of pictures and three acts of vaudeville. Recently the manager, Mr. S. H. Bunce, reduced his number of pictures to two reels and increased his vaudeville to four acts, but he soon discontinued this practice and cut off one act of vaudeville and increased his pictures to the original number of three. This is a handsome theatre and will undoubtedly prove a big money maker. Admission, 10 and 20 cents.

"The Victoria, located in the residence district, has a seating capacity of 600 and charges 10 cents admission, running pictures only. Mr. Frank Masek is the capable manager of this enterprising theatre where business is stated to be excellent.

"The Variety Theatre, located in the Polish neighborhood, runs pictures and vaudeville and charges 10 cents; has a seating capacity of 300, runs two reels of pictures and three acts of vaudeville. Business is said to be good. George Lowery is the owner and manager.

"Brock & Mark are remodelling a building located in the centre of town and are spending $35,000 to convert it into a picture show. When completed it will be called the Family Theatre, and have a seating capacity of 1,200. The price of admission will be 10 cents.

"There is only one 'Independent Theatre,' located down town and it is having a struggle to keep the game going. In order to induce business with this theatre, which charges 5 cents admission, they have coupons printed in the daily papers admitting two ladies free. It has a seating capacity of about 200.

Cleveland.

"I dropped off here Tuesday night intending to spend the evening visiting with Emanuel Mandelbaum of the Lake Shore Film Exchange, and Messrs. Kohl & Christianson of the United Film Exchange. Our friend Christianson had an engagement to puncture a tire and Brother Mandelbaum was in Detroit attending the Elks Convention. It was, therefore, left to our friend Ed. Kohl and I to do the town together. I located Mr. Kohl at the National Theatre, 55th street and Wilson avenue, after about a half hour's visit at this theatre he said come on and I will take you out to my new National Theatre. He brought his machine around to the front of the house and we started on our journey. On the way Kohl told me about the reliability of his old standby machine that had proven itself a faithful pal for the past two years. After visiting the new National for fifteen or twenty minutes we started back for town. After going about two blocks the machine gave an asthmatic cough and stopped dead. We got out and tinkered around with the machine awhile and started up again and run about two blocks more. This performance occurred about eight times in the next sixteen blocks. Finally Kohl threw up his hands and declared himself stumped. My long experience in riding with Dick Roland and other plutocratic film exchange men taught me at once what was the trouble. This suspicion I confidentially confided to Kohl. I told him the machine had the pip. Never having doctored an automobile for this complaint he was compelled to give up in despair, although by constant tinkering and frequent rests we finally landed in the centre of town just as the last moving picture show was closing up. We came to a dead halt in front of Marlo Hall. This is a strictly moving picture theatre having a seating capacity of about 190. Five cents is the price of admission and E. Reyburn is the manager. Kalem picitures are always featured in this theatre.

By James S. McQuade

WHEN Jeffries fell in the ring at Reno, he created a splash and a wave that has been heard and felt throughout the world. Men and women have been so stirred that the phenomenon has become a worthy subject for the psychologist, who has little difficulty in tracing the spasmodic, widespread mental unrest to racial sentiment. This sentiment, among many well meaning people, has manifested itself in the form of semi-religious hysteria, or of hypercritical morals, and the full force of their semi-frenzied action has been directed against the moving pictures of the contest.

What has led up to this extraordinary and abnormal display of moral hysteria? Surely not that a championship has been lost and won, for there have been many instances within our own time where championship fistic contests, of equal, if not greater, prominence have been decided, and where this tidal wave of feeling has been wholly lacking. Nor can it be attributable to the conspicuous brutality of the Reno go, for if ever there was a clean and goreless championship affair, the Jeffries-Johnson was it.

The first print shown of the fight, in the Selig Polyscope Co.'s exhibition room, Saturday, July 9, proved this conclusively. Up to the 14th round the pictures are nothing more nor less than an exhibition of boxing skill, with Jeffries the loser on points. And in the 15th round the end comes swiftly, indeed unexpectedly, without any of the horrifying details which many good people have conjured up in their imaginations.

The truth of the matter is, it appears to me, that the press, as represened chiefly by the great dailies of the country, is responsible for most of the present pother. There never has been before and there never will be again, a fistic event so widely and so persistently advertised as this one. And it was free advertising of the most lurid, sensational kind. Columns have been devoted to the principals and the bout daily by the sporting editors of all the large dailies, for the last nine or ten months; and, in the closing days, as many as four or five prominent sporting writers have been attached to each paper to swell the enormous mass of reading matter already printed.

Is it any wonder that the thinking caps of even good, staid people were sadly ungeared by the rush of this Niagara of printer's ink? And is it any wonder that the hysterically inclined, in religious movements, should go off at half cock and attempt to avenge their injured feelings and outraged eyes by pouncing on the poor, innocent moving pictures of the fight? In their fanaticism, these people know no laws and acknowledge no rights. They would destroy because that only can satisfy their inflamed cravings. And at this point they touch the line that bounds the domain of the lyncher.

Do the newspapers that are mainly responsible for these conditions point out to these men and women the wisdom of cool reflection and of a little conservative thought? We have two newspapers right here in Chicago, of the Hearst brand, which were particularly active in giving the Reno bout the most comprehensive treatment in their sporting columns before the event, and the most elaborately dished-up details of the event itself, and yet now they are working tooth and nail to brand the pictures as "vicious," even "worse than the fight itself." This hypocritical attitude is unworthy of comment and deceives no one.

Mayor Busse and Chief of Police Steward have been besieged by ultra-finical people, who assume that the pictures portray fearful sights, and who demand their suppression on their mere "say-so." The officials, however, are acting with caution and Chief Steward announced this morning (Monday, July 11) that he will not give any decision upon a permit until one has been requested.

The Chief ordered Asst. Chief Schuettler and Sergeant O'Donnell—the latter being the head of the censor board for moving pictures in Chicago—to attend a private view of the fight pictures, at the Selig offices, Saturday, July 9. To this exhibition, on the request of Asst. Chief Schuettler, representatives of the Chicago press were admitted. The following excerpts appeared in the various papers after the presentation:

From the Chicago Tribune, July 10.

CHIEF STEWARD SEES NO OBJECTION, BUT DECISION WAITS PLEA FOR PERMIT.

Objectors to the exhibition of the pictures of the Jeffries-Johnson prize fight at Reno, July 4, have failed to convince Mayor Busse and Chief of Police Steward that the pictures are either immoral or degrading. Chief of Police Steward said yesterday afternoon that no valid reason has been given for the suppression of these particular pictures. He had not yet received the report of Assistant Chief Schuettler and Charles O'Donnell, the police department censors, who are detailed to look at the pictures at a private exhibition in the morning.

While the assistant chief of police refused to make known the purport of the report he will make to the chief, enough hints were dropped by him to make it certain that he will not advise a withholding of the permit asked for by the picture people.

STEWARD SEES NO OBJECTION.

"There is a question in my mind as to whether there would have been any objection made to the showing of the fight pictures if the white man had won," said Chief Steward. "I think there would not. I cannot see that the exhibition of the pictures will be any more degrading or more unfit for the general public to see because Jack Johnson won the fight and not Jim Jeffries.

"I will not decide finally on the matter of issuing a permit for the fight pictures until a license is asked for by the firm which is handling them. At present, however, I see no reason for withholding the permit. No request has yet been received from the Selig Polyscope Company for a license."

The moving pictures of the fight were shown in a back room on the fourth floor at 45 East Randolph street, occupied by the Selig Polyscope Company.

Assistant Chief Schuettler intended to make a verbal report in the afternoon to Chief Steward, but the chief left his office before the arrival there of his assistant. A written report will be made Monday.

"This isn't so bad," Schuettler said once or twice during the performance. "I don't see anything about these pictures to incite a riot or ruin any one's morals."

Sergeant O'Donnell concurred in his superior's opinion of the exhibition.

From the Record-Herald, July 10.

FIGHT PICTURES ARE ASSURED.

Chicago fight fans are fairly certain of seeing the Jeffries-Johnson fight pictures, but it may be a week or longer—possibly two or three weeks—before the owners of Chicago rights in the films will be able to offer the reproduction of the knockout of the white boiler maker, owing to complications arising in New York, coupled with a desire to hold off until at least some of the antagonism against the pictures dies down.

But when they do make application for a permit here, it was indicated yesterday by Chief of Police Steward, the chief will allow the showing of the pictures, at least until any untoward result is evident. This attitude of the chief was influenced partly by a verbal report made by Assistant Chief Schuettler and Charles O'Donnell, the theatre censor, after viewing in private the pictures as shown at 45 Randolph street. Schuettler declined to state positively that he had advised the chief that the pictures were all right, but the information percolated through headquarters that this would be the gist of his formal report to-morrow.

Denfiite announcement of the police intention, however, will be delayed by Chief Steward until an application for a permit is filed. The chief said yesterday:

"So far as I can learn, there is only a lot of manufactured public opinion against the showing of the pictures. I have talked with many lawyers, doctors, business men and average citizens and can find no sentiment on the subject whatever. Most of the cities that have acted adversely are Southern cities, where race feeling runs stronger than here."

POLICE TO CUT OUT A FEW FIGHT PICTURES.

Trimmed of some of their objectionable features, moving pictures of the world's championship fight between Jack Johnson and Jim Jeffries at Reno will be shown at Chicago theatres, according to reports which emanated from the office of Chief of Police Steward and Assistant Chief Schuettler yesterday. Only expurgated fight pictures will be shown in Chicago, however.

This is practically the decision of Assistant Chief Schuettler, and a recommendation for the cutting out of a few of the films will be the substance of his report to Chief Steward. It remains for the chief to give the final word, which, it is believed, will be in favor of showing the pictures in this city.

Assistant Chief Schuettler, Sergeant Charles O'Donnell and several newspaper men saw the films yesterday in the office of the motion picture concern, which is handling the photographic impressions of the great battle for Chicago.

The proprietors of the moving pictures will ask for no permits to show the pictures here for at least ten or fifteen days, according to the statements of the assistant chief.

SCHUETTLER NON-COMMITTAL.

"My report on the fight pictures to Chief Steward will be simply a record of what I saw when the pictures were run off for me and the newspaper boys," said Assistant Chief Schuettler. "I will make no recommendations one way or the other, but will leave it to my superior officer to say what shall be done with the films in Chicago. I can't give you the substance of my report, for that would not be courteous to my superior officer. My report in its detail must come from Chief Steward himself.

"I saw the pictures, and I know what I am going to say about them to Chief Steward. In fact, I am ready to report on them now, but I guess I will not make my official report to Chief Steward till Monday. The battle of Reno was not a great fight from what I saw of the pictures. We had by far better scraps in this town only a few years ago. The Reno fight was bum. I am glad I didn't spend any of my money to see it."

It was rumored yesterday about the city hall that Schuettler would recommend that a few films, showing the scene in the ring immediately following the knockout should be cut out. It was said that Chief Schuettler would not positively condemn any of the rest of the fight show.

From the Evening Journal, July 9.

FIGHT FILMS GO IN CHICAGO.

The pictures of the Johnson-Jeffries fight were shown by the makers to Assistant Chief of Police Schuettler, Censor O'Donnell and a party of newspaper men in the rooms of the Selig Polyscope Company to-day, and the officials intimated that they would make a favorable report on the film to Chief Steward.

After the first six rounds had been shown both the assistant chief and the censor said they had seen nothing that was objectionable in the moving pictures, and each said that he did not believe they would create a race riot.

To Johnson's conduct since he won the fight the police attribute the absence of violence that they had expected in the "black belt." There has been no strutting by the champion, no bragging of his victory. He has insisted all along that the racial feature had no place in the championship fight and cautioned his people against demonstrations.

From the Evening News, July 9.

POLICE INSPECT FIGHT PICTURES.

James Jeffries was knocked out by Jack Johnson in Chicago to-day! Not only was the former champion heavy-weight pugilist knocked down and rendered helpless by the colored fighter, but Chicago police, in charge of Assistant Chief Schuettler, witnessed the affray, and all seemingly were so well pleased that it is believed recommendation will be made to Chief of Police LeRoy T. Steward that the fight be made public in repetition for Chicago's public.

From the Evening News, July 8.

FIGHT PICTURES TO APPEAR HERE.

Unless Chief of Police Steward and Mayor Busse change their minds, the motion pictures of the Jeffries-Johnson fight will not be barred from Chicago. While the chief remains silent on the subject, merely saying, "I will cross that bridge when I come to it," it is known that personally he does not think the morals of the city will be injured by the pictures. The chief also is of the opinion that if Jeffries had been the victor in the battle there would be no objections to the showing of the films.

In order to block the pictures the chief, under the city ordinances, would have to declare them to be either immoral or obscene. Assistant Corporation Counsel Bielman pointed this out yesterday in an informal opinion prepared at the request of Corporation Counsel Brundage.

THE BORROWED BABY

A Choice Kalem Comedy

AMONG the forthcoming releases of the Kalem Company is a choice comedy subject entitled "The Borrowed Baby." This picture aside from its good technical qualities, is full of humorous situations which cannot fail to produce many laughs, no matter what the character of the audience may be.

The plot is laid in a small town where an amateur dramatic society is planning to produce a play. The picture opens upon a scene in the kitchen of one of the homes of the town showing the industrious housewife at her combined duties of housekeeper and nurse. Having occasion to borrow some tea from a neighbor, she tucks her baby snugly in its carriage and leaves it while performing her errand.

SCENE FROM THE KALEM COMEDY, "THE BORROWED BABY."

The neighbor proves to be one of those good old gossips who has all the scandal of the village on the tip of her tongue. When you see the picture you will recognize her at once, for she belongs to every little neighborhood everywhere. The Kalem players selected for this part know the character in all the choicest manifestations and has left nothing to be desired.

When the young mother enters on her errand the old lady greets her and the talkfest begins. Though anxious to get back to her baby she is induced to have a cup of tea and hear more scandal, and finally, when she insists upon going the old lady digs up a bottle of blackberry wine of her own vintage and a parting sup is indulged in. At last she hurries home.

While this neighborly visiting has been going on the amateur theatrical society are getting ready for rehearsals. In this scene is introduced a somewhat overdrawn character in the person of an old time actor with long hair and loud attire who is to direct the rehearsals. In assigning the parts it is discovered that a baby is required. How to get one is the question. This is finally solved by two of the young Thespians starting out in search of a baby. They chance upon the little one which has been left alone in its carriage and without further ado, make off with it.

It was a happy thought of the producer to give a view of His Kidlets; 'twas a cute youngster and seemed to know he was in the picture. Like most new picture actors he persisted in staring straight in the lens and then, lest the audience might not know he was there, made a vigorous demonstration. Evidently he had not read The Mirror.

While the amateur dramatists are busy putting His Kidlets through his part, the mother returns home and discovers that her baby is gone. She hastens back to her neighbor's house and tells of her loss. Together they make a search of the house and, finding no trace of the child, start out to scour the town. Every one carrying a baby is held up, even to a colored woman, and as the hunt proceeds each mother, father or nurse joins in the search.

A sleepy policeman leaning against a telephone pole, is aroused and joins the search. All hands return to the bereft home and the policeman pokes into every nook and corner without success.

By this time the amateurs have concluded their rehearsal and two of them start out to return the che-iid. The doors are locked and they make an entrance by the kitchen window while the policeman and his volunteer posse are on the ground. A noise at the window puts all on the qui vive and, as the kidnappers appear they are unceremoniously grabbed and dragged in.

Explanations follow and matters are amicably adjusted at the finish.

As a comedy feature "The Borrowed Baby" will probably be one of the best shown in sometime.

COVER PAGE ILLUSTRATION.

This week's cover page illustration is from a scene in Selig's production "Mazeppa," adopted from Lord Byron's poem of the same title. The subject offers many situations that may be adequately interpreted by pictures and no opportunity has been overlooked by the Selig producers that would tend to enhance the value of the picture as a big feature subject. A further description is given in the Manufacturers Bulletins.

BAIRD BUILDS NEW HOUSE.

Lansing, Mich., will have another picture theatre. Alger L. Brown has elaborate plans for the remodeling of the building at 114 North Washington avenue, owned by James J. Baird, and formerly occupied by the Senate saloon. Application for a building permit was filed with the council Monday night.

The plans call for tearing out the floor of the second story and turning the building into one large auditorium with a marble front, at an estimated expenses of $4,500.

ADRIAN'S BIJOU NEARLY READY.

The Bijou Theatre, Adrian, Mich., will be opened by W. O. Kenan, who has successfully conducted the Crescent Theatre the past year. Mr. Kenan has fully demonstrated his ability to please the amusement loving public. He will retain the Crescent Theatre and his new arrangement makes it possible to give his patrons the best that money can buy in motion pictures. Everything will be up-to-date. He will have a first class orchestra at the Bijou and the same pleasing music at the Crescent Theatre. The Bijou will be refurnished and electric fans installed. A new picture machine of the latest model will be used—something never used in Adrian before. The Bijou will possibly be operated only three nights a week, but when announcement is made Mr. Kenan will apprise his patrons exactly what he intends to do. He informs us that he has something in store for the people that will make a good and lasting impression.

THE STORY OF THE EDENGRAPH

As Told by George Kleine

Written by James S. McQuade.

LEARNING that the Edengraph projecting machine is now being offered for sale to all licensed exchanges and exhibitors, I interviewed George Kleine, who controls the Edengraph Manufacturing Company, to get the story of its origin and development.

The narrative will prove interesting reading to everyone concerned in the moving picture business, as it shows clearly the claims of the Edengraph to superiority in many important respects. It will serve, too, to show that the perfected projecting machine can be evolved only by the persistent labor and study of years; also that the close observation and penetrating vision, which are requisite to discover defects, must be supplemented by the constructive genius which suggests and furnishes improvements. And it establishes also the importance of the part played by capital in giving form and practical value to the creations of the inventor. And now to the story, Mr. Kleine being the speaker throughout.

Origin of the Edengraph.

"About the year 1900 Frank Cannock, a mechanical expert, thoroughly versed in the use of motion picture machines, had constructed a new model which embodied many features never before used, and placed one of these machines in the Eden Musee, Twenty-third Street, New York City. The Eden Musee is famous throughout the country, having been in existence many years, and from the beginning of the public exhibition of motion pictures it has made a specialty of them.

"Among the features used in the Edengraph, in the year 1900, when placed in position in the Eden Musee, and which is embodied in the present machine almost without change, is a dust-tight oil box in which are placed the shaft, cam and star wheel which control the intermittent sprocket.

Durability of Edengraph Parts.

"The Eden Musee has projected motion pictures on an average of ten times daily since 1900. Mr. Cannock has informed me that the original oil box containing the original shaft, cam and star are still in use, and have never been changed, regulated or altered. Mr. Richard G. Hollaman, general manager and chief owner of the Eden Musee, confirms this statement. From time to time Mr. Cannock made duplicates of his original machine for friends in the business, possibly three or four all told. Beyond this the machine was not placed upon the market for sale.

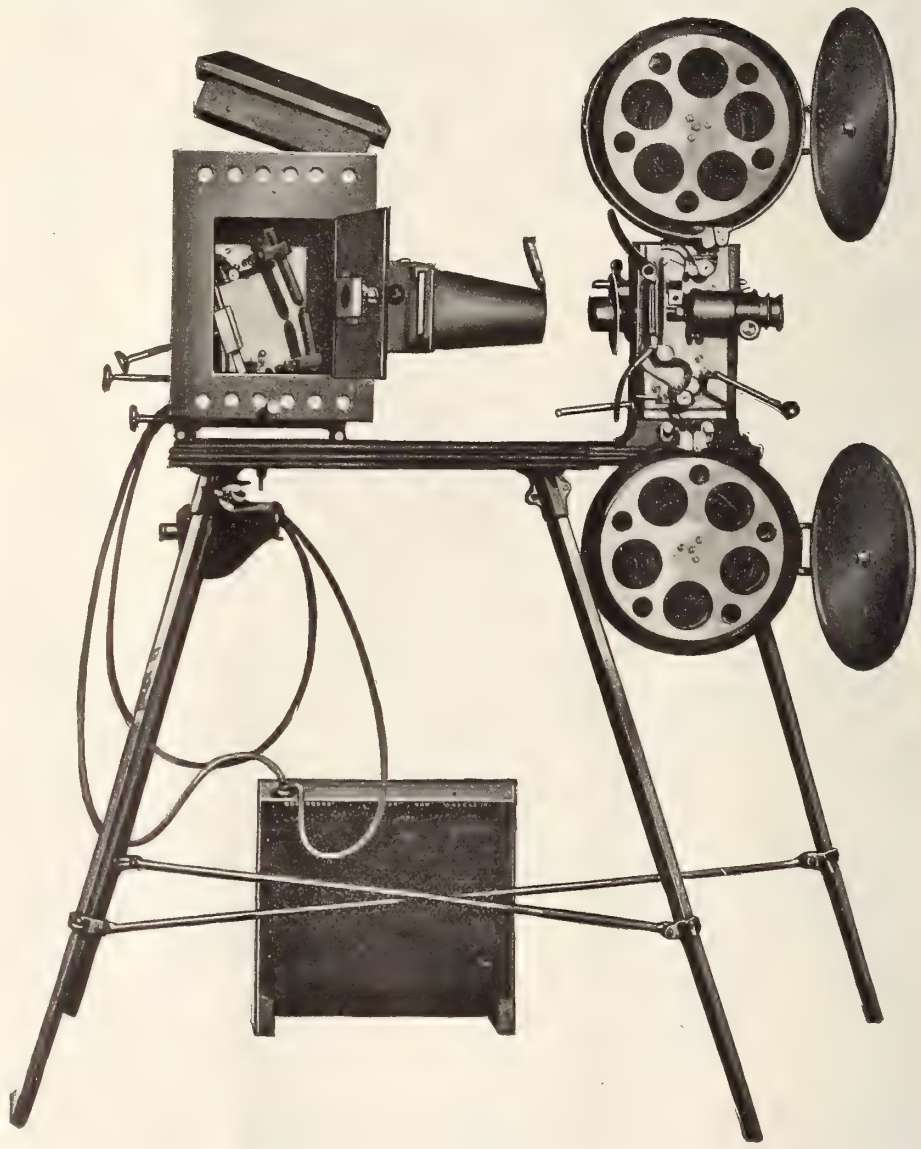
First Edengraph Seen by George Kleine.

"The first Edengraph that I myself saw was in use at the Delmar Gardens, at St. Louis, during the World's Fair, at the exhibition given by Count d' Hauterives, who is well-known to the trade as having the largest individual stock of special hand colored films of anyone in the United States, and whose reputation is that of projecting as perfect a moving picture as is possible with the most advanced appliances.

"Count d' Hauterives operated his own machine, which he treated like a pet child; and, being very much struck with its efficiency, I made inquiries as to its origin. who its maker was and what were the prospects of obtaining it for the market. The Count was reticent, and would give no information. I had previously heard of the Edengraph that was in operation at the Eden Musee, in New York, and suspected that the Count's machine was of the same type, but could not confirm the fact until later.

Edengraph Manufacturing Company Formed.

"In the Fall of 1907 I met Frank Cannock in Montreal, and inspected closely a modified sample of the original Edengraph which he intended to place upon the market. Shortly afterward a Company was formed, called the Edengraph Mfg. Co., for the purpose of manufacturing and exploiting this machine. The chief stockholders were Mr. Hollaman and Mr. Cannock. The inventor transferred to the company his patents embodied in the Edengraph model; also other patents then applied for, and agreed to assign to the Edengraph Co. any improvements that he might make thereafter in apparatus for taking or projecting motion pictures.



THE EDENGRAPH PROJECTING MACHINE.

K. O. Co. Becomes Western Agent.

"Early in 1908, the Edengraph Mfg. Co. issued advertisements offering the machine for sale on some nearby day. An error was made by the Company, however, in attempting to save time, in that they contracted to have the work done in shops which they did not own or control, instead of giving the requisite time to the installation of their own factory.

"In the Spring of 1908, I contracted for the Kleine Optical Co., through Messrs. Hollaman and Cannock, to take the exclusive western selling agency, having become thoroughly convinced by that time that the Edengraph had more points in its favor than any other projecting machine known to me.

Geo. Kleine Buys Controlling Interest.

"Owing to the great mechanical accuracy required in the construction of the machine, and the impracticability of having it manufactured in a shop not owned by themselves, the Edengraph Mfg. Co., withdrew its tools, models, jigs and parts of machines that had been made in the outside shop; and Mr. Hollaman, finding himself unable to give the necessary time to the handling of this venture, offered to sell to me the entire capital stock of the company held by himself and his friends, which I purchased in August, 1908, Mr. Cannock continuing as a stockholder and director.

"A complete manufacturing plant was installed at 135 W. Third street, New York City, and the Edengraph machines have been manufactured in the factory at that address ever since.

New System of Framing Film Devised.

"The original machine did not admit of framing either by changing the position of the film gate aperture or of the mechanism, but framed by moving the objective lens up and down, after the manner of the older French machines, like the Lumiere Cinematograph. On pointing out to

Mr. Cannock the desirability of keeping the objective lens in a fixed position for optical reasons, he devised a new system of framing the film. He evolved a mechanism which permitted the shutter to remain in a fixed position, which required a width only large enough to cover a single picture, instead of the customary shutter which moves when the picture is being framed, and which must, therefore, be much larger to cover the aperture when in all positions. This reduced the flicker very materially, and gives the Edengraph its reputation for producing a motion picture upon the curtain which is practically flickerless, with the machine running at ordinary speed.

How to Test Edengraph With Other Makes.

"Any exhibitor who wishes to test the relative merits of the Edengraph and other projecting machines is invited to set them up side by side, turn on the light and project a disc upon the curtain without a picture. This is the severest test to which a machine can be put to test the absence of flicker; that is to say with only a disc of light upon the curtain, and the shutter revolving in place as when projecting a picture. The shutter is located in close proximity to the film gate not more than ⅜ inches distant. The purpose of this construction is to permit the use of extremely wide angle lenses, whose rear lens falls very close to the film when in focus. Such lenses are used when projecting from behind the curtain, or when the machine must be placed at a very short distance from the curtain, and to project a large picture; it will accept lenses for the shortest to the longest distances.

Limited Output Rapidly Bought.

"The machinery for the manufacture of the Edengraph having been installed in the Fall of 1908, an efficient staff of mechanics was engaged, and in the course of time Edengraphs were finished and sold to various exhibitors and exchanges in the United States and Canada.

"The experience of many years in marketing projecting machines had taught me conservatism in advertising the Edengraph for delivery, before quantities of them were finished and in hand. A limited number of exhibitors and exchanges, who were well acquainted with the model, took them off our hands as rapidly as they were offered, and not having an advance supply in hand the machine was not advertised.

Edengraph Output Now Equal to All Orders.

"The Edengraph Mfg. Co. is now practically ready to fill all orders. A number of applications have been received for selling agencies, but none have been granted as yet, excepting to the Clune Film Exchange, of Los Angeles, which has exclusive territory in southern California, Arizona and New Mexico, and the Amalgamated Film Exchange of Portland and Seattle, which controls Washington and Oregon, to facilitate deliveries to far western customers."

Mr. Kleine informed me that an illustrated catalogue will be received from the printer within a few days which will be mailed free, on request, to any address.

It is needless to say that the Edengraph is licensed by the Motion Picture Patents Company.

LICENSE RENEWED FOR GEM.

The Gem Theatre at Arctic Centre, Providence, R. I., which was refused a license to give motion picture shows about a week ago, is again in a position to resume business, as the Warwick town council has authorized the town clerk to issue a new license to the theatre managers. This action was taken after Stanislas St. Onge, owner of the building in which the Gem is located, appeared before the council and gave his guarantee that, if a license be permitted the Gem, it would not keep open on Sunday.

ONLY DOWNTOWN HOUSE

Park Row Theatre the Only Amusement Place in Lower New York

The only theatre in New York's hustling lower business section to-day is the Park Row theatre, situated at 31 Park Row, on the exact site of the old Park Row theatre, where the fashionables of Manhattan were entertained by the artists of one hundred years ago, and in the same block where P. T. Barnum's famous museum flourished in days gone by. People drove up in their old-fashioned coaches those days and sat through a performance lasting several hours. Moving pictures were as far from their minds as a trip to the moon is to ours to-day.

The Park Row theatre of to-day is as superbly, probably more superby finished than was its parent. It pays more rent per year than the old theatre took in gross receipts for the same length of time. It is a modern, well equipped, excellently run, clean, straight motion picture theatre. Its patrons are downtown business men who have a half hour on their hands, and the surburban commuters who have a wait for trains. They leave their carriage and automobiles home, but are just as critical of the silent drama as the oldtimers were of the spoken play.

The Park Row theatre gives them an excellent show—three reels of licensed pictures that are picked out with a view to balancing the program. Generally an even proportion of drama, straight or education, and comedy pictures are exhibited. General Manager F. M. McClintic is most particular that the subjects be varied and that a good comedy be shown last. He says: "Send them out laughing and they'll come again." A high-priced singer renders one illustrated song each show. Vaudeville is absolutely eliminated.

The establishment is owned by the New York Novelty Amusement Co. It was turned into a theatre two years ago from a penny arcade conducted by the president of the company, J. M. S. Blauvelt. From an artistic standpoint the theatre is beautiful. Its walls are of handsomely moulded bas-relief with frieze of pure gold leaf. The color effect is green and gold. The place seats 259 in handsome theatre chairs of mahogany. The auditorium is twenty feet high, ventilated by a 36-inch exhaust fan and twelve revolving electric fans, besides having a natural draft that sweeps through the place from Park Row to Theatre Alley.

Fifteen people are employed to run the place, which is open from 9 a. m. to 11 p. m. There are two shifts. Three operators are employed, two of them are always in the operating booth. One rewinds reels and threads up one of two new model Edison machines, while the other runs a picture. In this way there are no annoying waits between reels.

Regarding advertising the Park Row theatre are just as particular as in any other part of the exhibition. They do not believe in the flashy blowing banners that are necessary on Fourteenth Street, but carry out consistently the principle of neatness and class. Lithographed posters made for the pictures are used and neat program posters.

The house is under an enormous running expense for its size. Not only is a large investment represented, but rent alone on the building is $15,000 a year. Yet with all this, the place is a financial success. The price of admission is 10 cents.

SEES BROTHER IN PICTURE.

Evidently motion pictures are doing a great deal of detective work these days. Only a few weeks ago a boy saw a picture of his father, whom he had not seen in years, and now comes the story of how an Indiana man recognized his long lost brother. According to the story the Indiana man had not seen his brother since he left England and the sight made him so home sick that he left the "Hoosier State" and flew back to the land of home to see that long lost brother. The story doesn't say anything about what they did after they met, but we take for granted they quaffed over mug of 'alf and 'alf, and decided to go in the motion picture business themselves.

A SALT LAKE BOOSTER

Max Florence a Great Hustler—Gives Edison Machines Big Send Off

"You 'boost' for me and I'll 'boost' for you." That's the slogan of Max Florence, theatrical and motion picture magnate of Salt Lake City, Utah. Mr. Florence is pre-eminently a "booster" among "boosters," and there are some pretty good ones at that in the City of the Latter-day Saints.

He is a prominent figure in Western motion picture and theatrical circles, being the President and General Manager of the Florence Film Company and manager of six theatres in Salt Lake City, two of which, the Daniels and the Shuberts, are devoted to straight theatricals. The remaining four, the Luna, Lyric, Isis and Elite are combination vaudeville and motion picture houses. His theatres are conceded to be among the finest in the West and his reputation as an enterprising, hustling manager is second to none.

Everybody in Salt Lake City and for hundreds of miles around knows Max Florence either personally or by reputation—and, better still, likes him. He never tires of singing the praises of the Western country in general and of that portion in the immediate vicinity of Salt Lake City in particular. His word is considered as good as a government certificate, for he never makes a promise that he does not fulfill. If you "boost" for Max Florence he'll "boost" for you beyond the shadow of a doubt.

The Edison people have done some "boosting" for Mr. Florence, and the compliment is returned by him very neatly and ingeniously. This cut was reproduced from a post card which was distributed by the Florence Company among Exhibitors and interested parties in the large territory which they cover. It demonstrates the fact that the Edison Model "B" receives the unqualified endorsement of Mr. Florence and his associates.

Mr. Florence, who is the gentleman standing beside the Model "B" with hand on the crank of the machine, is displaying a card which reads:

"Edison is there with his type 'B.'
I will certainly boost for it."
Max Florence,
President and General Manager.

The opinions of the heads of his various departments on the Model "B" are also expressed on the cards they are holding in the picture, and it will be seen that they are unanimous in their praise of the machine.

Mr. J. C. Woolf, the traveling saleman of the Florence Film Company who stands third from right end in the picture, asserts that the Model "B" appeals to Exhibitors instantaneously and that the more conversant the operator is with the different types of mechanisms on the market the more easily he is convinced of the superiority of the Edison machine.

To substantiate his statement, and as conclusive evidence in support of this declaration, he refers to the large number of sales of machines he has made to theatre managers who have substituted the Edison Type "B" for other makes of machines in comparatively good condition, which machines they formerly believed to be the best on the market. The value of this flattering compliment from the Florence Film Company will be appreciated when it is stated that they supply the entire film service to over sixty motion picture and vaudeville theatres in Utah, Idaho, Wyoming, Nevada, Oregon and tributary territories.

Max Florence certainly made good his promise to the Edison people, "You boost for me and I'll boost for you."

PRISONERS ENJOY THE FOURTH.

The prisoners of the Virginia State Penitentiary, Richmond, Va., were given a Fourth of July treat Independence Day. This treat was in the form of a motion picture entertainment, which was greatly enjoyed by the prisoners.

In the morning there were two performances given in the men's building and in the afternoon the machine was taken to the women's wing of the building. where another performance took place.

PLANS FOR NEW BRONX THEATRE.

The Damascus Amusement Company has filed plans for a three-story brick theatre on Longwood avenue, New York City. The building, which will front 76 feet, with a depth of 88 feet, will cost $100,000.

The house, when completed, will be the handsomest of all the uptown theatres, and will greatly add to the theatrical interest in the Bronx. It is rumored the new house will be devoted to motion pictures and vaudeville.

WILL ENFORCE CHILD LABOR LAW

Children Can't Work in Picture Houses Says Inspector, Upheld by Big Managers

Factory Inspector W. W. Williams, of Missouri, has just issued an ultimatum from his offices in St. Louis, that all amateur performers under 16 years old, shall under no circumstances be permitted to act for prizes, in any motion picture show or airdome.

In order that all managers of picture houses and airdomes should be duly notified Inspector Williams has sent out circular letters, stating the full meaning of the law. In the circular there is embodied a paragraph from the child-labor statute of the State which says that no child under 14 years of age shall be permitted to appear in or about places of amusement as employees or amateur entertainers either for prizes or salary.

According to the Inspector, there is a great demand for so-called "amateur" child actors who will "act" for a mere pittance, and the cheaper motion picture houses and airdomes cater to amateur actors. Inspector Williams believes in straight motion pictures in such theatres, as he is sure there is less cause for comment on the part of a certain class of people who are against the poor man's entertainment. This action is being greatly upheld by the better class of managers, who own large and first-class houses. These managers say the use of children under the guise of contest is resorted to only by the poor class of shows that have made but the smallest possible investment, and are hurting the more legitimate enterprises through the cheap labor.

Inspector Williams is not required by law to give warning to those violating the child-labor statute. His letters are meant as friendly warning to those who are ignorant of the law.

NEW OPEN AIR THEATRE FOR ALLIANCE.

The new open air theatre that is being constructed by F. E. Hartzell, of Alliance, O., will soon be completed. The interior of the place will have a seating capacity of 1,500. The latest up-to-date motion picture machine will be installed and only the latest films will be used.

While it is the intention of Mr. Hartzell to give the public plenty of good comedy, it is also his intention to use many educational films for the purpose of giving all the school children a chance to see many pictures of travel, industry, etc. For the opening night Mr. Hartzell has engaged a brass band to furnish music during the performance.

ZANESVILLE HAS NEW HOUSE.

The new American picture house at the corner of Sixth and Main, Zanesville, O., was opened June 28, to a crowded house. Manager Collins is being complimented on all sides for the auspicious opening and also for the pretty little theatre. Flowers came "his way" from all directions, Cleveland friends sending a horseshoe of carnations for good luck.

The beautiful new theatre is admirably appointed, comfortable as to seating capacity, having folding opera chairs of the latest patterns and as the house is newly decorated, there is no prettier amusement place in southeastern Ohio. Mr. Collins has arranged for the latest films to be used daily.

"THE THIEF."—This is distinctly a feature picture and one of which we are justly proud. It is something a little out of the ordinary, something apart from the general run of this character of pictures and positively the best dramatic film ever released by this firm. This is a detective story, keenly interesting in plot, splendidly acted, and incomparably photographed.

Sherwin Bramwell, the noted detective, is seen leaving his apartments, when, in turning into the street walk, he collides with a gentleman coming from the opposite direction. Both are jarred and in the collision the pedestrian's hat is knocked off. Bramwell stoops, recovers the hat, and returns it to its owner with apologies. As he is about to turn away, a flitting expression crosses the stranger's face, which arouses a certain memory in the detective's mind, but he turns away, unable to find a name for the gentleman. This latter carries a cane, is well groomed, and the encounter has proven him courteous and decorous.

Some time later, Carlos Montague, alias "Crafty Nick," our gentleman of the cane, enters his bachelor apartments in a fashionable hotel and makes ready to attend an evening reception at one of the homes of the New York Smart Set. Later, arrayed in evening clothes, he takes his cane, looks at his watch and hurries out.

We next return to Bramwell who has returned from his walk and who immediately endeavors to find some clue to identify the man, whom he had encountered as he left his house. After a search through his collection of photographs of famous rogues he comes upon the one he is searching for, the photograph of Carlos Montague, "diamond thief suspect."

We are next shown a scene at the reception where Montague is ushered in and introduced by Mrs. Roberts, the hostess, to her friends who have never met him. However, there are many there who HAVE met him and it is clearly evident that the gentleman has a firm foothold in society.

During the course of the evening Mrs. Roberts, upon the request of certain curious friends, opens a cabinet containing relics and curios, explaining the history of each article. Among these is a stiletto cane with a gruesome history.

After the examination of the curios is through Mrs. Roberts excuses herself to her friends to go to her room and wash her hands. Montague is standing near as she dusts her hands and notes the array of rings on the lady's fingers. A quick thought, and, watching his chance, he slips quietly out after her and hurries cautiously up the stair to his hostess's chamber. There she arrives and removes her rings, placing them on her dressing table. As she disappears into the adjoining room, Montague steals into the room hides behind a portier near the dressing table and at the opportune moment snatches the jewels and hurries out.

The discovery of the robbery is made a moment later when Mrs. Roberts returns. Frantically she and the maid search the room, then, cautioning silence, she hurriedly descends the stairs, calls her daughter this latter's fiancee aside and tells them of the robbery. The young man advises that they communicate with Bramwell. Bramwell, in answer to the phone call, promises to go to them immediately and a few minutes later he and his assistant are at the place and in consultation with Mrs. Roberts.

Bramwell sees the thief in the crowd and immediately concludes that he has the jewels. Then he reveals his identity and asks permission to search the gentlemen guests. Montague is left to the last but a thorough search of the clothes of the thief fails to reveal the rings.

Not discouraged Bramwell waves them off and paces the room vainly striving to locate the jewels. Absent-mindedly he picks up the stilletto cane from a chair where it was placed by the hostess, unscrews the top and brings out the stilletto. A sudden thought flashes through his mind as he recalls the cane carried by Montague. The jewels must be concealed in the cane!

The crowd returns and Bramwell calls Montague aside. A moment of conversation, each of the two men working warily around the subject of the cane. Finally Bramwell brings out the photograph of the "diamond thief suspect" and follows up it's exhibition with a direct accusation that Mrs. Roberts' rings are concealed in the hollow of Montague's cane. Montague with a cry of rage, raises the cane to strike but it is wrenched from his hands and Bramwell coolly unscrews the top and rolls the jewels out into his palm.

A moment later the defeated thief bows his adieu to the guests and goes out with a policeman, while Bramwell returns the jewels to Mrs. Roberts and bids her and her guests good evening.

"THE DESPERADO."—This is another humorous Western comedy which ranks a good equal with previous films of this kind by our Western producer.

"Black Bart," a Western bad man, is much wanted by the county sheriff and a proclamation to this effect, offering a reward of $5,000 for the bad man's capture has been posted. At the opening of the film we see the wily criminal laughing good-naturedly at the ominous warning, which he proceeds to riddle with bullets from his revolver before riding away.

We are next shown the sheriff's office. This dignitary is assembling a posse to make a raid on Black Bart in his desert lair and to bring his back, dead or alive. We see them ride away and some time later draw up in a rocky ravine to make explorations in the neighborhood.

Their horses are corralled and left to take care of themselves while the search party climb over the stones up the hillside to a rocky eminence which offers a view of the surrounding country. While they are thus engaged Black Bart rides up the ravine and spots the posse's horses. Struck with the humor of the situation, as he sees it, he resolves to make away with the mounts, which he does successfully, hiding them in another part of the ravine. Then he steals out carefully to reconnoitre.

The sheriff and his gang return and find their horses gone. This is evidently Black Bart's work and they resolve that if he is in the neighborhood to make the capture. To insure a quick search the sheriff divides his party into one and two to each division and sends them out by various and separate paths.

Black Bart is on the watchout and when his worst enemy, the sheriff himself, comes into view behind a rocky jetty he covers him with his gun and before the astonished sheriff can regain his senses has deprived him of his gun and ordered him to "beat it."

Black Bart hurries off in the opposite direction, examining the sheriff's gun and watching warily for others of the party. A moment later two of the posse come in sight and are confronted by the bad man's gun so quickly that they make little resistance when he also takes their pistols.

There are but two others of the party yet to be corralled and Bart waits for them. A moment or two later they also come into view and the performance is repeated. When Bart has sent them hurriedly on their way the bad man laughs and examines the weapons of his disarmed foe. With a sudden inspiration he hurries back to the corral where the horses of the sheriff's party are confind, ties the bunch to one string and gallops easily off toward town.

By this time the sheriff and his gang have met and are commenting vitriolically on what blundering fools they have been. One man, single-handed has robbed them of their horses, guns and honor. It is ten miles to town and the sun is shooting little red darts of fire on the long snaky road toward town.

Black Bart canters into town by an alleyway and leaves the horses and the sheriff's weapons back of this latter's office with a curt note to the sheriff and his boys. Later the boys, footsore and limp, drag themselves into town whereupon the sheriff immediately tenders his resignation to the country board.

Two days later in answer to the ad. from the county board a strapping big cowboy enters the office of the board and applies for the job of sheriff. He is asked if he would be afraid to tackle Black Bart. He answers that he will capture the bad man if they promise to give him a permanent job. This is agreed to and the cowboy rides back home to show his wife and baby his star. Then he explains to his wife just how he will effect the capture of Black Bart. She makes a bandage for his uninjured hand in which he slips a short-barreled revolver. Then he kisses his wife and baby goodby and promises to bring the bad man back with him.

Next we see him seated in a stage coach on his way over the hills to the vicinity of the bad man's latest depredations. Bart is waiting for the coach and the usual hold-up occurs. But when he examines the supposed wounded cowboy a bolt of lightning flashes from the victim's bandaged hand and the bad man falls wounded.

A few hours later the experimental sheriff and his captive enter the office of the county board. The cowboy sheriff is congratulated and receives his permanent appointment as sheriff of the county.

"THE PRINCESS AND THE FISHBONE."—A beautifully colored humorous film, with several novel incidents. A princess is breakfasting heartily, when she swallows a fish-bone. The doctors endeavor to remove the obstacle, but all to no purpose. Hearing that an eminent physician is living in the woods, two messengers are sent out to fetch him in. A woodcutter has been having "a few words" with a fair companion, and eventually leaves her, and she, to have her revenge, informs the messengers that the physician is pretending to be a woodcutter, and that they will have to resort to violent measures to get him to come. Upon finding him, after some persuasion, necessitating resorting to the "strong measures," they bring him to the Princess, who is rapidly choking. Here the woodcutter again essays to convince them that he is no physician, but compelled to do so, approaches the unhappy Princess, who suddenly laughs, thereby releasing the bone. There is general rejoicing, and eventually the Princess marries the woodcutter, amid great acclamation.

Wives and sweethearts will find in this film a possible method of settling scores with their husbands or lovers—that is, if they have any scores to settle.

"THE FOXY LAWYER."—A most remarkable study in facial expression introducing a famous French comedian in the role of a criminal lawyer.

We see him pouring forth his eloquence in court, nothing stopping him, not even a dry throat. After a few hours of it, the court being in peaceful slumber, our lawyer quietly allows his client to go.

The panorama of the court room during the plea is filled with exceedingly mirth provoking examples of expressive faces. The effect of each of the orator's remarks is registered immediately upon the decidedly different faces of the jury with an irresistible force of humor.

"THE FAILURE OF SUCCESS."—A simple but effective drama of a feature length largely produced out-of-doors in the vicinity of Notre Dame, in Paris.

This film tells of a doctor, who, during the course of his researches, makes a great discovery. He becomes famous through this, and is invited into society. At a society function he is captivated by the charms of a noted actress, who, however, does not return his infatuation. He meditates suicide, but the sight of a convent child leads him back to his wife and children.

The work of the child actors is especially effective while interior settings are more than ordinarily expensive.

"THROUGH THE ENEMY'S LINE."—An excellent military drama, acted amidst most beautiful and wild surroundings.

Officer in camp calls for volunteer to carry dispatches. Hazardous journey started, but met by the enemy. Carrier shot and left for dead. The Little Goatherd, hearing shots, runs to the spot and discovers the wounded soldier. Returns to the house for assistance. Dispatch carrier explains his mission, when the brave boy offers to try and get through the lines. Falls in with outposts, who, not satisfied with his explanation, arrest him and start for camp. The Goatherd waits his opportunity, and pushes his capter over a precipice. Successful arrival with papers into the right hands. Highly commended for his bravery.

"PEKIN, THE WALLED CITY."—It is well known how difficult it is to take views in the Chinese capital, in consequence of the difficulties raised by the authorities. Nevertheless, our operators have been able to obtain some pictures which are very interesting, and of excellent quality. These throw quite a new light on the great Chinese city, up to the present almost unknown to the general public.

Order of Pictures:

1.—The Cheng Men Gate. 2.—Around the Streets of Pekin. 3.—The entrance of the Imperial City, access to which is forbidden to foreigners. 4.—Body of Chinese cavalry. These soldiers are equipped and armed in European fashion. 5.—Departure of a caravan for the Gobi Desert. 6.—Another street in Pekin. 7.—Chinese beauty enjoying a pipe. 8.—Navigation on the Chunzhi Canal. Coolies and quaint junks. The baggage, as packed on deck, gives the appearance of a huge mattress, and the sails resemble gigantic quilts as the primitive boats are navigated on the river bed. 9.—Funeral of Che-Foo mandarin. Procession of mourners, bands, wreaths, trophies and symbols, lanterns, flags and umbrellas of honor in great number; modern carriages, Sedan chairs, strange gods and fat priests.

"A POSTAL SUBSTITUTE."—With the advent of the rural free delivery, the fretting of the country with railroads and the increased transportation facilities of all kinds, the picturesque days of "The Pony Express" have disappeared; but there are thousands of people still living in the west who remember those stirring days, and in remote parts of the country the mail is still carried on relays of wiry ponies—trained for their work.

When our picture opens, Joe Flynn, a rider in the service of the government, has been shot from ambush by a masked man; and is dying. Grouped at his bedside are his son, Jack, a sturdy young man; the local doctor and the county sheriff. The old man dies and a week later we see Jack delivering the mail. The sheriff has inserted the description of the murderer in the Yuma Gulch Herald, and the country is being scoured to find him.

Jack has a long and perilous ride between the two points of his route and is frequently beset with danger.

Steve Benson, a desperado, who has killed old man Flynn, is living unhappily with his wife, in hourly fear of having his crime discovered. His wife has read the murderer's description in the Yuma Gulch paper and the offer of $1,000 reward. She suspects her husband, and, when in an altercation with her, she becomes convinced of his guilt, she writes to Sheriff Gordon and gives the information necessary to arrest Benson.

She posts the letter with Jack, when he rides by, and her husband suspects what she has done and rings a confession from her. He knows that his only hope of freedom lies in intercepting the letter, and so follows Jack to the turning point in his daily trip, where he is wont to change horses and dine at the home of George Stone, whose daughter May, he expects to make his wife.

Benson comes while Jack is eating, and succeeds in slipping a sleeping potion in the latter's coffee. Jack falls asleep, but before Benson has an opportunity to extract the letter from the mail sack, May returns, and, being unable to rouse her sweetheart, she rides with the mail, back to Yuma Gulch. Benson follows in his endeavor to get the letter, and when he decides that the chase is hopeless, returns to his cabin, collects the small horde he has there and rides for the mountains and freedom.

In the meantime, the letter has been delivered to Sheriff Gordon and he sets out with a posse to capture Benson. Jack, who has recovered, joins them on the way, and after a long chase, they come upon the wounded Benson and arrest him.

Jack is deeply grateful of the services rendered him by his faithful sweetheart, and announces to the assembled cowboys, his intention of making May his wife as soon as his father's death is avenged.

PATHE FRERES.

"MISTAKEN IDENTITY."—Heloise Helbronn, married to a man for whom she has little affection, is beloved by a young lieutenant. Count Lanvale, a friend of her husband, has also fallen in love with her, and he finally succumbs to his irresistible desire to tell her so. Heloise begs him to refrain from ever again speaking of the matter.

Unfortunately, Helbronn later on discovers his wife in the act of reading a note from the young lieutenant; he wrests it from her, but in the struggle she is able to tear off the signature. Count Lanvale's recent behavior convinces Helbronn, however, that he is the writer of the note, and he threatens to kill him. Heloise, afraid for the sake of the lieutenant to tell the truth, warns Lanvale of what she has done, begging him at the same time to forgive her. But Lanvale is not a coward, and although he guards her secret, Helbronn's insults oblige him to accept his challenge.

The two men meet, and it is Helbronn who falls. Lanvale gets away, but it is with a heavy heart, for as he bitterly reflects upon the sorry affair, the vision of Heloise united to her soldier lover rises tauntingly before him.

"AN AWFUL SYMPHONY." — A nondescript band stands in the street giving vent to the most unearthly row. Deafened by the discordant noise the inhabitants around throw water over the musicians, who immediately dissolve and disappear. Suddenly huge humid spots appear on the wall, take the shapes of the musicians, form into solid bodies, and once again the musicians recommence that awful refrain. Marching further along the street they seize some gaudy colored umbrellas. After a number of startling changes, in which the umbrellas take the leading part with very beautiful effect, the musicians return to their shanty and continue to play their awful tune.

"MANON."—Lescaut, a soldier, who is a rollicking good-fellow, fond of his glass, receives from his father a message that his sister Manon will arrive in Paris the following day, and requests him to meet her and look after her welfare. In the midst of a round af gaiety Lescaut fails to meet her, and she, arriving without friends, is at a loss what to do, until Des Grieux comes forward and offers to be her escort. They fall violently in love with one another, and it is not until some days later that she meets her brother when promenading in the fashionable Place Vendome. A marquis, the friend of her brother, is introduced and he in turn also falls deeply in love with her. This marquis is a man of great power, and her brother's patron, and in order to remove her from the influence of Des Grieux he has the latter kidnapped and placed in a monastery. Manon then, fickle as all women, agrees to marry the marquis. Meantime Des Grieux has taken holy orders, and Manon, reading one day that he is to deliver his first sermon at St. Peter's attends, and after congratulates him in the vestry. Their old love refuses to be smothered, and the marquis finding them together uses his influence and has Manon deported.

"THE COWBOY'S SWEETHEART AND THE BANDIT."—Jack, one of the cowboys on Circle L Ranch, is in love with a neighboring ranch girl Lucy, and he starts out on his piebald broncho to see her. Leaving the horse on the road he and the girl wander away through the forest. Meantime a ne'er-do-well, Dick Dazers, coming along and seeing the horse, mounts and gallops to the crossroads, where he arrives in time to hold up the coach as it comes along the rough road, and separates the passengers from their money and jewels. His horse, however, runs away back to its master, and Jack finds it where he left it. Suspecting nothing he starts on his way back, and arriving at the crossroads sees there a black mask dropped by Dick; he is handling it, wondering how it came there, when the sheriff and his posse, accompanied by an Englishman, who was a passenger on the coach and who had given the alarm, arrive on the scene. Everything points to Jack as the guilty one, and he is bound and led away. On the way they pass Lucy, who does not believe that Jack could be guilty of such a crime. She seizes the Englishman's horse while he is getting a drink and gallops back to the Circle L Ranch and tells Jack's friends. They follow and catch up with the sheriff's party just as he is about to lock Jack in the calaboose. On hearing the evidence things look black against Jack, and they ride homewards to consider what is best to be done. Meantime the Englishman in his wandering meets Dick, who again tries to hold him up. At this moment Jack's friends come along and capture him and lead him to the sheriff. Lucy tells the sheriff that she believes Dick is the man who really held up the coach, and asks to be allowed to act as his jailer so that she may find out. The sheriff finally consents to her plan, which we will not divulge here. We can assure you it was a very novel idea, and worked out to perfection, with the result that full evidence of Dick's guilt was obtained, and Jack was freed through the efforts of the girl he loved.

"CATCHING LOBSTERS."—The film opens with views showing the construction of the large wicker pots or traps with which the succulent lobster is caught. Placed on board a fishing boat we set sail to the banks, where after being baited the pots are thrown overboard. The lobster catcher returns the following day, when he is rewarded with a fine haul. Rendering the strong claws powerless, he heads his boat for shore, and strides away to sell his spoils at the local market.

"MORE OF BETTY'S PRANKS."—It is lunch time and Betty walks in unconcernedly, and upon being reprimanded for her late arrival at the table, "cheeks back." A smart slap on the cheek is her punishment, and she thereupon makes a dash through the garden gate to escape from a home where she feels she is not appreciated. After her runs the whole household, but Betty is fleet-footed, and is not to be caught. Moreover, she knocks over a few customers sitting outside a cafe to retard her relatives, and before they are again in pursuit she has borrowed a milk cart harnessed to a big dog. Driving away furiously she is soon far out of sight and able to run the cart into a farmyard; here she unharnesses the dog and enters the farmhouse to buy a bowl of milk to refresh herself after her long and dusty ride. She and the dog are soon very chummy, and drink out of the same bowl in the friendliest possible manner.

Their meal, however, is interrupted by the appearance of Betty's friends at the door. Through the window the former dashes without a moment's hesitation, and followed by the dog, she makes a bee line for home, overturning a farm laborer and causing another man to fall into a tar barrel on the way; incidents which she regards as infinitely amusing.

"PETE HAS A GOOD TIME."—Pete is caught with the goods, which in this instance is a rabbit, which the enterprising fellow has poached from some private preserve, and our first view of him is in the police station, from which he makes an ingenious getaway. Very much on the hike he beats it for the tall timbers with a posse in full cry a short distance in the rear. Seeing a motor car left unattended he cranks it up and putting on the fifth speed tears off a mile or two to a secluded corner, where he makes a rapid change from his old togs to the glad clothes he finds in a valise in the car. Abandoning his stolen auto at a roadside inn he looks upon the wine when it is red in the company of a veiled lady with whom he has struck up an acquaintance. When the damsel in question finally raises her veil, however, Pete thinks it would have been a merciful act to himself to have allowed the police to catch him. BIOGRAPH CO.

"A FLASH OF LIGHT."—The difference between love and infatuation is generally marked, but how often are we indifferent to the dictates of our soul. The sight of a pretty face and an attractive personality nearly always intoxicates us to such a degree as to make us believe that our impulses are induced by the heart and soul, but what a fallacy. It is by the sight that we are hypnotized and though the eyes may be the windows of the soul, still under certain influence an intercepting shade is drawn. This was the condition of John Rogers, a young chemist, who is sincerely loved by the eldest of two sisters, but in a state of infatuation prefers the younger girl, fascinated by what he would call vivacity, but which is nothing less than frivolousness. He marries her, and she soon tires of a life of domesticity. He tries to interest her in his chemical experiments, but they simply bore her, although they are interesting to the sister, which interest is born of a pure love which she still holds. While he is working in his laboratory, the wife is either entertaining or being entertained by friends. She is in her element at a dinner party, when an explosion takes place in the husband's laboratory, apparently destroying his sight and hearing. It is a sad house she returns to after her evening's pleasure. There is her husband deaf and sightless. You may imagine her lot is now more repugnant, as his helplessness annoys her, so she eagerly accepts diversion. This comes in the form of an offer from one of her friends, a theatrical manager, to shine on the comic opera stage. She accepts the offer and on the persuasion of this friend decides to leave her husband and get a divorce, leaving her wedding ring on the table for her sister or father-in-law to find. The sister sees her action, and tries to dissuade her, but in vain. The thought of this second and worse blow to the young man moves the sister to wear the ring, deceiving him until his affliction is passed, for the doctor is sure of restoring his sight and hearing. This deception is easy as he can neither see nor hear and is ever under hands of the nurse. The operation promises to be successful, so the sister goes to the green room of the theatre to bring the wife back. After a heated argument the wife consents to go and see him at least, arriving just as he is placed in a darkened room to have the bandage removed. When the bandage is taken off, the young man sees in the dim light of the room the figures about him. He turns from one to the other until he sees his wife and makes a move towards her, but she with guilty mien recoils and as she does, clutches the portieres nervously. Down they come, letting in a fatal flash of light from the outside, striking the poor fellow's eyes causing now incurable blindness. Realizing what she has done, she rushes horror stricken from the house. The young man's hearing unimpaired, he learns the truth and now feels in his heart what he failed to see with his eyes.

"AS THE BELLS RANG OUT."—The power of dissembling is probably one of the greatest gifts afforded the human being. It has saved us from calamity and disaster; it has prevented woe and sorrow. In this case it allowed to transpire without a cloud the happiest occasion in the lives of two young people—their wedding. Grace, the daughter of Gilbert Allen, is sought in marriage by Wilson Breen, a young man of wealth. The father cheerfully approves of the match and the day for the wedding is set for six months hence. The momentous day arrives and all is in readiness. The bride to be has just left her father for her room, after his reviewing of her attired in her trousseau, when he receives a letter warning him that his connection with an illegitimate trust fund deal had been discovered, and advising him to fly. It is an affair the like of which many a reputatble banker has before become involved; simply an idiosyncrasy of the money market. To fly would be cowardly, besides it might mean the death of his daughter on such a day as this. Well, he makes a clean breast of it to his son-in-law to be, and gives him a chance to back out. That young man, grasping his hand, exclaims: "No, I will not give her up. We need each other more than ever. We must keep her in ignorance of it." At this point the detectives arrive to take Allen away, but being humane allow the ceremony to take place with them hiding behind a screen. Allen gives his daughter in marriage to Breen and bestows parental blessing as the happy couple leave for their honeymoon, and before the sound of wedding bells has died out he is led off to prison by the detectives.

"SERIOUS SIXTEEN."—"When love is young all the world seems gay." Thus chants troubador under milady's window, but——. Well, we must confess there are fleeing clouds and threatening storms during that period. "Serious Sixteen" would seem a paradoxical expression, still the sixteen year old can become awfully serious, as we will show. Tom and Adele are sweethearts and decide that they must marry. Papa gives consent, but enjoins that they must wait four years. Four years! a lifetime. They simply cannot abide by this decision, and resolve to terminate an unendurable existence, hence they form a suicide pact. Their courage fails in the attempted commission of it, so they decide to elope. While Adele goes to get her belongings, a couple of tantalizing misses appear and for a lark bestow upon the nerve-shaken Tom undue attentions. Adele arrives and from what she witnesses, becomes furiously jealous, losing her faith in poor Tom, and leaves him still forcibly detained by the mischief makers. Going home she determines to be through with the world and join the Salvation Army. When Tom hears of this he, too, decides upon the religious and becomes a Friar. The extent of their avowals is the purchase of the costumes of the costumers. Her firm purpose, however, is soon weakened by the present from papa of a picture hat. As she dons this, Tom enters, and seeing her backslide, he, too, apostatizes, reasoning it is better to wait four years, than to suffer as they had during this one day.

SELIG POLYSCOPE CO.

"THE PHOENIX."—Leslie Blackburn, a gambler, was disinherited by his father and the fortune willed to his half sister Sadie. Blackburn would not be put off in this way, he endeavored to do away with Sadie, but unknown to him, she was rescued by the Salvation Army and grew into womanhood under their care. While engaged in her charitable work in New York, she was saved from insult by Carroll Graves, who, although he led a Bohemian life, was good at heart. He knew Blackburn from out west and had been robbed of a fortune by him through false gambling. He had in his possession legal papers to the effect that Sadie was among the living and he was now in search of she and Blackburn.

Graves recognized Sadie and having also located Blackburn, he wrote to him to call at his home, but through cunning Blackburn robs him of the papers and silences O'Gall, a friend of Graves, who come to his rescue. In the scuffle the candle is upset and the house commences to burn, Sadie saves Graves from an untimely death.

A few years elapse during which Sadie becomes a great singer and Blackburn not knowing who she really is, becomes infatuated with her. On Graves' wish, she makes an appointment with Blackburn, where he is met by Graves and a detective. On presentation of the serious charges against him, he attempts to end his wretched life.

"MAZEPPA."—Mazeppa, the infant son of a Tartar chief, was captured by the Poles and grew into manhood in the Polish land, never knowing his true parentage. Through his bravery and gallantry, he became the favorite page of Olinska, daughter of Castellan, a Polish noble. Mazeppa was the favorite of all women and the envy of all men. He loved Olinska and his love was returned, but this was against the plan of Castellan, who had made preparations to marry her to Count Premislas. Mazeppa forced a duel with his rival, in which the latter was seriously wounded and the enraged Castellan, as a punishment to Mazeppa, had him tied to the back of a wild and desperate horse, in spite of the pitiful entreaties of the unhappy Olinska.

The helpless Mazeppa was driven through forests, and rivers, attacked by wolves, drenched by the rain, then scorched by the sun, with the ropes that bound him buried deep into his flesh, longing for death. He reached the Tartar camp, where the exhausted horse at last dropped. Mazeppa was discovered and relieved from his tortures by kind hands and by means of a mark on his breast, was recognized by the Tartar chief as his son. Mazeppa was proclaimed the successor to his father, as chief of the Tartars. However, his greatest hope, that of making Olinska his wife, was worth more to him than all else. Disguised as peasants he with several of his followers, entered the house of Castellan, where they were engaged to dance at the festivities of Olinska's marriage which was about to take place at her father's command. At the opportune moment, the Tartars overpowered the house of Castellan, and released Olinska, once more reunited, now for all time, with her Tartar lover, Mazeppa.

LUBIN MFG. CO.

"ROSEMARY FOR REMEMBRANCE."—We regard Rosemary as one of the most successful of our recent films in point of production, photography and heart appeal. It is thoroughly characteristic of the new Lubin production and is good as a feature in any picture theatre anywhere. Rosemary loves Dick Holding, whose good looks and good nature have won her heart. She refuses the proposal of honest Tom Burrows for Dick's sake and it is understood that some day they two will be married. A party of "joy riders" ask to be directed to the hotel of the little village, and for the sake of the ride in the automobile Dick volunteers to show them the way. The men are all a trifle intoxicated and it strikes them as being a good joke to carry Dick into the hotel with them and induce him to drink. He is unused to intoxicants and as the sparkling champagne mounts to his head he throws caution to the winds and when he finally leaves the merry party it is two in the morning and he is very much under the influence of his potations. His patient mother has been waiting up for him in the hope of getting him quietly to bed, but Dick will have none of it and his loud talking rouses his sleeping father, who sternly drives him from the house. Dick decides to go to the city to avoid facing the comments of the townpeople, and Rosemary gives him a sprig of her name-plant "for remembrance." Dick means well, but his duties are many and Rosemary inquires in vain at the tiny post-office; though even when Tom renews his proposal and shows that the prosperous Dick is about to marry his partner's daughter, she remains true to her pledge. But the shock of the discovery has its effect and the repentant Dick arrives too late. It is a powerful story unusually well played.

"JOHN GRAHAM'S GOLD."—Mrs. Vaughn has been "playing the market" with the usual result. Her husband, she knows, would never forgive her and she has been borrowing the money from John Graham, a friend of the family, whose regard for the daughter, Eunice, has been his reason for violating his usual business caution and lending money without security. The debt has reached $5,000 and Graham, now sure of his position demands the return of the money or Eunice's hand. He knows very well that Mrs. Vaughn has lost her margins and that she will do her utmost to persuade her daughter to the marriage, though Eunice loves a young lawyer. To save her mother she assents to the marriage, but life is even more unpleasant than she had feared, for Graham is a miser at heart, and he is moved to a transport of rage at the sight of the new dress and hat that are Eunice's first purchases. To prevent a recurrence of the extravagance he takes the money from her pocket book and is putting it in the safe whene he hears a sound. Not knowing that it is Eunice, leaving his home to return to her parents he supposes it to be a burglar and fearful lest his precious hoard be stolen he catches up a revolver, prepared to fight for his possessions. The revolver is knocked from the desk and is discharged. The noise alarms the household and when the door is broken in Graham is found dead. The interest is held tense to the last picture and the climax is as unexpected as it is appreciated.

KALEM CO.

"HAUNTED BY CONSCIENCE."—"Haunted by Conscience" is the title of a new Kalem military drama. The Kalem players have been working along military lines for some time and have had the benefit of the coaching and assistance of one of the most prominent officers in the United States army at the present time, and our producers assure us that the details of military life are correctly portrayed in every particular.

In "Haunted by Conscience" two young men of sturdy New England stock are in love with the same girl. The favorite lover, however, is somewhat timid and fails to see that he is indeed the choice of the girl. In his disappointment he decided to enlist in the regular army. The other lover proposes and is rejected, and he, too, decides to enter the army. The young men enlist and are sent with their regiment to the Philippines. There their company is detailed to a chase after Moro bandits. Here the favorite lover proves himself a real hero and loses his life in an attempt to cover the cowardice of his friend. The survivor goes back home after his enlistment expires and attempts to claim the girl. His suit is favored, but continually he is haunted by the ghostly presence of his dead friend, and even before the marriage altar the apparition appears in time to prevent the ceremony. The drama is one of great strength and is magnificently enacted by the Kalem players.

"BRAVE HEARTS."—"Brave Hearts" is the title of the Kalem Indian picture of the week, and in this production, as in those which have been put out previously, the Kalem players have endeavored to portray a well authenticated incident of real Indian warfare.

It is a well known fact that the Indians held an insane person in great veneration, regarding such an unfortunate as one touched by the hand of the mighty Manitou, and hence immune from harm.

The story of "Brave Hearts" centers around this theme. Marauding Indians attack a little frontier cabin while the men folks are away, and the young mother and her little daughter left alone. Knowing the peril of the little girl and ignoring her own danger, the mother feigns madness and boldly walks out among the redskins while the little girl makes a wonderful ride for help and safety on her sturdy cow pony. The mother's madness is so well simulated that she actually succeeds in leading the Indians to a point where it had been agreed that the little girl would bring help, and it is needless to say that the great climax of the picture is the wiping out of the redskins, the rescue of the brave woman and the reunion with her little daughter.

Altogether this is one of the most thrilling and convincing pictures in the notable Kalem series.

VITAGRAPH CO.

"TWA HIELAND LADS."—Two Highland laddies, one seven foot four; the other five feet fat, tired of farm work and every other kind of work for that matter, are sent to the mill with bags of grain on their shoulders. After trudging through fields they set their sacks on the ground and seat themselves on them and begin to discuss the white man's burdens and the general cussedness of labor.

In the midst of their dialogue a "Tommy Atkinson" of the English army comes along, tells them that they are foolish to work so hard and advises them to join the ranks. Slinging their bags away, they beat a double quick to the recruiting station, at which they arrive and after an examination they are accepted and placed in the awkward squad of the "Kilties."

The sergeant who takes them in hand becomes almost insane in his efforts to teach them military tactics. The boys of the regiment play all sorts of practical jokes on them, and one day while "long and lanky" and "short and squatty" are looking in the swimming tank, the boys push them in, clothes and all, The two bumpkins await a chance to get square with their comrades. Two officers of the regiment sauntering along stop and gaze into the tank and the two guys shove their superiors into the water.

When they get out they order the arrest of the two lads, who have taken to their heels. The chase begins and it's a lively one, too, and full of surprises enough to keep one guessing all the way through its progress until they are captured, court martialed and sentenced to imprisonment, which is revoked when the penitence of the two miscreants is established.

They are restored to their places in the regiment and one year later we see them marching, one at the head of the band, his great height towering still higher in his drum major's hat, waving his baton with flourish and twirl, while his short, fat companion is seen blowing and squeezing the bagpipes inflated with his own importance and pride.

"DAVY JONES AND CAPTAIN BRAGG."—Davy Jones, the irrepressible, has his weather eye trained upon the attractive "Widow Cute," whom he makes up his mind to win by fair or foul means. Returning from a day's fishing, he passes her cottage, in the garden of which she is comfortably seated enjoying the fresh air and the aromatic perfume of the flowers. Davy drops his wheelbarrow and sidles up to her with bashful and embarrassed advances, trying to lead her into conversation and up to the subject of matrimony, the one idea with which he is saturated. While he is trying to force this issue, Captain Bragg, in officer's uniform, brass buttons, etc., hauls in sight and completely eradicates "Davy" and his intentions.

"Davy" recognizes the irresistible charms of Bragg, and at once hastens to his room to titivate himself in his "glad rags" and get on the job, fortifying himself with a "solitary" engagement ring of pure crystal, feeling that to be forewarned and forearmed is half the battle when it comes to the battle of hearts. With the assistance of his friend and roommate with a face like a fish, "Davy" prepares for the fray, and after many struggles and wriggles, starts out to clinch the widow.

Again he is doomed to disappointment, and again overthrown by the gay and bewhiskered Captain Bragg. Desperate, despondent and determined, "Davy" fastens an immense anchor about his neck and proceeds to suicide, but even in this he is baffled, saved by his salty old chum, who tells him while there is life there is hope; at the same time agrees to pilot him into smooth and pleasant waters. He hikes it back to his room, wraps himself in a sheet and pillow case, lays in wait for the approaching Bragg, who with the widow is taking a stroll in the wood and the moonlight. While the ghost is waiting, "Davy" stands nearby hidden from view.

Spooning and lost in sweet nothings, the unsuspecting couple is looking into the depths of each other's eyes when the ghost looms up. The widow collapses and cries for help, while the brave and dauntless Bragg takes it to the woods, and "Davy" comes to the widow's assistance and protection. She falls into his arms, graciously thanks her kind and fearless deliverer and showers her smiles and blessings upon him. "Davy" is a winner and does not fail to make the best of his victory and press the prize to his bosom.

In his anxiety to congratulate "Davy," the old scare crow of a "ghost" comes forward with bows and smirks, the sheet trailing behind him, hanging out of his sweater where he has stuffed it to keep it out of sight. The comedy of the situation is a whole show in itself and makes a strong finish.

"HAKO'S SACRIFICE."—Poor Hako, a Japanese boy, is sold into bondage to a cruel fisherman who makes his life a burden and even more wretched than his physical deformities and weakness. Morning Glory, a little Japanese girl, in passing the fisherman's hut with her mother, sees Hako, looks into the sad face and feels sorry for him. Her father is a florist and when he gives his daughter a couple of chrysanthemum plants, she gives one of them to Hako, who stealthily plants it where it cannot be seen by his cruel master, at night watering and cultivating it as the only bright thing in his unhappy life, and his sole possession.

Morning Glory's father fails in business and is put in jail for debt, to the great delight of Keiki, his enemy and competitor in business. The Prince of the province offers a reward of five hundred yen to the child who brings the finest specimen of chrysanthemum on Festival Day. Hako is delighted, and hopes to win the prize and freedom at the same time.

Morning Glory rejoices in the thought that she will win the prize and her father's release from prison. Keiki, in passing Morning Glory's garden, sees her watching her cherished plant and its remarkable flower. He waits until nightfall, and, stealing into the garden destroys the precious plant. The little girl, on discovering her loss, is inconsolable. Hako happens to be passing her house at this moment and resolves to sacrifice his chrysanthemum to the child's purpose, for he loves the girl who has always been so kind and good to him.

At night Hako removes his plant and transplants it in Morning Glory's garden in place of the one she lost. The child goes into the garden the next morning. Her joy is unbounded. She thinks the gods have answered her prayer. The Festival Day arrives and Morning Glory wins the prize; her father is released from prison and Hako's sacrifice has won the great happiness and joy which is only the compensation gained by those who make it.

An unmistakable heart theme that is bound to reach the heart and hold the interest and attention.

"OLD LOVES AND THE NEW."—John Stanley falls in love with Ethel Winslow and they become engaged. John is the son of a wealthy father, who, when his son tells him of the engagement, advises the young fellow that he should learn to make a living for himself before entering the matrimonial field. John takes his father's advice.

The South African gold fields attract him and he goes there, after bidding a fond farewell to Ethel. Meanwhile Ethel meets and falls in love with Austin Brooks, and allows herself to accept from him a love token. John Stanley is successful in his South African work and has discovered gold. We see him at the bungalow home of his friend, Allan Jones, in South Africa, discussing means of interesting capital in the gold prospect which he has discovered.

Helen Jones, the sister of his friend, is on the scene, and we become aware of the fact that John is attracted to the beautiful sister of his old-time friend. A plan is finally arranged. Jones writes a friend in New York to insert an advertisement in the New York papers asking for a partner with ten thousand dollars capital to operate a South African gold mine, communications in response to which are to be addressed to Allan Jones, Rambezi, South Africa.

Austin Brooks sees this advertisement in New York and having some capital concludes to go to South Africa and look into the matter. He in turn bids good-bye to Ethel Winslow. On arriving in South Africa Brooks meets John at the home of Allan Jones, and a mutual friendship as well as a partnership develops. Neither man makes any mention of Ethel Winslow, though both faithfully correspond with her. Everything goes well with John Brooks and they develop a very rich mine.

John, however, is taken with fever and is forced to rest at the home of Jones. Here Helen shows a silent devotion for the handsome friend of her brother. Her dream of happiness is shattered, however, when she accidentally comes upon a photograph of Ethel Winslow, on the back of which is inscribed the following: "To Jack—

With love from your affianced wife, Ethel."

From this moment Helen is cold toward John, although it is plain to be seen that she is deeply in love with him.

John leaves for New York to regain his full health and, true to his engagement with Ethel, has no other idea than to marry her. During John's absence in Africa his father has been a constant visitor at the home of Ethel Winslow and her mother He was present when Brooks called to say good-bye to Ethel, and later, while the young men are hewing out their destinies under the burning sun of South Africa, the old gentleman happens to read a letter from Brooks to Ethel, in which he (Brooks) speaks of returning to America and making her his wife. The suspicions aroused at the first visit are now confirmed and he sees Ethel is not in love with his son.

After John's return to New York his father, hoping to prevent the marriage between John and Ethel, cables to Austin Brooks a message which calls him immediately to New York. The day that Brooks receives the cablegram in South Africa he is visiting the home of Allan Jones and his sister who by a strange coincidence are preparing to go to New York. Brooks shows the cablegram to them and they agree to go together. On their arrival in New York they visit John's home. Here the elder Stanley becomes pleasantly aware of the fact that his son John is desperately smitten with the girl from Africa and that the feeling is reciprocated. A new light falls upon him and his whole plan of campaign changes. He manages to bring Austin Brooks to the home of Ethel just as she and John are in close conversation, and just as a tense situation is about precipitated he introduces Helen Jones as the fiance of his son John. This is a surprise to John and Helen, but it relieves the situation for Ethel. Helen sees that Ethel agrees and she acquiesces.

The scene closes with Ethel slightly pressing the hand of John's father, happiness for both couples and contentment beaming from the face of the clever arranger of the destinies of the four young people. Scenically and photographically the film is an exceptional one, and the acting brings out the dramatic, pathetic and comedy elements of the story in a striking manner.

"A FRONTIER HERO."—The action of this story takes place on the frontier of Kentucky in about 1800. Inside a stockade several settlers have their log cabin homes. The family with which we are concerned consists of a frontiersman, his wife and four children—the oldest, Tom, a boy of fourteen, the youngest a baby girl, Ruth. The children have a constant playmate in a magnificent collie dog called Shep. One day the father goes hunting with the other men of the settlement. In their anxiety to be early at the hunting ground they forget to close the gate of the stockade. At about this point the adventure which is portrayed in the picture begins.

Ruth sees a favorable opportunity to investigate the region beyond the stockade, and, while her mother is in another part of the cabin her older sister is busily engaged in poking the ashes in the open fireplace, she quietly walks out of the cabin door and on through the stockade, and rambles off into the hills. On returning to the room the mother misses the child. Tom and his younger brother are bringing in logs for the fire, and to her questions as to the whereabouts of the baby they answer that they haven't seen her. The little sister whose back was turned tells the mother that the baby was "right there," pointing to the place where the baby was playing on the floor with Shep. The mother sends Tom one way and, taking the girl with her, goes in the opposite direction, in the meantime alarming the neighbors in the settlement.

Returning to the cabin in the hope that Ruth may have wandered back, the mother discovers for the first time the open gate in the stockade. A great fear seizes her. Tom, a boy of quick mind, calls Shep, shows him the little bonnet belonging to his baby sister and talks earnestly to the dog. The intelligent brute seems to understand for, hardly allowing Tom time enough to slip a rope around his neck and grasp a rifle, he darts out through the door of the cabin and on out the gate. Ruth has meanwhile wandered away, stopping now and then and picking wild flowers as she goes. A hostile Indian skulking near the settlement has found the child and made off with her.

We now see an exciting hunt. Over the ground where we have seen the Indian take the child we watch the boy, led by the dog, following the trail. The Indian, feeling safe from pursuit, slackens his pace and is about to rest for a moment, when Tom and Shep discover him in the distance. He hears the approach of the boy and the dog at the same time and, quickly letting the baby down, turns on Tom and fires. Tom is also quick with his weapon and shoots th Indian. Shep dashes on toward the Indian, but a the savage falls and struggles away the dog chang his mind and goes to protect the baby girl. Tom struggles, wounded as he is, toward the dog and th child and, taking his handkerchief from about his neck he ties it on that of the dog and commands him to go home.

The faithful brute seems to realize that something urgent is expected of him, for immediately he receives the command he dashes on and away toward the settlement. For a moment Tom talks to his sister and then suddenly faints away. The little one, not understanding his silence, tries to rouse him by shaking him. Unsuccessful and thinking that he is asleep, she lies down beside him, places her weary little head upon big brother's bosom and finally falls asleep herself.

We now follow Shep in his homeward race for help. We see him cross a beautiful mountain stream, dash on down to the settlement and arrive at the outside of the stockade just after the father has returned with his friends from the hunt. While they are in the cabin listening to the agonizing story of the loss of the baby they hear Shep's bark and rush to the stockade gate to admit the faithful brute. Seeing Tom's handkerchief they immediately start back after the dog, who bounds away ahead of them.

When they arrive at the scene of the fight they find Tom lying on the ground and his baby sister peacefully sleeping with her head resting on big brother's shoulder. For a moment it is feared that Tom has been killed, but when they revive him they find that his wound is slight. The fond parents, of course, are in ecstacies of delight over the finding of the baby, and also over the fact that Tom is not seriously injured. In all this the faithful dog is not lost sight of and comes in for many a hearty pat.

A beautiful and most convincing picture from the standpoint of scenic quality, vigorous dramatic action and that powerful attraction which comes from the mingling of a child love with the steadfast affection of a dumb brute.

"LAZY FARMER BROWN."—Farmer Brown is one of the indolent sort whose places are always overrun with weeds. He is so lazy that he would rather sleep than eat, or in fact do anything that requires the least physical exertion. His wife begs him to get busy and hoe the weeds, but instead of doing so he stretches himself in the sun on a big log and enjoys a snooze. His neighbors also attempt to rouse him to the spirit which should fill a tiller of the soil, but all to no avail.

One day Brown visits the country store to buy some smoking tobacco. To the amusement of the farmers and idlers gathered about, after completing his purchase he stretches himself out comfortably beside a barrel, and with his head resting upon a convenient hamper gradually falls asleep. While Brown is slumbering a bright idea strikes one of the farmers. Borrowing a piece of cloth from the storekeeper he writes on it a notice, made the more impressive by a crudely drawn representation of a skull and cross-bones, to the effect that in 1709 Captain Kidd had buried near this spot a chest of treasure. Going to Brown's farm the village wags bury the cloth near the log on which Brown takes his frequent siestas.

The next day, in passing by the place on a pretended fishing trip, they ask Brown to allow them to dig for bait, which permission is lazily granted. One of them finds the rag with the inscription on it, and waking Brown from his nap, they show it to him. The effect is magical. Brown siezes a mattock and begins to dig vigorously among the weeds to the intense delight of the farmers who see their scheme working to perfection. After digging for some time Brown is almost exhausted and, concluding that he will take a little rest, he stretches out and promptly falls asleep on his favorite log.

While asleep he dreams that Captain Kidd and his pirate crew visit the spot and point out where the chest is hidden. He suddenly wakes, grasps his mattock, and with redoubled energy attacks the ground. The farmers return about this time to enjoy again the sight of lazy Brown working like a madman. Suddenly Brown's mattock strikes something hard in the ground, and to the amazement and chagrin of his friends and the unbounded joy of himself and his wife he brings forth an old treasure chest filled to overflowing with gold, jewels and silver plate.

The comedy in this picture consists in the splendid characterization of all the parts, and particularly that of "Lazy Farmer Brown." It is replete with fun, and the climax causes a double laugh in the manner in which the point is turned against the practical jokers. This film cannot fail to score wherever it is shown.

LUBIN NOTES.

Several strong comedies are among the early releases of the Lubin company. One of these is a western comedy that sounds a new note and another, even funnier, deals with a man who refuses to take his wife around with him because she is no sport. There is a life and dash to the Lubin comedies that keep them in demand.

Another interesting release pending is an Indian story written by a former Indian Agent who knows the red man intimately and another strong story by a well known magazine writer will be presented early in August.

Last week three of the Lubin directors were working in the new studio at the same time, employing from three to five sets each and yet there was plenty of room to spare under the big glass roof. The spacious studio greatly facilitates production and at the same time the new work is even better from a photographic point of view than the recent splendid productions.

Something of a record was made the other day when one of the Lubin players suggested the plot for a comedy story about noon. The idea was developed and the first scenes made within two hours. It was intended to make it a short release but it worked out so well that it will appear as a full reel comedy crowded with fun.

The Step Daughter and Wife's Mamma are the Lubin releases for the week of July 25th, the Step Daughter being released on that date and the comedy on the 28th. Like all the Lubin comedies this Mother-in-law story has a distinct touch of originality, for after doing his best to drive his wife's mother away by such devices as scuttling the boat in which he takes her rowing, the husband learns that she wanted to go home but was staying on because he tried too hard to entertain her. It gives new humor to the Mother-in-law idea.

BIRMINGHAM AIRDOME OPENS.

The New Airdome, the latest place of amusement to be opened in Birmingham, Ala., is doing a great business these hot, sultry days. Every evening the place is crowded and the motion pictures seem to be the big source of attraction. These pictures, which are of the latest reels, are changed daily, thus giving the patrons something new all the time.

THE DIGS OF THE DAILY PRESS.

Nicholas Young, dramatic editor of the Boston American, has a department in his page of dramatic criticism devoted to the criticism and comment of moving pictures. Mr. Young, who is writing with commendable serious intent, is one of the first newspaper writers to make this venture, we believe, and he is to be thanked a thousand times by the moving picture interests of the country for starting something which will undoubtedly be copied by other of the metropolitan dailies in due time. Mr. Young is an authoritative writer on matters pertaining to the stage, to the drama and music and his first writings on things pertaining to moving pictures from the theatre-goers' viewpoint, are most interesting.

That the press is awakening to an appreciation of the true value of the moving picture is exemplified in occasional paragraphic comment on some feature news film, and it is evident, too, the moving picture theatre as a place affording really high class entertainment, is receiving acknowledgment, despite the occasional quips and digs which, however, are no longer malicious.

As an instance the last year's baseball film of the Essanay company shown at the Majestic theatre in Chicago, a week after the decisive game, was commented upon by the dramatic writer for the Tribune in terms most complimentary. "The Majestic's versions of the game," the Tribune writer wrote, "has much more action than the real thing, inasmuch as the art of the kinodrome genius despises anything so conventional as a base on balls, depicting nothing less than a thrilling two-bagger, or a desperate slide for home. Those who have not yet had a sufficiency of the sport will be entertained by this counterfeit for it is clear and exciting and should repay the patience necessary to sit through the preceding numbers of the bill."

Often we see an editorial comment in brief paragraphs, sometimes humorous, but they are seldom of a malicious tenor. Here are a few which recently appeared: "Jack Johnson should have moving pictures of himself changing managers."

"There ought to be moving pictures of Uncle Joe Cannon in his training camp. He says he's coming back into shape."

A hundred of these little quips appear every day.

Another Chicago writer for the press tells a news story in the form of a moving picture scenario: The caption is:

Chase for Alleged Robber Ends in Chinese Restaurant Climax.

"Absurd situations, such as have made the patrons of moving-picture theatres rock themselves with laughter, were outdone in real life today, in an early morning chase by a policeman after an alleged pickpocket. Scan the outline of the adventure as subjoined and see if you cannot, with the use of imagination, invest it with the frolicsome antics in which it would be decked out on a moving picture film, thus enpoying the delight of a show without having to pay the five-cent price of admission.

"Picture Number 1: Charles Cleary, 725 Milwaukee avenue, a young man is riding to his work about 5 a. m., on a Milwaukee ave. car. At Dearborn and Randolph streets, he feels his watch deftly removed from his pocket and sees a man leap from the car and run. With violent gestures, Cleary, accuses the fugitive and then gives chase.

"Picture Number 2: The crowd pursuing a fleeing man in a moving picture gains additional numbers at every stride, so Policeman William Liebecke, of the Central station, and then one after another of several pedestrians joined in chasing the runner, South in Dearborn street. Casting a hasty glance over his shoulder, the latter dodges into an alley."

And so on.

During the Brown Bribery trial in Chicago, when the jury had been out two or three days, a newspaper writer, gave an imaginative description of a scene in the jury room in good scenario form.

"Picture," he writes, "a long table in a small room in which are twelve perspiring men, their faces showing the terrific strain they have suffered because of one obstinate juror, the man at the end of the table, with whom one or two are hopelessly arguing. Others are sleeping, some playing cards. But the man at the end of the table, his features firmly set, and the glint of a battle in his eye, shakes his head."

The daily press is becoming to look more kindly upon the moving picture, and though it's comments sometime show merely a kindly tolerance, it certainly has come to recognize that the moving picture is a potent force and worthy of serious comment.

LICENSE CHIEF FAVORS MOTION PICTURES.

After a thorough investigation of the motion picture theatres, in New York city, Francis V. S. Oliver, Chief of the Bureau of Licenses, comes forward with the statement that he is in favor of good, clean motion picture shows. He declares that clean shows are good things and carry with them none of the great evils that clergymen and others would have the people think.

This bureau is under the personal supervision of Mayor Gaynor, and before any license is issued "His Honor," is consulted; also, before such licenses are granted the Mayor knows some about what kind of house is to be established.

While the Mayor and the Chief are liberal, woe! be the man who takes advantage and tries to do things that are unfair.

JACOBS' JAPANESE GARDENS

Picture Theatre Man Meets Competition With Summer Accommodations

Arthur D. Jacobs, president of the Exhibitors' Advertising and Specialty Company, advisors on "How to Get the Money for Motion Picture Theatres" has taken some of his own medicine. In other words he is taking his own advice on how to rake in the nickels during the hot summer months when two or three open air theatres have opened in opposition to his Bronx Theatre, Wendover and Park avenues, New York City.

The Bronx is a magnificent picture theatre, up-to-date in every respect, but how could it be expected to draw the crowd when nearby were several partial enclosures that allowed patrons freer contact with the ozone?

Could "Brother Jacobs" afford to allow his own theatre to lose money—he an advisor on "how to get the money?" Never!

Directly behind the Bronx Theatre and extending behind most of the stores facing on Wendover avenue is an open space measuring 55 x 150 feet. But it does not open on Wendover avenue, the busy, brilliant street in that section of the Bronx; its only street opening is on Park avenue, the side street. Mr. Jacobs advertises his airdome on Wendoved avenue and receives patrons at the entrance to his winter theatre, through which they pass to reach the open. In this manner Mr. Jacobs' receipts have been boosted to more than their usual amount and he has the satisfaction of retaining his old patrons, of outdoing his competitors and of proving to his friends that there is more truth than fiction in his claim of the ability to advise on "how to get the money."

The airdome, decorated with flags and lanterns,, is termed Jacobs Japanese Gardens. The seating capacity is 1,000. In the gardens refreshments of all kinds may be purchased so that a visit to the place is a picnic to children. Mr. Jacobs runs pictures only, eliminating the cheap vaudeville. His program consists of five reels of licensed pictures and two illustrated songs. The price of admission is 5 cents.

SUMMER THEATRE FOR NEW BRUNSWICK.

An amusement promoter from Union Hill, N. J., was in New Brunswick, a few days ago negotiating for the erection of an up-to-date airdome to be built on George street. As this is the principal street in the city, it is expected that the business men of the city would demand only a first-class place.

The promoter has already consulted Contractor George B. Rule regarding the cost of such a place and it is expected the same will be made public within the next two or three weeks. The promoter has also consulted with Benjamin Suydam regarding the bill posting and advertising.

Look on this Picture and on This.

Ho ye! Ho ye! Everyone that can enjoy a good laugh at the risible contrast between two pictures, come this way!

I could never have believed it of my friend, Morris Fleckles, that he could have kept hidden so long a hidden spring of humor—nay a gusher. Now it has spouted forth with a reckless abandon that mounts to the empyrean, and in its fall fairly deluges the Laemmle crowd and revives the grim specter of the "Roosevelt in Africa" fake. How could you do it, friend Fleckles! How could you do it? And Carl away in Europe, too?

I am moved, risibly moved, to give the foregoing introduction to the narration of an incident of recent happening, in which my friend Fleckles figures in new roles, those of moving picture censor and reformer. His soul is grieved nigh unto death because the "independents" have been shut out from participation in the profits of the pictures of the recent Reno "argument." And his inmost soul is still more sorely chastened by the recollection that the licensed people have cornered all of the aforesaid profits. The shock has nearly killed Morris, and in a neurasthenic and tearfully woe-begone condition, over which he has no control, he has become a reformer and a picture censor. Moreover, he has been interviewed. He has gone and said it, and it is in print. So my friend, Morris Fleckles, in the roles referred to, is the first picture that I request the reader to look upon.

The interview appeared in the American of Saturday, July 9. Appended are the heading, the preface and the Flecklean dissertation on the ethics of pugilism:

MOVING PICTURE MEN OPPOSE.

Morris Fleckles, manager for the Carl Laemmle Motion Picture Company, 194 Lake street, an independent concern, declared the moving picture men generally would welcome any public move against the exhibition of these pictures.

"THE MOVING PICTURE BUSINESS IS LEGITIMATE," HE SAID. "THE MEN HAVING MOST AT STAKE IN IT ARE INTERESTED IN KEEPING IT CLEAN. THERE ARE MANY THOUSANDS OF MOTION ATTRACTIONS, SO-CALLED, WHICH ARE NOT PHOTOGRAPHED FOR EXHIBITION BECAUSE THE MEN IN CHARGE OF THIS ENTERPRISE REALIZE THEIR RESPONSIBILITIES TO THE PUBLIC AND ARE DOING THEIR LEVEL BEST TO KEEP THE SHOWS CLEAN AND OF A HEALTHY MORAL TONE. I DO NOT THINK THE FIGHT PICTURES CAN BE CONSIDERED EDUCATIONAL OR ELEVATING FROM ANY POSSIBLE POINT OF VIEW. I AM INTERESTED IN GIVING TO THE PUBLIC THAT CLASS OF ENTERTAINMENT WHICH IS APPROVED BY A MAJORITY OF THE PUBLIC. I DO NOT THINK ANY GOOD CAN COME TO THE ENTERPRISE BY DEPARTING FROM THIS RULE TO REAP A CHEAP HARVEST OVER THE SHOWING OF THESE FIGHT FILMS."

Regretfully, we must leave the Fleckles picture and view another. This picture is described in a dispatch from New York, which appeared in the Sunday "Examiner," July 10. The main heading and the article are given herewith:

BOGUS FIGHT FILMS SHOWN IN NEW YORK.

NEW YORK, JULY 9.—THE PUBLIC WAS DELUDED TO-NIGHT IN ITS FIRST EFFORT TO SEE MOVING PICTURES OF THE JEFFRIES-JOHNSON FIGHT. THE PICTURES, WHICH WERE ADVERISED TO BE A REPRODUCTION OF THE BATTLE AT RENO, WERE STOPPED ABRUPTLY WITH THE ADMISSION THAT THEY WERE PALPABLE COUNTERFEITS. THE PICTURES SHOWED JOE JEANNETTE AND SANDY FERGUSON, TWO SECOND-RATE PUGILISTS.

ALTHOUGH WILLIAM MORRIS, THE VAUDEVILLE MANAGER, PERSONALLY INTERRUPTED THE PERFORMANCE AND STOPPED THE MOVING PICTURE MACHINE DURING THE FIRST ROUND OF THE "EXHIBITION," THE SPECTATORS WERE UNPLEASANT IN MANNER AND FRANK IN COMMENT.

"WE WERE BUNKED, FAKED, MISLED—ANYTHING YOU CARE TO CALL IT—AND SHALL SUE THE EMPIRE FILM SERVICE COMPANY, FROM WHOM WE BOUGHT THE PICTURES," SAID MR. MORRIS. " I TRUST THE PUBLIC WILL UNDERSTAND THAT WE ACTED IN GOOD FAITH IN THE TRANSACTION."

DISORDER FOLLOWED THE ATTEMPT TO SHOW THE BOGUS PICTURES. A PRELIMINARY SCENE SHOWED A PRIZE RING, INTO WHICH LEAPED A WHITE MAN IN FIGHTING COSTUME AS THE FIRST PRINCIPAL TO ARRIVE. THIS FIGHTER WORE MORE HAIR ON HIS HEAD, HOWEVER, THAN ANY PICTURES EVER SHOWED JEFFRIES TO HAVE. BUT AS SOME SPECTATOR HAPPENED TO NOTICE AND COMMENT UPON IT, ANOTHER LET OUT A WHOOP AND THE DECLARATION THAT THE FIGHT RETURNS FROM RENO STATED THAT JOHNSON WAS THE FIRST TO ENTER THE RING.

"JOHNSON LOOKS LIKE WELTER."

JUST THEN THE PICTURES SHOWED A COLORED FIGHTER LEAPING INTO THE RING.

"WHO IS THAT WELTER?" SHOUTED A MAN.

"WHY, THAT'S JEANNETTE, AND THE OTHER IS SANDY FERGUSON," YELLED SOME ONE IN REPLY.

THERE WAS A LOUD MURMUR AROUND THE ROOF BY THIS TIME, WHICH SWELLED TO A ROAR WHEN THE TWO MEN STOOD UP AND THE WHITE RUSHED ACROSS THE RING AND GRASPED THE BLACK FIGHTER BY THE HAND.

"WHY, THEY DIDN'T SHAKE HANDS IN THE RENO FIGHT AT ALL," FAIRLY SCREAMED SOMEONE.

ABOUT THIRTY SECONDS OF THE FIRST ROUND HAD BEEN SHOWN, WHEN WILLIAM MORRIS STEPPED FROM THE WINGS AND SHOUTED TO THE OPERATOR OF THE MACHINE:

"HERE, STOP THAT MACHINE. WE HAVE HAD ENOUGH OF THIS. IT IS A FAKE."

AFTERWARD MR. MORRIS SAID:

"I DO NOT KNOW JOHNSON, BUT I DO KNOW JEFFRIES, AND THAT WAS NOT A PICTURE OF JEFFRIES. GENERAL MANAGER BLOOM MADE THE CONTRACT. SEE HIM."

"I AM GOING TO SUE PRESIDENT KESSEL OF THE EMPIRE FILM SERVICE COMPANY," ANNOUNCED BLOOM LATER. "THEY SOLD US THE PICTURES AND WE BOUGHT THEM IN GOOD FAITH."

Have you got the name right, my interested reader?—President Kessel of the Empire Film Service Company. Another "independent" who "recognizes his responsibility to the public" and who is "doing his level best to keep the shows clean and of a healthy moral tone." Mr. Kessel is evidently another "independent," whose heart beats like my friend Fleckles' organ, in being "interested in giving to the public that class of entertainment which is approved by a majority of the public."

But how does big-brained William Morris stomach the deception—the man who has always aimed at giving his patrons the best for their money? Mr. Morris gives them the best in vaudeville. Why does he select the worst in moving pictures? Is it a resort to extremes. in order to create contrasts?

Still Another Picture.

But there is still another picture to complete the "independent" gallery of artful dodgers.

In this city, Thursday, July 7, certain "independents" had everything arranged for a fake of the Reno fight in one of the ball parks. The promoters engaged Klondike (a colored second rater) and Monty Cutler, another second rate fighter, to represent Johnson and Jeffries, respectively. The police got wind of the affair and speedily put an end to the bout and the pictures. Nothing daunted, the promoters announced that they would go outside the city limits and perpetrate the fraud.

The leopard cannot change his spots, and how can it be expected that the "independent" can change, or is willing to change his ear marks?

Ho For Detroit!

The executive committee of the F. S. A. held short morning and evening sessions at the Congress Hotel, this city, Thursday, July 7, all the officers of the organization being present, excepting Percy Waters, now General Manager of the General Film Co.

The following changes have been made in the former official roster: O. T. Crawford, elected vice-president in place of Wm. A. Steiner; J. R. Frueler, secretary, to succeed Herbert C. Miles; Robert Lieber, treasurer; Richard Rowland, of the Pittsburg Calcium Light & Film Service, executive committeeman, and E. Mandelbaum, committeeman, in place of Frank Howard, formerly of the Howard Film Exchange of Boston. The latter resigned, owing to the fact that he has gone out of the film business since selling his interests to the General Film Co. Al. J. Gilligham retains his position as president of the association.

The Association will meet in Detroit, July 21 and 23 inclusive, the official headquarters being the Ponchartrain Hotel. Visitors are reminded that they must send in reservations, at least one week in advance, either to J. R. Frueler of the Western Film Exchange, Milwaukee, or to Al. J. Gilligham of the National Vaudette Exchange, Detroit. Much inconvenience and worry will be avoided by paying careful attention to this advice, as nothing tends to mar the pleasure of a visit to a strange city more than the failure to secure comfortable and convenient quarters.

Secretary Frueler requests me to state that, owing to the fact the lists, minutes, etc., in the hands of the former secretary, Herbert C. Miles, were not turned over to him, he may have overlooked some of the representatives of licensed manufacturers, the agents of supply houses, and the representatives of licensed machines, when sending out invitations to attend. He desires to invite all of these gentlemen, whether they have received written invitations or not, and he hopes to welcome a complete representation at the Detroit gathering.

As the F. S. A. has arranged this meeting more for social diversion than for any other purpose, every visitor is assured of a most enjoyable time, and it is the general desire of members of the Association to have present as many as possible of the representatives of the interests mentioned. From all indications the Detroit meeting will set a record mark for attendance, as the beautiful city on the river and lake is one of the fairest spots in Uncle Sam's domain.

K. O. Co.'s Rental Forces Join General Film Company's.

Sunday, July 10, was busily occupied in transferring the rental department of the K. O. Co. to the offices of the General Film Company at 85 Dearborn street, this city. Manager F. C. Aiken has put in two strenuous weeks preparing for the consolidation of the forces, and everything is already running as smoothly as if on ball bearing.

Mr. Aiken has been badly handicapped by the illness of W. R. Scates, his former manager, but he drew largely on the small hours of the morning and has pulled through admirably. Mr. Scates made his first appearance in the office, since his illness, Monday, July 11, and will soon have regained his oldtime form.

APPROVED THEATRE LIGHTING PLAN.

Mr. A. R. Boone, of the Theatre Film Supply Co., Birmingham, Ala., inspected the lighting plan at Driscoll's Nickoland, Bronx, during a recent visit in New York, and expressed himself greatly pleased with the results obtained through the use of the Simpson Solar Screen and the X-Ray reflectors. The great saving of lighting current interested Mr. Boone fully as much as the sharp picture on the screen. He expressed a determination to do some experimenting with these factors in the improvement of the picture theatre.

BILKALEM LOOSE AGAIN.

Business is said to be very good for this time of the year.

Columbus.

"Under the guidance of our old friend Melchoir of the Ohio Film Exchange I visited a number of local picture theatres and had the pleasure of meeting some of the managers in charge.

"The Exhibit Theatre located on High street is owned and managed by Mr. Max Stern. Mr. Fred. Harmon is the able assistant manager. This theatre has a seating capacity of 320, runs two reels of first run pictures making a daily change. Pictures and songs constitute the entire entertainment. Price of admission is 5 cents. Mr. Stern has comprehensive ideas of the motion picture business and has made a pronounced success in the operation of this clean and well ventilated theatre. He told me that Kalem pictures always brought him good money.

"The Lyric Theatre is owned and managed by Mr. C. H. Brocket. It has a seating capacity of 320 and will be enlarged this summer to 500. It runs pictures only and charges 5 cents admission. Originally Mr. Brocket tried vaudeville, but cut it out. He is doing an excellent business, he states, equal to the regular winter business. He uses one reel of first run pictures and one reel of commercial.

"The Unique Theatre is owned by Patchopolas & Mandras. It has a seating capacity of about 200, runs pictures only and charges 5 cents admission. Both of the owners assured me that business was really excellent for this time of the year.

"The Palace Theatre is owned and managed by Mr. Richard Pugh. This house cost $15,000 to erect, runs pictures only, has a seating capacity of 400 and charges 5 cents admission. Mr. Pugh, like many other picture theatre managers, tried vaudeville, but finally discontinued it. He runs two reels of pictures, about three weeks old. Business is said to be good.

"The Pastime Theatre is managed by its owner, Mr. Ferguson. It has a seating capacity of about 200 and charges 5 cents admission. It is located in the residence section of the city. He uses two reels of pictures about four weeks old. Business was good.

"The Arch City Theatre is owned and managed by Spring & Burroughs. It is located in the east end of town and has a seating capacity of about 200. The Arch City is doing a fine business at 5 cents admission. Runs two reels of pictures about two weeks old.

"The Goodale Theatre is managed by Mr. Fred. Hoover the owner and seats about 150, charges 5 cents admission. Business is good for this time of the year.

"The Grand Theatre has a seating capacity of about 900 runs pictures and vaudeville. Mr. Geo. Miller is the manager. The Grand is doing a good business at 5, 10 and 15 cents. It runs three reels of pictures about two weeks old.

"The Victoria, Robert Young owner and manager has a seating capacity of about 900, runs pictures and vaudeville at 5 and 10 cents. Business is good.

"The Colonial Theatre is closed, also the Southern. Both of these houses were running vaudeville and pictures, but found the combination did not pay, therefore closed up for the summer season.

SPOOR AND JONES GET ILLINOIS.

Geo. K. Spoor, of Essanay and Aaron Jones, of the firm of Jones, Linick & Schaefer, Chicago exhibitors, have taken the exhibition rights of the Johnson-Jeffries pictures for Chicago and the state of Illinois. The consideration was $50,000. The first exhibition of the pictures will be given Saturday, July 16, at Haymarket theatre and another house down town not named as yet. The exhibition will commence at 11 A. M., and continue till 11 P. M.—McQuade.

MAYORS WHO LIKE PICTURES.

Among the number of city officials who really enjoy the best there is in the motion picture field, as well as one who keeps up with current events, is Mayor Clayton, of St. Joseph, Mo.

While the St. Joseph executive, can't be put down as a sport, nevertheless he believes in the art of self-defence and enjoys seeing a good boxing bout. So long, then, as "His Honor," sees no fear of race rioting, he sees no harm in allowing the pictures to be shown.

Mayor George Gonzales, of Hoboken, N. J., is another liberal minded executive, who sees no harm in allowing the pictures to be shown in the "Little Germany of America." He claims, if there was more good boxing, there would be less bad shooting. Perhaps he's right.

Synopsis of Production Issued by the Leading Song and Novelty Slide Makers.

DE WITT C. WHEELER.

"IN MY GARDEN."—Song by Clare Kummer; published by J. H. Remick & Co. Miss Kummer, the composer of "Dearie," can always be depended upon to produce a hit, and "In My Garden" is no exception. The slides are an excellent example of an artist's work, for only an artist could discover scenes such as reproduced so beautifully in this set. Not only are the scenes beautiful in themselves, but are colored so strikingly as to make them twice as impressive. A good song, with a splendid set of slides.

"SOMETIME IN AFTER YEARS."—Words by Francis Glen Brown; music by Walter Eben Miles; published by J. H. Remick & Co. A sentimental love song on the reminiscent order and of a higher class than the average ballad. A song really worth hearing. The slides are of the usual high order produced by the Wheeler house, and aptly illustrates the lyrics, with enticing models in beautiful surrounding scenes, which Wheeler scours the country to obtain.

"OH, YOU SPEARMINT KIDDO WITH THE WRIGLEY EYES."—Guess that's going some. It takes William Jerome to write the clever lyrics. When it comes to "Tutti Frutti beauty" and "peptonized kisses," he's right there with the sticky stuff. Jean Schwartz is there with the right music dope, too. Published by Jerome H. Remick. You all know what Wheeler does when he gets hold of a funny song like the "Spearmint Kiddo." He does it up right and makes a set of slides that make a hit. This one will.

"TO-NIGHT, SWEETHEART, TO-NIGHT."—Lyric and music by Evelyn Bloom; published by Jerome H. Remick, New York. A sentimental love ballad, set to waltz music. Illustrations by Wheeler show that the improvement in song slides still continues. Each slide contains, besides good posing, a picked background of remarkable distinction. This gives the slide a scenic value, as well as illustrative. The set is a good one from every standpoint.

"DREAMING OF YOU."—Poem by Tell Taylor; music by J. M. Wilcockson; published by Wilcockson Music Co., Hammond, Ind. One of the "dreamy" songs which, when of a high order, always please, as this one is sure to do. The waltz melody of the chorus is in a beautiful theme and captivating in the extreme. The slides are really remarkable for their beauty. They illustrate not only the song, but illustrate what a beautiful country this is and what picturesque spots there are in it, if one only has the artistic eye to find them.

"I WANT SOME ONE TO FLIRT WITH ME."—Words by Sterling and Costello; music by Albert Von Hilzer; published by York Music Co., New York. Sterling and Costello, both individually and combined, always produce good lyrics, and this song is no exception. The music by Albert Von Tilzer has made this song a hit, and one hears it everywhere. Slides that suit the lyrics to the letter are produced in Wheeler's usual style, including several novelties.

"LOVE KEEPS THE WHOLE WORLD YOUNG."—Music by Will L. Becker; words by Saul M. Aronson; published by M. Witmark & Sons, New York. A waltz ballad of the usual high order published by this house. Illustrations for this song surpass anything yet turned out by Mr. Wheeler. There are not only more novelties, but novelties of a new order that have never before been seen in a song slide. The first good point about the set is that it illustrates the lyrics perfectly. Secondly, much of the scenery was obtained on one of Mr. Wheeler's trips out West; if you don't know what a Colorado sunset is, see this. Thirdly and lastly, the posing is excellent, and the coloring rich, true to nature and very pleasing.

SCOTT & VAN ALTENA.

"HIDE FROM THE LIGHT OF THE MOON."—Words by Dave Clark; music by Sally Ginsberg; published by Ted Snyder Co. A song with a pretty tune and dealing with a pair of lovers, the Park and the romantic moon. The illustrations show beautiful moonlight views, with models full of life and expression. Novel effects abound, and the set, on the whole, is an attractive one.

"SOME DAY WE'LL BE HAPPY."—Words by John Lyle; music by George E. Lyle; published by Consolidated Music Supply Co., Chicago. A sentimental ballad, with illustrations representing beautiful rural scenes. In the first half of the song the couple are school children, while in the second part they meet again after a number of years. The views in this set are exceptionally fine, with artistic coloring, beautiful floral and novel effects, and should appeal to thos ewho admire the rustic in nature.

"HONEY, I WILL LONG FOR YOU."—Words by Arthur Longbrake; music by Ed. Edwards; published by Joseph Morris Co. An exceptionally good song, with a Southern atmosphere, and beautifully illustrated in true Scott and Van Altena style. A pleasing variety of scenes delight the eye, and charming coloring make the set a very attractive one. "Quality," the keynote of this firm, is ever present in all their work.

"MY MORNING ROSE."—Words by Arthur Longbrake; music by Ed. Edwards; published by the Joseph Morris Co., New York. An Indian song of great merit, for which Scott & Van Altena have made illustrations posed for in rich native Indian costume. The costumes, camp fires, etc., give an excellent opportunity for fine coloring that has not been lost to the manufacturers. The woods, where Indians lived, play a large part in this set, as do also many novelties—clever ideas by Scott & Van Altena.

"YIDDLE ON YOUR FIDDLE, PLAY SOME RAGTIME."—There is hardly a person who has not heard this great ragtime song hit of Irving Berlin's; published by Ted Snyder Co., New York. Its popularity, like a gale of wind, has traveled from one end of the continent to the other, casting its currents in every direction. Its contagious rythm affects everyone, creating a hilarious feeling. This feeling is portrayed humorously in a set of illustrations which contain what we are all glad to see when appropriate—a little "rough house."

"SOMEBODY ELSE; IT'S ALWAYS SOMEBODY ELSE."—A pathetic little love ballad set to excellent music by Geo. W. Meyer; words by Jack Drislane; published by F. B. Haviland, New York. A set of slides have been produced for this song that not only contain a more than usual number of the Scott & Van Altena novelties, but are posed for by unusually handsome models in picturesque places, and are colored with good taste by some one with a thorough knowledge of the subject. It is a pleasure to look at this set.

"HELLO, MISS LIBERTY."—March song, with music by Fred. Fischer; published by the Fred. Fischer Music Publishing Co., New York. Words by Thomas J. Gray tell of how Americans, after they have traveled over the various countries abroad, are glad to see their own land again. The slides include many scenes of European countries that are both interesting and instructive.

"BLAZE OF GLORY."—A fine march song by Abe Holzman; published by Leo. Feist. The illustrations are striking scenes; portraying the glories of the good old U. S. A.; deeds which we have done and of which are are justly proud. Striking novel effects, with fine photographic quality and coloring, make this a set which all will surely admire.

"THE SONG THAT FINDS AN ECHO IN MY HEART."—Words by Richard Buch; music by Theo. Morse; published by Theo. Morse Music Co. A sentimental ballad, with beautiful illustrations. There keeps passing through the mind of the youth the strains of that old-time air, "O, My Darling Nellie Gray," recalling his Southern home and friends. Fine models, charming settings, beautiful coloring, with the usual novelties, make this a very fine set.

ALFRED L. SIMPSON.

"DEAR OLD COMRADE."—Words by Bartley Costello; music by J. B. Mullen. Mr. Mullen is the composer of "Two Little Girls Loved One Little Boy," "The Man Behind," and many other well-known hits. The slides are made by Simpson, and the subjects are well chosen, and the posing extremely artistic. The coloring is exquisite.

"WHEN."—Words by Ida L. Simpson; music by Alfred L. Simpson, who is also the composer of Billy Scanlon's world-famous lullaby, "Peek-a-Boo." As Mr. Simpson is the composer of the above song, he has let himself out on the slides, sparing neither time nor expense to make them perfect, as far as coloring and good photography can do. The song is making a big hit already.

"STAR OF MY DREAMS, SHINE ON."—Lyric by Arthur J. Lamb; music by John T. Hall. These two well-known composers need no introduction to music lovers, as they are known wherever songs are sung. This new ballad is even better than their average. Simpson has made a great set of slides, which must be seen to be appreciated. Each slide is a gem of art, and the coloring is true to nature. Charles K. Harris is the publisher of this charming ballad.

"WHERE THE IVY'S CLINGING, DEARIE, ROUND AN OLD OAK TREE."—Words by Robert Roden; music by J. Fred Helf. Another masterpiece by the authors of "When You Know You're Not Forgotten by the Girl You Can't Forget," "Colleen Bawn," "Meet Me, Sweet Kathleen, in Honeysuckle Time," etc. Simpson has made a very beautiful set of slides in true Southern settings, that do what some slides do not—really illustrate the song and convey the sentimental spirit intended by the author. J. Fred Helf is the publisher of this coming hit ballad.

"NORAH McNAMARA."—Words and music of this dainty ballad are by Fiske O'Hara, who has made a big hit in the romantic Irish drama, "Dion O Dare." The melody has the true Irish lilt, and is quite out of the ordinary. The slides Simpson has made are in typical Irish surroundings; the models are good. One picture, especially, is a masterpiece indeed. The dainty Irish lassie is very winsome. Shapiro is the publisher.

"WHEN YOU AND I WERE YOUNG, MAGGIE."—This is the old-time ballad, so well loved by our mothers, with a new arrangement by the well-known and up-to-date composer, Eugene Platzmann. published by Shapiro. This well-known ballad needs no description. The slides Simpson has made are artistic.

"BABY FACE, MY BABY FACE."—Words and music by Melville J. Gidion, author of the "Yankiana Rag." Published by Chas. I. Davis, Cleveland, O. This is a very beautiful plantation song, full of love and sentiment, and touches the heart of the observer. It is now making a hit wherever it is being sung. The slides for this song are Simpson's best and carry out in perfect detail the story.

"JUST BECAUSE YOU'RE A POOR LITTLE GIRL."—Words by Ed. Gardenier; music by Gus Edwards. In this exquisite ballad, these two well-known composers have done justice to a very pleasing theme. This is the story of a poor little tot who is loved by a rich boy. The slides are truly beautiful, and we can only say that this song will make as big a hit as the well-known "Only Me."

"ALL I ASK IS LOVE."—Words by Edgar Selden; music by Herbert Ingraham. A great love song. Published by Shapiro, and is now making a big hit everywhere. The slides for this surpass anything that Simpson has done of late and reflect great credit on his general musical and theatrical knowledge.

"MR. JOHNSON, GOOD NIGHT."—A comedy coon song, with the story of how a fashionable colored lady turns down a whitewash man. Words by Andrew Sterling; music by Herbert Ingraham, the author of the celebrated song, "Roses Bring Dreams of You." Published by Shapiro. The slides for this song are posed by colored models, and bring out in great detail the humor intended by the author, and is a diversion from the usual love ballad. It is very funny and entertaining.

NEW STAR THEATRE CLOSES.

After a most successful motion picture season, the New Star Theatre, Milwaukee, Wis., closed for repairs on July 12. The house will be opened for the regular season which begins some time about the middle of August.

The management has not made any arrangements to use pictures during the coming season although they proved a big money maker. The New Star is one of the best known and best equipped houses in Milwaukee and is known for the clean performances the management puts on.

BIG BILL AT MUSIC HALL.

Two Edison, one Vitagraph and one Urban-Eclipse pictures were enough to keep the big Music Hall, at Portsmouth, N. H., filled all last week with patrons. The Edison films: "A Tale of Two Coats" and "Equal to Emergency" keep the big audience laughing all the time. The Vitagraph drama, "A Victim of Fate," was such as to keep up the interest throughout and at the end the audience applauded the picture heartily.

"St. Paul and the Centurion," the Bibical picture that has won so much praise for the Urban-Eclipse actors, was also watched with much interest. No matter how much comedy an audience demands, such pictures pertaining to well known Bible subjects are always looked on with much interest and admiration.

PICTURES IN RESTAURANTS.

The Londoners are having the motion pictures not only all day, but in the evenings in the restaurants while they dine. The custom was introduced by the Princess restaurant, and is expected to spread. There is music, and the pictures pass while the guests enjoy the different courses brought by the waiters.

TWO NEW PICTURE THEATRES.

Claus Schaub, proprietor of the "It" picture show on Sherman avenue, Omaha, Neb., has incorporated his proposition and has chosen a site and will build two new picture theatres, to be used exclusively for pictures. About $12,000 will be expended on the buildings.

ROSENBERG WORKS FAKE

Advertised "Fight Pictures" and Gave Lantern Views—Crowd Wanted to Wreck Theatre

A crowd of men and boys went to the Savoy Theatre, New York City, Monday night last week thinking they were going to see motion pictures of the Reno fight because it was advertised that Johnson-Jeffries fight pictures would be shown for the first time in New York.

When pictures of the ordinary lantern slide variety were thrown upon the screen the spectators jumped up and cried "fake."

Manager Jerome Rosenberg tried to talk, but when he heard some one say "Pull him off the stage" he didn't wait to be pulled. "We want our money back" shouted the crowd as it made for the box office in the lobby.

Mr. Rosenberg telephoned for the police who soon arrived upon the scene and got the crowd in line so that the disappointed ones could get back the quarters they had paid to see the show.

That same night the sign in front of the theatre was changed to "Johnson-Jeffries fight pictures, taken by Robert Edgren at Reno ringside, July 4. Fifty slides. These are not moving or motion pictures. And at that about 500 persons paid to go in.

A FLASH OF LIGHT.

RELEASED JULY 18TH, 1910.

A FLASH OF LIGHT

The Difference Between Sincere Affection and Capricious Infatuation

Most unique is the plot of this Biograph Film story. It shows how a young chemist became infatuated with the youngest of two sisters despite the sincere love of the eldest for him. The young sister's pretty face and attractive personality intoxicated him to such a degree that he fancied she loved him. While working in his laboratory there is an explosion which apparently destroys his sight and hearing, rendering him for the time helpless. This helplessness bores the young wife, and she eagerly accepts diversion. She finally decides to leave him and go on the stage. She leaves a letter to this effect and her wedding ring on the table. This the sister finds and wears to deceive the poor husband until he shall have passed his affliction. The operation proves a success, and the sister hurries to bring the wife back before the bandage is taken off his eyes. This is so that he may never realize the truth. The removal of the bandage takes place in a darkened room, and as the young husband steps towards his wife, she recoils guiltily. In doing so, she clutches at the heavy portieres covering the window. Down they come, letting in a vivid shaft of light, which striking his sensitive eyes causes now incurable blindness.

Approximate Length, 998 Feet.

RELEASED JULY 21ST, 1910.

AS THE BELLS RANG OUT

The daughter of a juggler in high finance is betrothed to a wealthy young broker. Just as the wedding is to take place the financier receives a surprise in the way of an arrest for his connection with a crooked banking deal. The detectives, however, allow the ceremony to proceed, and keep his daughter and the guests ignorant of their presence. The ceremony over, the young couple start off on their honeymoon while the father is carried off to prison. Approximate Length, 457 Feet.

AS THE BELLS RANG OUT.

SERIOUS SIXTEEN

A delightful little comedy of love's young dream. The lovers have a tiff and the girl is determined to give up the world and join the Salvation Army. The young man also through pique decides to become a friar. The extent of their avowals is the purchase of the appropriate costumes of the costumers. However, the world's lure is too strong and they soon patch up matters. Approximate Length, 535 Feet.

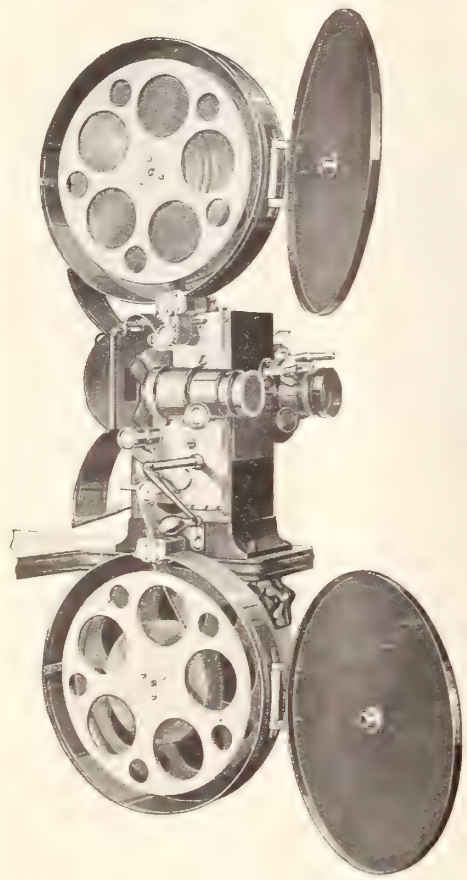
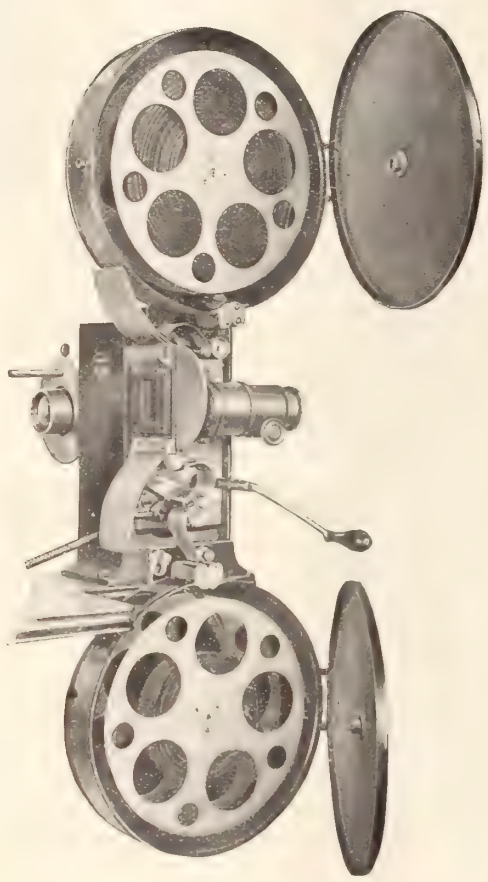
THE EDENGRAPH

A MOTION PICTURE MACHINE



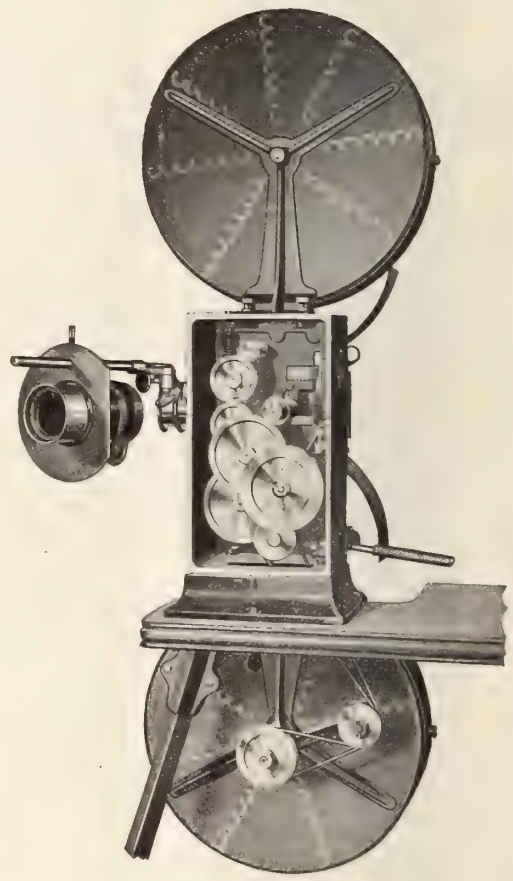
The illustration above shows in detail the construction of the mechanism and the manner of threading the film, which together with the sprockets and the revolving shutter forms the only exposed part.

Illustration below shows a view of the mechanism. Note in particular the construction of the Film Gate, which is hinged at the bottom, placing an even tension on both perforated edges of the film.



Dustproof. Flickerless. Built to outwear all other machines

This illustration shows a rear view of the mechanism with the door removed. All gears are made from phosphor-bronze and steel, the most frictionless combination of known metals.



The many superior features are fully enumerated and described in a handsomely illustrated catalogue which will be mailed on request.

CASUAL COMMENT

WHAT'S in a name? One hundred dollars, says Essanay, if it is a good one-word name for a "motion picture show." It's a safe bet that the Essanay people will get a good run for their money; also, that they will get a bunch of names not in Webster's Unabridged or the Century or Standard dictionaries.

"Chicot," in another column of this issue modestly offers "picshow" as a name to designate a vaudeville house which runs pictures, but after the way he hands it to cheap vaudeville it is doubtful if anyone will care to run a "picshow."

But this is a real chance for the wordsmiths. The Essanay Company has the hundred simoleons all right and will pay them over to the successful contestant. So, get busy.

THERE is no doubt about the need of a new word for picture theatres. "Nickelodeon" is already obsolete; in fact, it never did designate a picture theatre. "Nickelodeon" has always meant any place of amusement for which the price of admission was a nickel.

We never could endure the term "moving picture theatre." "Moving pictures" as a term is ambiguous, neither is it correct. Motion pictures is nearer right, since it is "motion"—action—that is pictured. You will observe if you read The Film Index closely that the term "motion picture" is always used in these pages. Sometimes someone will slip the "moving" business over on us, but not often.

Along with "Nickelodeon" goes "Nickelette" and "Nickelolo" and others of the same breed. It should be remembered that the picture theatre is a ten cent proposition which makes "Nickelodeon" a cheap skate. These to the scrap-pile.

Some one has used the coined word "Lifeorama." There is a philological reason for this word, a liberal translation of which means views of life. That's what motion pictures are. But the term is not smooth and easily handled. It's too much of a mouthful.

However, the fun is on, so send your guesses to the Essanay Contest Editor, 435 N. Clark Street, Chicago, Ill., and get that hundred if you can. As an additional incentive The Film Index will agree to print a picture of the winner.

ESPECIAL attention is directed to a story about vaudeville in its relation to picture theatres in this issue of The Film Index. It was written by Epes Winthrop Sargent, known to vaudeville the world over. He dissects and diagnoses the problem in a most thorough fashion. Every picture theatre manager should read and digest that article; it will give him food for thought and explain to him, if he does not already know, why vaudeville—the sort available—is not the thing for the picture theatre.

Theatre managers may easily verify the assertions of Mr. Sargent by their own patrons if they will take the trouble to make a careful investigation.

A ROUGH jolt was given the Hearst anti-fight picture agitation last week when the United Christian Endeavor societies repudiated the activities of Hearst's special Christian Endeavor agitator after that busy individual had been properly bumped by Mayor Gaynor.

"You are a fool, and you come from fools," the Mayor is credited with saying when the individual in question had stated his business Looks very much as though the Mayor guessed that the fellow was helping Hearst in the effort to fasten something on him. It will require a better man than William Randolph Hearst and his handful of "yellows" to pin crape on His Honor William J. Gaynor.

By the way, the fight pictures have been shown for the past week and we have heard nothing of race riots. Even the newspapers have admitted that they were harmless.

WHAT are you planning to make your old house more attractive for the coming season? At this season of the year when the weather is hot and business dull because your patrons do not care to stay indoors on a hot summer night, nearly every wise manager shuts his house to business for a few weeks and does a little renovating.

In these days of close competition every little thing counts. Better chairs means more comfort to patrons; better decorations makes the old place a little more attractive; better pictures—there's the keynote—better pictures spells more business every time.

Possibly you are getting the best your house will stand, but there's a chance that they do not show up as well on the screen as they might. In that event you need a better screen. Get the one we have been telling you about in recent issues of The Film Index. We know it makes even old pictures look well.

Then there's the question of lighting up your house: We have been harping on this string for some time. There is no excuse for dark theatres any more. They should be prohibited.

A PROMINENT exhibitor from Omaha, Neb., dropped into New York on business the other day, and, while in town, called on The Film Index. Casual conversation brought out the fact that he had a sort of "kick coming." He acknowledged that the pictures were fine and that business was good, but said he was not at all pleased with the posters that were being made for the majority of licensed pictures.

When asked what criticism he had to make Mr. Harding—that's his name—said: "They are not sensational enough to attract business. We exhibitors want something in posters that will cause the passer-by to stop to see what it's about and then sufficiently interesting to excite his curiosity and induce him to spend a dime to see the show."

We promised to see the A. B. C. Company about the matter. This company makes most posters for licensed pictures. The Selig Polyscope Company, the Essanay Company, Vitagraph and Melies make their own. Mr. Harding did not say which was best.

The poster question is a difficult one to solve. On account of public opinion the manufacturers have found it wiser not to put out highly sensational posters, and as they furnish the "copy" to the printer, he has to make the best of that "copy;" therefore, it's not altogether the printer's fault. Another thing: The printer often gets his "copy" very late and has no time for his best work.

There are, as Mr. Harding says, climaxes in all pictures which would make better posters than many of the "true-to-the-picture" scenes that are sometimes shown on the posters.

Between the poster man and the picture man the remedy may yet be found.

REPORTS from Newport and Narragansett say that the members of the "400" and "smart set" who inhabit those summer colonies are obtaining much pleasure out of motion pictures. They are regular attendants at the picture theatres and are generous in bestowing applause upon the pictured comedies and dramas. This reminds us that there are thousands of people belonging to the so-called "better class" in every large city who would attend picture theatres if suitable efforts were made to meet their requirements.

New York has yet to see its first-class picture house where particular people may seek an evening's pleasure seeing the pictures.

"NIBSY" CLARK OPENS AIRDOME

Nibsy Clark, who opened an airdome at Colchester, Wash., July 7, is reported as doing a great business. The new amusement place is one of the best equipped and has every first-class attraction as seen in the large cities.

The motion pictures, especially, are causing the delight of the large crowds, while the vaudeville bill is making a big hit. It is the purpose of Mr. Clark of giving his audiences new films every day.

BUSINESS GOOD AT BRISTOL

Business at the Bristol Opera House, Bristol, Conn., is the best in its history. All during the hot summer afternoons and evenings the house keeps crowded with patrons who always applaud the pictures. Comedy pictures seem to please more than anything else, and the management is endeavoring to give the best in that line. Educational and travelogue films are also in great demand.

In order to keep the house cool, electric fans are placed in every available spot, both on the main floor and in the gallery.

Last week the manager was successful in getting Joe Collins, a well known Boston baritone, to sing the illustrated songs.

NEW DEAL FOR ST. LOUIS

Crawford and Western Exchanges Cancelled by Patents Co.—License Issued to Yale Film Exchange Co.

On account of violation of license agreement the licenses issued to the O. T. Crawford Film Exchange and the Western Film Exchange, both doing business in St. Louis, Mo., have been cancelled by the Motion Picture Patents Company. As these two exchanges were the only licensed firms in St. Louis it became necessary to provide other service for licensed exhibitors. This was accomplished by the granting of a license to the Yale Film Exchange Company of Kansas City for an office in St. Louis.

Mr. A. D. Flintom, manager of the Yale Exchange, was in New York last week making the necessary arrangements at this end, and by the time this word reaches readers of The Film Index, the new exchange will be in operation and serving customers.

A full line of licensed pictures, machines and supplies of every description. It is believed that the new exchange will give service superior to that which St. Louis has had in the past. It is not and never will be interested in the exhibition business, which will insure its patrons of impartial treatment.

The address of the new exchange as given in its advertisement on page 7, is 604 Chestnut street, St. Louis, Mo.

WANTS BETTER POSTERS

Harding of Omaha Claims That Present Poster Styles Lack Drawing Power

'Way from the wilds of Omaha, Neb., came Samuel Harding to New York City, last week. He blew into the offices of The Film Index, 1 Madison avenue, a welcome visitor. Mr. Harding is the largest exhibitor of motion pictures in Omaha. He owns the Princess Theatre, the largest picture theatre in that town, which, with his partner, Mr. Goldberg, he conducts successfully as a straight picture house at 5 cents admission.

We say he conducts it successfully because the peculiar circumstances that exists in the picture business in Omaha make it easy to see why any but the most careful management would fail to produce favorable results. Within a few blocks five or six picture shows are running in opposition to each other. One will add some new feature each week to get business away from the others, thus incurring profitless expenses. But Harding and Goldberg have fought shy of the vaudeville and feature stuff, contending that the better class of people want good, straight pictures. They give three reels of first-run pictures and have made good at 5 cents with a seating capacity of 500, in spite of much competition.

Mr. Harding is deeply interested in the subject of picture posters and is firm in the belief that the lithographed posters obtainable for the productions of licensed manufacturers are not what they ought to be. "They illustrate after a fashion," he said, but, do not illustrate with a view to getting business for the exhibitor."

"The average poster illustrates merely a scene and not a story," said Mr. Harding; "Sometimes not even an actual scene from the film, but something entirely different. I believe that the scene represented on a poster should be the most dramatic one in the play—the climax. I believe that in the climax, the big idea, of a scenairo, the plot will reveal itself at a glance at the poster, or at least arouse the imagination to a conception of a plot—a curiosity to be satisfied.

"To give an illustration: Sometime ago the Vitagraph Co. produced "Via Wireless," the story of how a girl alone at sea with a designing man was saved from harm by her lover, a wireless operator, with whom she communicated 'Via Wireless.' In the actual pictures the lover comes in another ship and after a fierce struggle with the persecutor, jumps to safety on his ship with the girl in his arms. The posters for this subject were of a ship calmly at sea. Nothing else.

"If the posters had been made of the scene where the lover jumps from one boat to the other with the girl in his arms and madly cursed by the villain, people would have stopped, become interested, and have imagined any number of plots from such a scene. It is a climax—a story in itself. The people's curiosity and imagination would have been aroused, and that is all that is necessary.

"It is the passer-by we want to get to through the posters. The regular picture lovers come regardless of subjects, provided the subjects are reasonably new. It is the person who has not already made up his mind to attend a show that we want to attract by posters. We need that business. I have often watched a person stop, look at a poster, then pass on, whereas if his imagination had been aroused; if the illustration had started a train of thought, an imaginary plot in his mind, he would probably have come in."

Mr. Harding also believes that quotations from the story should be put at the bottom of the poster as is done in the case of theatrical posters. This, he believes, would help the imagination of those who see them and give some clue to the story of the picture.

KAY TEE CO. CANCELLED.

The license of The Kay Tee Film Exchange of Los Angeles, Cal., has been cancelled for violation of the terms of the license agreement. This firm has been in the hands of a receiver in bankruptcy for some time.

CLOSED FOR REPAIRS.

James Devine, of Lestershire, Pa., has closed his motion picture theatre, on Main street, for repairs. The floor space will be enlarged about twenty-five feet. The stage will also be elevated a couple of feet in order that spectators on the main floor can see better.

The interior of the house will also be newly decorated and painted.

A. D. SCHENCK BUYS THE UNO.

A. Davis Schenck has purchased the Uno Motion Picture Theatre on Hazel street, Wilkes-Barre, Pa., from Rinehart & Enterline, its former managers.

As Mr. Schenck is an old motion picture man, and knows what the public desires, he has decided to make many improvements before the winter season starts in. Of course he will use only the best and latest pictures.

MORE PICTURES FOR 'FRISCO.

J. Charles Green Converts Big Valencia Theatre Into Picture House.

The big venture of turning the $250,000 Valencia Theatre, of San Francisco, Cal., into a motion picture house, bold and speculative as it seemed to the theatrical men of San Francisco at the time of its inception, has proven a complete success, and it is now declared that the beautiful playhouse erected by J. Charles Green with the intention of making it the greatest stock company theatre in all the West will be permanently devoted to the display of motion pictures with the admission rate at the nickel standard.

This shows in a convincing manner the popularity of the new form of amusement in which the world's events as well as the new contrivances of comedy and drama, are being presented; for even six months ago, no man of experience in the theatrical field would have thought it possible to make five-cent admissions pay the rent and running expenses of a playhouse in the recent construction of which a quarter of a million dollars had been expended.

Alex. Kaiser, the manager of the theatre, says that the experiment has proven successful beyond all expectations. The average attendance on week days is 1,500, with from 3,000 to 5,000 on Sundays. Even automobile parties are being made up to see the pictures at the Valencia, two of these parties during the past week going out from the St. Francis.

All the new pictures are shown at the Valencia, as by arrangement with the Turner & Dahnken film exchange, the first run of all the films produced in the world is given there. Twenty-one different reels are used every week, or three a day, this being the total production of the United States and Europe. The films include all the Edison, Biograph, Lubin, Pathe, Selig, Gaumont, Vitagraph, Essanay, Kalem and Melies series.

On July 4 the members of the San Francisco Examiner staff were the guests of the manager of the Valencia. The reporters, who were in a jolly mood had one of the best times in their lives and all wanted to do the pen slinging act, in complimenting the generosity of their host.

MAY CLOSE THE DOOR

Independents Don't Want Any More Patents Co. Discards

It is reported that there is strong objection in the "independent" camp to the admission of the O. T. Crawford and the Western Film Exchange Companies of St. Louis, Mo., just dropped by the Patents Company.

This opposition comes mostly from the Wagner and Swanson exchanges, which now represent the independents in St. Louis.

There was a meeting on Thursday at the Sales Co.'s office in New York to discuss the question. Mr. F. E. Aitken of the Western was in attendance.

MURDOCK QUITS?

It is generally reported that J. J. Murdock has practically withdrawn from the "Owl Co.," an independent picture producing concern. Recent developments in the vaudeville field which increased Mr. Murdock's responsibilities in that field is said to be the cause. The Owl Company is controlled by the Kessel crowd.

Vaudeville In the Picture Theatre

Being a Dispassionate Consideration of the Situation
By a Writer Who Can See Two Sides of the Question

By EPES W. SARGENT, "Chicot"

INTERESTING if not informative is the discussion which for several months has been running in the columns of The Film Index. Some exhibitor who has made money since he dropped the vaudeville feature declares that the salvation of the business lies in the absolute excision of vaudeville features, while another is equally insistent that in vaudeville alone is to be found the solution of the box office problem. Each man is right in so far as he goes, but his opinion is merely one vote for or against; nothing more, for he does not go outside of his own lobby.

Were a vote taken on the subject, it is probable that it would stand 20 per cent. in favor of vaudeville and 80 per cent. in favor of the picture show with illustrated songs and possibly the travelogue for a "chaser." Possibly a tenth of the entire vote would be based upon actual experience with both forms, and half of those, probably, know what they are talking about.

In considering this question, let it be understood that such houses as the Circle and Manhattan in New York, the Victoria, Palace, Park and others in Philadelphia and some other cities are not here regarded as picture theatres —to coin a word for the new Essanay contest "picshows." They are vaudeville theatres with a more generous allowance of film than is customary in the average eight to ten acts and pictures program. There are very few such houses in the country and the number does not figure in the general results.

By a "picshow" is meant a place where the two to four reels are alternated with vaudeville acts, from four to twelve performances a day being given, though few of the "picshows" give more than eight performances a day. Four to six shows is a more general average, but even taking the four as the number of shows that is the answer to the question as to the grade of vaudeville acts to be found in such establishments. It is simply an impossibility to get decent vaudeville turns to work more than three times a day unless the capacity of the house and its popularity permits the attendance of audiences of from 1,200 to 1,500 at each entertainment. The vaudeville actor—the real vaudeville actor—will not do it because he does not have to.

The "picshow" vaudeville, then, consists of the acts just starting up and the acts well started down grade, the raw beginner and the broken down has-been. To argue that either of these classes, the raw material and the discard, are representative of anything that is good in vaudeville is the limit of absurdity. Either they are not yet good enough or they have grown stale and tiresome in the inactivity of old age.

To judge by another, the commonest American standard, that of salary, the answer is about the same. Lately there was an agitation in Chicago which resulted in the raising of the standard of salary in the smaller houses. It was agreed that no single act was to receive less than $25 weekly while double that was to go to a team. Probably $50 "single" and $100 "double" will represent the outside price in the majority of the theatres. In the larger number of houses these prices are liberal in the extreme.

The price of the opening act in the average real two-shows-a-day vaudeville seldom falls below $60 and more often rises to the three figures of which the second is not always a cipher—and that represents only the opening act, the turn that is merely good enough to hold the stage while the audience is coming in. After the second or third number the price jumps alarmingly and the bill that represents a salary outlay of less than $3,000 is seldom regarded as a good one.

If money talks surely argument ends here. The man with the small house and small admission fee cannot meet these figures. It would bankrupt him even if the acts in question could be induced to appear more than three times a day. As a matter of fact a good act will not appear more often because there is no necessity for it, and weekly programmes of really acceptable quality are an absolute impossibility.

The vaudeville, then, that is served to the "picshow" audiences is of the cheapest class, unoriginal, uninventive, and, more often than not, offensively vulgar. Their routine of jokes is made up of a rehash of the professional budgets flavored with profanity and cheap vulgarity. No regular vaudeville student need be told that the shortest cut to an unthinking laugh is a profane expression and the next best is the "raw" jest that brings raucous laugh from the gallery.

No matter what the house, whether it be the Orpheum or Colonial in New York (representative of the best in Metropolitan audiences) or the honkatonk of the mining town "damn" or "hell" will bring rude laughter and the off color allusion will command roars of laughter. These the manager hears and by them he judges the "hit" the act is making. He does not hear the low voiced comment of the better element, nor does he always notice the deterioration of the quality of his audience.

It is sufficient that "they're laughin' their heads off inside," and no vaudeville manager is free from this fallacy. The man who sits with the others in the audience, who hears the comment, does not do the booking and when the manager sees the show it is from the back rail or the private box, if he has one.

It is an odd fact that a manager will permit his children to visit his performance and listen to salacity that if it were retailed in his own drawing room would result in the offender being kicked from the house. But "it makes the audience laugh" and herein lies the danger of vaudeville of the sort that the "picshow" can afford. The entertainers are not sufficiently clever to be entertaining. They have recourse to filth and profanity. In those few houses where the language of the player is rigidly edited, the show becomes merely inane and that from a business point of view is even worse.

It is the cheap vaudeville that damns the house employing it and helps to give the "picshow" its bad name. The writer is in correspondence with people all over the country who are interested in amusements; not a particular house, but the entire list of the town in which they live. Without exception they decry the vaudeville that is the price they pay for the pictures, or glory in the fact that they have discovered a place where the first runs of film may be enjoyed without the intrusion of the smut joke and the clog dancer who trips over his own heels. These are not theatre owners but theatre goers of the observant class. A Philadelphia newspaper man, the editor of a Sunday section that is circulated in some forty papers, was lamenting the other day that there was no longer a place where he might take his little daughter to see the pictures unless he came into the city.

"There used to be a place not far away," he explained, "but they put in vaudeville. I drop in now and then, but I wouldn't let the child go to that show." And the funny part of it is that the manager of the house thinks that he has shown his enterprise in adding a vaudeville bill.

The answer is that some few people are attracted by the cheap vaudeville and the regulars have not yet become entirely disgusted. As yet the gain of new patrons exceeds the loss of the old, but the new patrons themselves are keeping away the old regulars because they lower the tone of the house. In the old days the clientele was made up of families. Now they come in pairs with their peanuts and popcorn and the rest of the equipment of street flirtation, and the few regulars left are dropping away. The clientele of the house is becoming of that class that brings all picture shows into disrepute in the minds of the reformers who are more apt to generalize than to classify.

The all-picture programme offers the work of three or four casts of competent actors, appearing in strong plays or brisk comedies more frequently than not written by authors of standing in the magazine world, developed by editors of long experience and staged by men of real note in the dramatic profession. Now and then a jarring note is sounded, but more than nine tenths of the licensed films are pure, wholesome and welcome. Not even the worst are one hundredth part as bad as some of last season's dramatic successes.

Small boys who get into the Children's Courts have found an effective plea in "I saw it in the pictures," and the judge, seeing a chance for cheap press work, denounces the pictures instead of the offenders and the reporters take it up, but not one in a thousand of these youthful liars got his evil ideas from a film, though now and then a story does creep in that would be better left out.

The pictures enable a patron to enjoy the work of three or four casts of players of metropolitan distinction in well written plays, well staged and shown in splendid photography. It is small wonder that the picture theatre attracts the intelligent patron, who flees in disgust when two youths fresh from the delivery wagon or the newspaper route clamp upon the stage and retail the jokes that rival the sewer in odor and Methuselah in age. The man who likes pictures doesn't like the brand of vaudeville that is served with it and he stays away. There may be enough of the other kind to form a paying audience, but it is seldom that the house is a credit to the management and a business built upon salacity does not pay in the long run.

In certain parts of the cities and in some small towns there are people who know no better, or who go because there is no other attraction offered, but in a majority of instances the well kept theatre with clean floors and clean bills of pictures is going to make more money than the house built upon the cheap allurement of nastiness and incompetency.

When business gets bad don't put in vaudeville unless you can afford the very best. Add more first run stuff, get a better singer and an operator who knows how to project. They cost less and pay better. It's not always that an audience doesn't want pictures. It may merely be that they want good pictures instead of junk and want to see them run right. First run pictures cost no more than last run vaudeville, and they are infinitely more attractive to the solid section of the amusement loving public.

The man who says he makes more money with vaudeville probably means what he says, but such houses are few and far between and he is entitled to but a single vote. To the man who knows pictures well and vaudeville intimately, between London and San Francisco, the argument is all in favor of straight pictures in well run theatres. The theatre is part of the answer. It might be the same candy, but fancy a pound of Huyler's in a brown paper bag!

A CITY OF AIRDOMES

Jersey City Leads the East in Number of Open Air Theatres

Jersey City, N. J., might with justice be called "the city of airdomes," since for a city its size, it probably supports more of the open air type of picture theatres than any other city in the East.

It was Joseph McCarthy who first conceived the happy idea of such a theatre in the early Spring of 1909. He constructed a rustic affair at Ocean avenue and Union street, Jersey City, and put on a show of motion pictures and vaudeville. The people of Jersey, who had hitherto, been obliged to attend rather small and close theatres if they wished to take in pictures, were overjoyed at the new idea of being able to see a show in the open.

McCarthy's place which occupied but half of a large vacant lot did such a land office business that it was soon necessary to spread to the other half. At that the theatre was over crowded.

Following in his path were Jack Driscol, formerly tenor soloist at the Fourteenth Street Theatre, New York City, and George Beatty, who opened the "Monticello Airdome" at Monticello and Harrison avenues. Both places attracted a better class of people than the enclosed theatre, and the two had a monopoly of picture theatre business for that summer.

Encouraged by the success of these two places, no less than 12 new airdomes have opened in Jersey City this season. Which makes 14 open air theatres in a city of 200,000 population, and in a district that is populated by only one fourth of that number. Wherever a vacant lot, excepting it be in the woods or in a swamp, an airdome will spring up.

The result of this state of affairs is that many of the places are not proving profitable investments. They are bunched up too closely for their own good.

But they all continue to run a show, and Jersey City remains "the City of Airdomes."

NEW HOUSE FOR SUFFERN.

Fred Conklin, has leased the Old North Church property on Lafayette avenue, Suffern, N. Y., and will convert the place into a motion picture house; when completed the theatre will seat about 350 people.

For a long time Suffern has been wanting a first class motion picture house, and that is the purpose of Mr. Conklin to give the Suffernites the best pictures on the market. The house will have no vaudeville but will use illustrated songs in connection with the pictures.

"THE PERVERSITY OF FATE"

A Version of The "Squaw Man" Episode by the Kalem Players

THE story of the "Squaw Man" has many variations. In nearly all of them the squaw eliminates herself at the critical moment which permits the man to return to civilization and his first love. The Kalem players have given a different version in the picture story "The Perversity of Fate," in which the Indian wife wins out.

John Rose, the titular hero of the story, is compelled to seek his fortune in the Canadian mining country and bids farewell to his sweetheart, who is compelled to remain at home to care for an aged and sick mother, and abruptly departs.

It is sometime before we hear from John again, and in the meantime the girl, in order to provide for her mother, is obliged to marry her employer, a wealthy, but aged banker. When this happens the girl writes to her lover telling him what she has done, and also telling him that the banker is an old man and, therefore, there may still be much of life left for them to spend together.

John gets this letter just as fortune comes his way. It turns his happiness into despair and and he abandons everything and buries himself in the wilderness.

Five years later the girl is again free. Her mother is dead, also her husband, and she is a rich widow. Her one hope now is to find John and bring him back. After a long trip over the trail she reaches the limits of civilization and engages guides to take her through the wilderness to John. The trip is made by canoe on narrow streams that wind through the virgin forest in the depths of which she finds John living in a log cabin with an Indian squaw.

Ignoring the squaw the girl attempts to win John back. After considerable begging and pleading, he seems about to consent, for he takes her in his arms and kisses her. Suddenly he casts her violently from him and angrily orders her out of his hut, literally driving her into the canoe and, standing coldly and defiantly on the bank of the stream, he watches her departure.

As the white girl disappears the squaw, who has been stolidly watching the proceedings, comes to John, kneels at his feet and kisses his hand.

A feature of this picture is the beautiful woodland views, an example of which is given in the accompanying illustration. When you see the picture observe these effects. Each scene is a picture in itself, possessing true perspective; always a bit of light in the middle distance that gives depth to the scene. Photographically sharp with good contrasts of light and shade these scenes are about as near the perfection of motion picture art as is ever seen. Those familiar with Canadian forests say that they are true to nature. But, hist; they were taken in J————y.

KALEM SUBJECT, "THE PERVERSITY OF FATE." JOHN ROSE REJECTS OLD SWEETHEART FOR SQUAW.

Speaking of Jersey, what did you think of the Kalem subject, "Brave Hearts"? There was an Indian raid made upon a settler's home in the forest. That forest might have been in any one of a dozen states; and there was a time not more than a century ago when the scenes depicted actually happened, not farther away than the state of Ohio. In fact, we believe "Brave Hearts" was plotted for Ohio. But the action and scenic effects happened and are in—but what's the use, the picture will make a hit just the same because it is a really good picture.

FARCE COMEDY UP TO THE MINUTE

Pathe American Company Produces Funny Take Off On Hobble Skirt

NOTHING in the sartorial line of recent mode lends itself so readily to the uses of the motion picture producer as the feminine fad, the "hobble skirt." As most everyone knows by this time the "hobble skirt" is tied in closely to the wearer's legs just below the knees, greatly impeding pedal locomotion. The Pathe American players have pounced upon this vagary of feminine attire and turned it to account in a most laughable farce comedy picture.

PATHE SUBJECT, "THE LATEST FASHION IN SKIRTS"—THE START.

Madam will have the "hobble skirt" and it is forthwith produced. Now, Madam of the picture is one of those dainty, dimpled bits of femininity approximating 200 pounds gross avoirdupois. Having donned the skirt she essays to walk. It might be said that her gait is more of an ambulatory stutter than a walk, for she is so effectually "hobbled" that she can barely step the length of her feet.

Thus attired she decided to visit a friend or go shopping. From the house to the street a stairway must be traversed. Madam cannot step down, but after several futile attempts she turns and hops down backward.

Once on the street her costume and manner of walking are at once a center of attraction to the curious. She attempts to board a street car, but cannot negotiate the high step. Willing hands tug in vain to lift her on, but that avoirdupois is too much. In the skirmish she sits on the car conductor who finally escapes, jumps on his car, closes the door and starts off.

Madam decides to walk to her destination and starts off with grim determination. At a street crossing she becomes confused by the passing vehicles and stumbles into a hole being dug by a workman. After all ordinary efforts fail to get her out of the hole, a derrick with block and tackle are brought and she is hoisted by main strength and a rope.

By this time she is somewhat mussed up and undertakes to get home by going cross lots. A number of ludicrous mishaps befall her which are better described by the picture. Finally a tailor happens along and cuts the "hobble" thus giving Madam the power of locomotion, though he sadly mutilates her bedraggled costume. Released from fashion's impediment she hastens home with all speed and shakes her rags, with one of those "never again" gestures that speak louder than words.

The picture is a laugh from the start and will make a hit with any audience.

PATHE SUBJECT, "THE LATEST FASHION IN SKIRTS"—THE RESCUE.

WILSON BUYS NICKELO.

Mr. and Mrs. Walter Wilson of Shelbyville have bought the North Side Nickelo, Greensburg, Ind. They are people of extensive experience in show business of various kinds and will surely make the place a "hummer." They believe in letting the public know what they are doing. Messrs. Rombush & Walker recently put $400 improvements in, and the new owners will maintain every standard of excellence, and will add new and novel features.

FIREPROOF BOOTHS REQUIRED.

The Health Department of Binghamton, N. Y., has issued orders that all motion picture theatres in that city must have picture machines placed in fireproof booths.

It was claimed that Binghamton has been somewhat slow in looking after the safety of motion picture houses but now, under the new law, all danger is removed and the city, will be in the future, looked upon as having the safest houses in the State.

The big managers have been complimenting the Board of Health for its recent action, as it gives them better support in every way.

"BANDIT'S WIFE" MAKES A HIT.

"The Bandit's Wife" that thrilling Essanay Western film was the star attraction at the Nickel theatre, Bangor, Me., on the week of July 4. The film was one of the most realistic that has ever been shown at the popular little house and kept the crowds cheering all the time. The film was evidently something new in the line of Western stories and took the "Down Easterners" by storm. It has been said that during the week of the Fourth, the management did a larger business than any other in the career of the popular theatre.

Attention, Exhibitors!

A New Licensed Exchange for St. Louis and Adjacent Territory and the Only Licensed Exchange in St. Louis!!

The Motion Picture Patents Company at the earnest solicitation of a majority of the exhibitors in the St. Louis territory have granted an exchange license to the

Yale Film Exchange Company

A. D. FLINTOM, Manager

and on Monday, July 25th, 1910, the Yale Company will open at 604 Chestnut Street, St. Louis, Mo., the most fully equipped Film Exchange in America for the rental of licensed film and the sale of all standard makes of moving picture machines, repairs and accessories.

This office will be run and operated with the best interests of the licensed exhibitor at heart. The management wishes to assure all exhibitors that the new office will have no connection whatever in the operation of moving picture shows or theatres, but will use its best efforts at all times in the interest of the licensed exhibitors. We will start in with 1000 reels of new licensed film and 500 sets of new song slides. We will be able to furnish to our customers, at reasonable rental, all the big feature film subjects put on the market during the past few years by the licensed manufacturers. We will buy from two to five prints of each and every film subject put on the market by the licensed manufacturers from this time on.

Think of the great advantage to exhibitors in dealing with this new exchange, in being able to secure new, clean film and almost any subject desired. We will handle all standard makes of machines, repairs, current saving devices, gas making machines, and supplies of all kinds. Get our prices before buying.

Remember this office will be conducted along strictly legitimate business lines and will endeavor to further the best interests of all licensed exhibitors. We will not threaten or oppress exhibitors. Our customers will be protected and will get an unequaled film service, and in accordance with contract.

We are not strangers to the St. Louis exhibitors. We refer to Fisher and Sippy of the North Grand Theatre; Heib and Keily of 825½ Locust Street, operating the three largest airdomes in St. Louis; The Favorite Theatre, The Washington Theatre, and others, as to our business methods and quality of our service. Call or write for prices, and remember the sooner you arrange for the famous Yale service, the quicker your box office receipts will increase.

For Good Service! Honest Treatment! The Best Film and Perfect Satisfaction, deal with the only licensed exchange in St. Louis.

By James S. McQuade

IN the general hue and cry raised against the exhibition of the Jeffries-Johnson pictures, about two weeks ago, the dailies here listed Milwaukee, Wis., among the cities which had prohibited the pictures.

The Inter-Ocean of July 7 had the following item:

"Mayor Emil Seidel yesterday sent word to all theatre managers in Milwaukee advising them against entering into contracts for presentation of the pictures. The mayor gives as his reason that such an exhibition is detrimental to public morals and particularly to children."

The Evening American of July 9 printed the following dispatch:

"Emil Seidel, Mayor of Milwaukee, issued a public letter declaring that the prohibition of the fight pictures was in the interest of our city in general and our youth in particular. HE WANTED THE THEATRE MANAGERS TO BE SURE THAT THEY WOULD HAVE NO CHANCE TO EXHIBIT AS LONG AS HE WAS MAYOR."

These are the only excerpts near to my hand at the present writing, but they will serve my purpose.

On July 7, Clarence Darrow, of this city, an attorney, author and orator of national reputation, wrote the following letter to Mayor Seidel:

"My dear Mr. Seidel:

"If the papers quote you correctly, I see that you have forbidden the exhibition of the pictures of the Jeffries-Johnson fight in Reno, Nevada.

"Of course, I am very much interested in your administration and shall be, even if you do things which do not commend themselves to my judgment, but I am greatly disappointed at this action on your part, if you are correctly reported. So far as I have studied socialism, the socialists stand for the broadest personal liberty and they believe that if economic conditions were any where near fair and right, people could be depended upon to look after their own morals, with perfect safety to the individual and the state. Even if the case were not as broad as this, I regret that you should have fallen in with a lot of near reformers in a matter that is no concern of government and can be nothing but meddlesome to the individual.

"It is idle to discuss the question of whether prize fights or picture representations of them tend to the highest morality or ethics. The world has always differed as to what tends to the best morality and probably it always will. You could doubtless find people who would believe that the reading of Carl Marx morning and evening ought to be a matter of legal enactment, as there are a great many who believe that the reading of the scriptures and daily prayers should be enforced by law. Some people like to see prize fights; others like to see exhibitions of football, which is certainly as brutal. Others like to shoot and kill harmless animals; others like to go to church; others like to spend a portion of their time in the saloons. As I view it, it is no part of the business of a legislative body—much less an executive official—to prescribe the sort of pastime that they believe tends to the welfare of other people. This is the individual's business, not the legislature's or mayor's. There are doubtless things that are so clearly in violation of the rights of other individuals that society will find it necessary to prohibit them by law for many years to come, yet I believe that practically all students agree that society is too meddlesome, rather than not meddlesome enough, and I can find no precedent anywhere that is worthy of serious consideration for forbidding people from looking at a boxing exhibition or attending one, no matter under what name it is called.

"If it be true, as is attributed to you in the interview, these are demoralizing to children, then it is the duty of the parent to look after the children. This is true where they have parents and where they have not, they are supplied with guardians or people who take the place of parents. There are any amount of very good people who would think that a parent who would not send his child to Sunday-school ought to have the child taken away, as was practically done with Shelly years ago. While we look for these little aberrations in those who are possessed of superstition and have little thought or regard for personal liberty, excepting their own, I am quite sure that a great many of your friends will feel shocked that a socialist mayor will fall into any such error.

"Of course, all of this is none of my business, except that I wanted to tell you what I thought of it; and, whether you prohibit it or do not, I certainly have the best wishes for your administration and great faith in you and the people who elected you.

"Very truly yours,

"CLARENCE DARROW."

On July 11, Mayor Seidel wrote his reply, which is here given:

"Dear Mr. Darrow:

"Your letter of July 1 is at hand. It is good to receive a plain spoken Darrow communication.

"YOU REFER TO THE JEFFRIES-JOHNSON FIGHT PICTURES BEING PROHIBITED IN MILWAUKEE. THUS FAR, THERE HAS BEEN NO SUCH ACTION. I HAVE WRITTEN A LETTER TO THE MOVING PICTURE HOUSE MANAGERS, INFORMING THEM THAT THE ADMINISTRATION IS NOT FAVORABLE TO THE EXHIBITION OF THE PICTURES, AND ASKING THEM TO CO-OPERATE WITH US.

"Should these pictures be presented in this city, shown to 100,000 people or more, and among these perhaps 25,000 boys, I am not so sure but that at some time in the future a book would be written with more of the bitterness of life, more of a revolt at the accepted things than is contained in your book, 'Farmington.'

"No attempt is being made to prescribe by force the sort of pastime the people should have. I am sure it will interest you to know that we are striving to make our school houses social centers, that we are to have moving pictures, dances and other recreations in our schools. Attendance on these will not be compulsory, but it is the hope that some of our boys and girls will be led in this way towards what Golden Rule Jones used to call "rational recreation." Our public parks with the concerts, wading pools, boating and athletic grounds are already causing the cheap park with costly amusements to blow the last tune. Some deplore this. Who?

"I wish to thank you and to assure you that we appreciate to the full the good wishes you send us. Yours sincerely,

"EMIL SEIDEL, Mayor."

Mayor Seidel's letter shows conclusively that the newspaper dispatches sent out from Milwaukee were "colored," so as to heighten the effect of the hysterical wave of protest made at the time. That portion of the "American's" item, in capitals, shows distinctly the animus of that paper, although I am responsible for the capitalizing, in order to direct particular attention to the sentence.

A "Transplanted American" Egotist.

Charles Urban, widely known through his connection with the Kinemacolor system, has seen fit recently to seek publicity at the expense of Mr. Thomas A. Edison. The attempt is made in a circular, which Mr. Urban mails, as a companion sheet, with other literature on Kinemacolor films. This circular has an introduction and two press excerpts, one from the London "Telegraph" and the other from the "Kinematograph and Lantern Weekly," of the same city. It is only with the introduction, evidently written by Mr. Urban himself, that this article is concerned. Here it is:

AMERICANS OF TWO SORTS.

America is justly proud of its Edison—its wizard; but his genius often suffers because of his inherent immobility. If he would personally utilize some of the marvelous means of travel about which he dreams, and with which he experiments, both he and the world would benefit.

It is singular, that while the American claims he can "lick creation," the transplanted American leaves the stay-at-home miles behind in the race. The American abroad possesses the useful quality of absorption. He gets at the kernel, while the stay-at-home looks at the shell; he extracts the essential oil while the indigenous one samples the essence; he goes to the root, while the dreamer at home swings in the branches. The pushful American abroad absorbs the science of older nations better equipped than his own, applies it and commercializes it; and this combination of push and ingestion accounts for his success over the other fellow.

Edison battles with the "seeming impossibility of photographing reds," while Urban romps home with his perfected system—which has been in action two years and is rousing fresh enthusiasm every day. Edison deplores the fact that machines for projection run more slowly than they ought; Urban could not work his color scheme with any other machine than one built to run at double speed.

It is self-evident, therefore, that Mr. Edison is unduly taxing his clever brain in attempting the solution of problems which have long been solved.

Every American of education and culture recognizes the great advantages that are to be gained by travel in foreign countries, and he is always ready to learn from the older nations when they have something better to offer than can be gained at home; but he can do all this without becoming a "transplanted American" of the Urban sort. Of the two sorts of Americans referred to by Mr. Urban, his must be an exceedingly lonely one—something of the-fox-without-a-tail type; the fellow who is always vainly trying to find another like himself, just to keep misery company.

But a truce to beating around the bush. The second paragraph of the introduction to the Urban circular, if printed so as to convey the exact meaning intended by him, would read as follows:

"It is singular, that while Edison claims that he can 'lick creation,' Charles Urban leaves him miles behind in the race. Urban abroad possesses the useful quality of absorption. He gets at the kernel, while Edison, the stay-at-home, looks at the shell; Urban extracts the essential oil while Edison, the indigenous one, samples the essence; Urban goes to the root, while Edison, the dreamer at home, swings in

TWO EDISON SUBJECTS

A Comedy With a Problem.
Zola's Realism Transformed.

SUPPOSE you came home and found your wife struggling with a burglar and then you rushed in and got the "drop" on the fellow and were about to let him taste the contents of your "38" when your devoted wife tripped you with a footstool and the burglar got away? Wouldn't that jar you? Do you think that you would, under those circumstances, be inclined to clasp her to your breast?

Probably you would not if you fully realized what had happened, but in the case of "Prof. Blackburn," in the Edison picture story, "The Lady and the Burglar," who came home and found a burglar when he suspected his wife of receiving the attentions of a former lover, you would probably act toward her in the manner before explained which describes the climaxic scene in that picture soon to be released by the Edison Company.

Nevertheless, when you see the wife deliberately push the foot stool where her husband stumbles just as he seems about to shoot the burglar, you are likely to have some doubts as to her devotion.

At the same time, though, you will admit that she was under great obligation to the burglar gentleman for helping her out of an extremely awkward position—one that she would have had a hard time explaining to a jealous husband. If she had allowed the husband to shoot the burglar under the circumstances you would at once say that she was a hard-hearted selfish woman, wholly lacking in gratitude, which the burglar was not.

When you see the picture—and you should not fail to include it in a future program—you will have a better chance to study the problem and to decide whether or not the woman was justified in acting as she did.

EDISON SUBJECT, "THE LADY AND THE BURGLAR."—PROF. BLACKBURN AND HIS LOVING WIFE.

Briefly, the story is something like this: "Prof. Blackburn" is an old scholar who is more devoted to his books than to his handsome young wife who he frequently neglects or forgets when deeply immersed in his researches. Its a case where man cannot serve two mistresses; that is, successfully.

The old professor is fairly well satisfied with himself and his wife until he discovers her one day talking to a strange man, when he becomes suspicious.

Now, as a matter of fact, though very young and very beautiful, this wife is really devoted to her elderly husband. The man he saw talking to her is a former lover, long since discarded, and for whom she has a positive dislike. The wife's explanation does not allay the professor's fears and the green devils of jealousy begin to work on his mind.

Leaving the professor to his new found troubles the Edison players prepare the way to the climax by introducing us to the burglar, "John Dykes," by name. Dykes is down on his luck; his wife is dead leaving him the care of a little girl. He sends the child out to buy something to eat. As she is about to cross the street she is struck and severely injured by an automobile in which the professor's wife is riding. The woman hurries back and picks up the child, takes it to its home and provides a doctor and a nurse with instructions to spare no expense and to send her the bill. For this Dykes is truly grateful.

The next scene brings back the professor and his wife. She has just received a letter and is reading it as her husband enters the room, when she quickly conceals it in a book. The book happens to be one the professor is looking for, but the wife refuses to let him see it, thereby arousing his suspicions still more, for he retires very much annoyed. The wife does not appear to be particularly well pleased with the letter which is from the unfortunate lover who insists in forcing his attentions upon her.

EDISON SUBJECT, "THE LADY AND THE BURGLAR."—GAINING THE BURGLAR'S FRIENDSHIP.

We are next told that the Professor is about to go away on a lecture tour and we see him packing his bag and bidding his wife an affectionate farewell. He is worried, though, and seems to have many misgivings as he leaves his home.

It is night, now, and Dykes, the burglar, is plying his trade. He enters the professor's house and is shown "lifting" the silver in the dining room. He enters the reception room and slips behind a screen just as the professor's wife enters followed by a servant who hands her a card. She has just time to glance at the card when the caller—the unwelcome lover,—comes in determined to see her.

The servant disappears and the two proceed to talk it out. The wife orders the man out, but he refuses to go. While they are talking the wife recognizes her husband's step in the hall and in consternation and fear implores her visitor to go, but he seems determined to compromise the woman.

At this point we are given a glimpse of the husband. He has forgotten an important book and returns for it. While hunting for it in the library, he hears voices in the reception room. Immediately he is all suspicion. Right here is given a bit of character work—a study in jealousy,—that is a work of art.

Returning to the scene in the reception room we see the wife almost in collapse and the man coolly defiant. Then Dykes, the burglar, who has been watching developments from behind the screen, grasps the situation and, recognizing the woman who saved his child, gets busy. At the point of his revolver he compels the unwelcome visitor to get out, then quickly engages in a struggle with the wife as the husband enters the door.

Though somewhat taken aback upon finding matters so different from what he had suspected, the professor grasps the situation, also Dyke's pistol, placed where he can't fail to see it, and proceeds to protect his wife from the burglar. He seems about to shoot the marauder when the wife quickly places a stool behind him and almost pushes him backward over it. In the momentary confusion Dykes disappears and the professor recovers his equilibrium, clasps his wife to his breast, now quite satisfied that she is above suspicion, at which point the picture ends.

It is not possible to mention all the interesting features of this subject for it possesses several. The character delineation of the old professor, especially, is commended to lovers of good pictures. Attention is also called to the manner in which the "auto" accident is simulated. Note these when you see the picture.

"THE ATTACK ON THE MILL."

To transform the cold, hard realism of Zola into a pleasing romance may seem a difficult task to anyone but a picture man. Take, for example, Zola's tale, "The Attack on the Mill,"

EDISON SUBJECT—"THE ATTACK ON THE MILL"—DEFENSE OF MILL BY FRENCH.

EDISON SUBJECT—"THE ATTACK ON THE MILL"—FRENCH TROOPS BREAK UP FESTIVAL.

which is a story of an episode of the Franco-Prussian war.

A French officer has been ordered to occupy an old mill and to defend it against the advancing Prussians. He makes a brave fight but loses. With the capture of the mill are taken the miller, his daughter and her betrothed. The latter has violated the articles of war and is ordered to be shot for taking up arms against the invaders.

The girl assists him to escape after much She hunts up the lover and tells him what has happened which impels the noble young man to give himself up.

In the story both are shot just as the French officer retakes the mill from the Prussians and triumphantly cries "Victory."

But the poor girl goes mad for grief.

The Edison players vary this finale in a most happy manner by having the French captain and his soldiers arrive just before the execution and save the old man and the lover. This exercise of dramatic license might be condemned by some on the ground that it is not true to the text. On the other hand is it not as reasonable that the old man and the lover be saved than that they be executed?

We believe that the Edison version of the episode is fully as logical as that of Zola. Zola, you see, always made things as horrifying as possible, which is no reason why the picture should be so.

Two of the scenes are reproduced in this issue of The Film Index. They are a fair representation of a series of beautiful pictures which the Edison players have succeeded in incorporating in this dramatic subject.

ANOTHER PILAR-MORIN PICTURE.

The Edison Manufacturing Company announces another picture soon to be released in which Mlle. Pilar-Morin will appear. The title is "From Tyranny to Liberty," and the plot and scenes are laid in Russia about a Nihilist movement. Mlle. Morin is supported as she always is by a carefully selected cast upon whom, needless to say, her wondrous talent and personality exercise a potent and inspiring influence.

NEW AIRDOME AT KINGSTON.

There were about 500 paid admissions at the Air Dome Theatre, Kingston, N. C., July 4, at the opening, notwithstanding the threatening weather in the early part of the evening. Everything was new and there was some inconvenience because arrangements were not entirely completed. It was pleasant, though the top was down, and will be more so fair nights when the canvas is rolled up.

The films shown were good, but owing to the distance from the stage of the electric machine, the lense projected rather a smaller picture than is desired. Many compliments were paid the management for the large and airy theatre, which, it is said, is one of the best of its kind in Eastern Carolina.

ESSANAY'S WESTERN PRODUCER G. M. ANDERSON

By James S. McQuade.

FANNED by Old Mexico, California and Arizona suns and fresh from the invigorating air in the high altitudes of Colorado, G. M. Anderson, associated with Geo. K. Spoor in the Essanay Film Manufacturing Co., has returned to headquarters at the Essanay plant where he will remain for about eight weeks.

Mr. Anderson, as everybody knows, is the producer of the famous Western films of the Essanay. He left with his company about eleven months ago, expecting to be gone three or four months at most; but the lure of the pictures led him through a maze of wanderings, in which Colorado, Arizona, Old Mexico and California furnished the principal fields of operation. During his travels Mr. Anderson has used nearly 65,000 feet of negative film, and has produced fifty-two reels of Western drama and three reels of Western comedy, beside several scenic films and topical subjects, the last mentioned including the aviation pictures at Los Angeles.

The first objective point was Morrison, Col., where the environment and types were particularly ideal for the production of several strong Western dramas with compelling stories and well constructed plots. "The Bad Man's Last Deed," released July 2, was one of these, and its pronounced success and popularity have served to raise the Western product of Essanay to a still higher plane of merit and favor.

El Paso, Ariz., was made the next center of operations. There, stories of early days in the plains, were treasured up in negatives for the future entertainment of Essanay picture lovers. A fine specimen of this series will be furnished in "Broncho Billy's Redemption," a full reel that will be released July 30.

"On to the Land of the Aztec," was the watchword, when the possibilities of El Paso were exhausted, the party traveling direct to the City of Mexico. In this historic city that breathes the very air of romance, and where still remain visual signs of the departed greatness of the brave and cultured race that was subjugated by Cortez, Mr. Anderson and his force took negatives of several scenic films. All the historic spots in the beautiful city were greedily absorbed by the hungry Essanay cameras. The city mansion and the beautiful country home of President Diaz, a splendid panoramic view of Chepultepec, in the suburbs, showing Chepultepec park and the grim old castle on the heights, fine views of San Francisco and Chico de Mayo avenues, and picturesque glimpses of other spots favored by visitors and tourists will all be revealed in these scenic Essanay films.

But the Old Mexico visit would have been lacking in enterprise had the Essanay party failed during their stay to commit to film some record of Mexican life and types. This was done in the "Mexican Senorita," a Mexican drama of love and adventure, in which an American figures as the hero. None of these Mexican reels have yet been released, but Mr. Anderson is now engaged in putting them together.

The long trip to Santa Barbara, Calif., was then taken and in that pretty city a strong list of cowboy comedies was produced, among them "The Little Doctor of the Foothills," "The Rangers' Bride," and "A Ranchman's Wooing," all of which have already been released and their success well known. The "Aviation Flight at Los Angeles" was also taken by Mr. Anderson, and the prominence gained by it has made that film historic.

The Anderson Company then pointed their noses homeward, and the first lap of the journey landed them once more at Morrison, Col. Under the inspiration of the magnificent surroundings of that mountain resort, such subjects as "Under Western Skies," "Trails of the Hills," and "Away Out West" were produced. All of these have been released and the Essanay type of Western drama has gone up several notches. Indeed, these films have been declared the best results yet secured along this line by the Essanay Co.

MR. G. M. ANDERSON

More recently, at Morrison, "The Girl on Triple X," "The Deputy's Duty" and "The Indian Girl's Awakening" were produced. Mr. Anderson bringing the negatives along with him on his way home. The negatives have been developed and the prints will be made in the near future.

Mr. Anderson, in speaking of the year's progress made in Western drama by the Essanay Co., lays special stress on the greater strength of the stories, the greater care bestowed on detail—both of environment and types, and the closer apprehension and assimilation of Western atmosphere, all of which combined, in his estimation, enhances the artistic value of the pictures fully 50 per cent. The Western dramas produced within the last year by Essanay, Mr. Anderson stoutly claims, reveal types that appear with cameo clearness on a true Western background. "These characteristics are truly and distinctly Essanay's, and Essanay's only," says Mr. Anderson, with an emphasis that brooks no contention. "No Western type produced in the East can possibly compare with the Essanay Western; as, no matter how gifted the actor, he cannot get the true spirit, the life color, and the touches that make for vivid character delineation unless dwelling for some time among the types, immediately before he attempts to impersonate them," is about the way Mr. Anderson puts it. And then there is the Western setting to be taken into consideration, in addition.

Mr. Anderson is now producing several Eastern comedies out at the Essanay plant. Among them "The Count that Counted," and "Take Me Out to the Ball Game," which have been finished since his return. After finishing about 20 Eastern subjects, Mr. Anderson will again resume his Western duties. He will take his company up into the Northwest—in the wilds of Wyoming and the extreme northern confines of Montana—where he will attempt to get the roughest types

"AN ANGLER'S DREAM."—Presenting beautiful out-of-door scenery enlivened by the presence of a band of dainty dancing girls.

Reciting the grotesque dreams of a fisherman who was unfortunate enough to fall asleep while enjoying the gentle sport of angling.

He is captured by a school of fish and suffers at their hands (or fins is a more proper word), the very hardships they would have suffered at his in case he had been able to capture them.

After torturing him in their happy, childlike, fishy way they hold deep counsel and decide to fry him in their huge spider. This is enough to wake any man. He awakens to find he has hooked a fish of such magnificent proportions that it makes away with his line.

An odd effect is presented when a group of dancers perform upon the surface of a woodland lake with no visible support whatever.

"THE FORBIDDEN NOVEL."—A happy and decidedly animated discussion of the peculiar progress of painfully puritan people in the process of proving perfectly the pure principles practiced by them.

A young footman enters the servants' quarters reading a novel, which, despite the cook's curiosity, he keeps reading to himself. So engrossed is he, that he fails to hear his mistress approach, and when she catches sight of the book, she tears it away from him, and angrily rebukes him. In the privacy of her own room she looks at the novel, and she commences to read to be discovered by her husband, who repeats her performance. He in turn is caught by his mother, who is eventually discovered by the old father of the household, who is so engrossed that the family, who have been waiting at lunch for him, investigate matters in a body when they discover the old gentleman reading for all he is worth. Like a lamb he is led out of temptation, and finally the forbidden novel is captured by the cook, who triumphantly stuffs it in her blouse.

"THE BEAUTIFUL MARGARET."—A burlesque on Faust, the well known play by Goethe. A rare comedy built upon that famous drama is bound to be a thorough success among the theatres.

The events that transpire in the drama are too well known to require reiteration here. All showmen and most auditors are familiar with the story. This makes the burlesque possible for without a common knowledge of the original drama a portion of the comedy would be lost.

The various parts are played by puppets in the hands of clever and careful operators.

"MAKING WOODEN SHOES."—It is possible to make so ordinary an incident as the shoeing of an ox or the producing of a wooden shoe into an artistic film.

This series presents the various stages of development leading from the block of wood to the finished shoe.

It is truly astonishing to note the rapid progress made by the rustic manufacturer with his exceedingly primitive tools.

The method of shoeing oxen by swinging them entirely free from the ground is a novel sight to any American audience.

The many industrial and educational films we have presented in the past have been especially popular because of the high artistic values attached even to the most commercial subjects.

"THE SCULPTOR'S IDEAL."—Replete with artistic poses and tableaux augmented in beauty by the graceful Grecian draperies.

Arias, a famous sculptor, was in want of a model but was not able to find the particular type he desired. One day in a vision he saw the girl he wished and resolved to find her. He forthwith set out on his search. He wandered through the Gardens of Cyprus without success, but at last, coming to the slave market was presented with the model that he sought.

He bought her, and hurrying home immediately commenced work upon the wonderful statue he had in his mind. A friend of his, however, calling upon him, fell in love with the maiden, and later, when in the act of declaring his love, was detected by the sculptor. Arias, enraged, ordered him from the house, and returned the model to the slave market. Later, the lover finds her there and purchases her freedom.

2. The streets of Mexico and their traffic.
3. Parade in force of the fire brigade—engines, escapes, ladders and men.
4. A military funeral. Impressive.

"THE ART LOVERS STRATEGY."—A pathetic story told in a happy way. It praises kindness without seeming to sermonize.

The struggles of artists are proverbial. In this case our hero, a young painter, has met with so much ill-fortune that both he and his sweet wife are in dire danger of starvation.

Daily he has visited the various art stores of Paris in vain attempts to market the products of his brush.

On the particular morning that our story opens the young husband starts upon his trying trip from one store to another. Now his wife, feeling she is adding to the burden he has to carry, resolves upon ending her life. Meanwhile, the husband succeeds in selling his first picture and hastens home to give his good wife the news. He arrives to find a note bidding him a fond farewell. During this time the purchaser of the painting has providentially saved the wife from suicide and takes her to his home. The wife recognizes the picture as one made by her husband.

Then the philanthropist and his daughter plan a pleasant surprise for the young artist, presumably for the purpose of having some portrait work made. The wife is not informed of his promised visit. The meeting justifies all the care in arrangement.

"A DAUGHTER OF DIXIE."—The Kalem players in their work in the South during the past two winters have come so closely in touch with Southern ideas and ideals that their portraits of life south of the Mason and Dixon line are notable for their spirit and truthfulness.

The "Daughter of Dixie's" leading part is played by Miss Gene Gauntier, the popular heroine of the Kalem "Girl Spy" series, and it is the same sweet-faced, old-fashioned girl in hoop skirts whom we see in the "Daughter of Dixie."

The opening scenes take place just as the war was being declared. Miss Betsy, the heroine, has two lovers, one of Southern tendencies, the other loyal to the North. The Northern young man has been previously favored by the girl, but when he has announced his choice he is cast aside and leaves to join the Northern army, with the idea that his sweetheart is lost to him forever. As the was is about to close, however, the action brings his regiment into the neighborhood of the girl's home, and while on special duty he is pursued by Confederates and is forced to take refuge in the girl's house. The girl, wavering between love and duty, yields to the former and the fugitive is hid in an old linen chest and his pursuers turned off the track. He is captured later on, however, and is condemned and is about to die as a spy when the news comes that the war is ended. Convinced by the girl's interference in his behalf that she still loves him, he returns to her home and claims her hand. He is not wrong in his surmise. She loves him as much as before, and he is again accepted, although not before he and his former rival, the Confederate captain, have shaken hands and have pledged to forget the past and renew the friendship of the Blue and the Gray.

The picture is particularly notable for its beautiful photography and for the accuracy of its costuming and settings.

"PURE GOLD, or HOW A BROKER FOUND HIS FORTUNE IN THE WEST."—This picture is particularly notable for the strong contrast which is drawn between the up-to-date life in the Wall street district of New York and the frenzied mining camps of the West.

In the opening scenes are shown the offices of two lifferent stock brokers on the day of a panic. As the tape reels out from the ticker one man sees his fortune vanish, while in the other office the same ticker tells the story of an honest fortune lost. The loser is the hero of the story.

In the opening scene he had proposed to a swagger New York girl and had been accepted. The girl thought him to be as wealthy and prosperous as he was young and handsome. When he goes to her after the panic, however, and tells her he is a poor man with nothing to offer her but himself, the girl is not quite so enthusiastic as before; in fact, ends the engagement then and there, and the young broker, thoroughly disheartened, decides to go West and seek a new fortune in the mining camps.

The second period of the story takes us in the gold country. A new strike has attracted to the district all kinds and conditions of men. One of the best claims has been entered by an old prospector and his daughter, a plucky, attractive young girl of the typical western type. The good fortune is no sooner known, however, than their claim is jumped by a party of "rustlers," and they would have been in a bad way had it not been for the timely arrival of the young stock broker and his outfit. Of course the young broker wins the confidence of the father and daughter and soon is established on paying claims of his own. A lucky strike follows his efforts as well, and he determines to go back East and lay his new found fortune at the feet of his former sweetheart. But when he gets back East and sees how quickly the New York girl is willing to take him up now that his fortune has been re-established, and when he recalls the true friendship of the little Western girl in the mining camp, he experiences a revulsion of feeling and back to the mining camps he goes, there to claim the hand and heart of the little Western girl, whose love he finds to be the purest gold of all.

"THE WOMAN IN THE CASE."—The West Texas Borax Company is practically insolvent. John Graham, the president, has been unable to find the white mineral in sufficient quantities to satisfy the eastern stock-holders, and a letter from his partner arrives which brings the disagreeable news that their backers are about to back out, unless, in the language of Missouri, they "are shown" something.

Graham is in a quandary and appeals to his stenographer for advice. That young woman has had so little to do in the office that she is overcome with surprise and confusion.

The postman enters and hands Graham a letter and a package. Listlessly the president opens them, but his manner changes and he leaps to his feet with a whoop of joy. There is a chance of saving the company for the sample of borax is excellent and the letter which accompanies it reads: "Boraxville, Tex., July 2, '10. President, West Texas Borax Co. Sir, am sending you sample of borax just discovered on my ranch. Will sell property at once for fair offer. Willis Johnson."

He and the stenographer rush to a map on the wall and find that Boraxville is not so far away. Graham leaves the room to prepare for his journey and a rival in business, Francis Murray, enters. He sends his card to Graham and while the stenographer is gone he looks about the room. The sample of borax attracts his attention and he discovers the letter which Graham has carelessly left lying on the table. Hurriedly he reads this, makes up his mind to possess the property himself and, when the stenographer returns, he tells her that he has no time to wait for Graham and rushes out to secure his automobile and race to Boraxville.

The quick-witted stenographer divines the situation and tells Graham when he returns. Graham has his horse saddled and rides away. On the way he is overtaken by the auto, and has little hopes of beating it, when it stops for gasoline. This gives him a brief advantage and he arrives in the neighborhood of Boraxville ahead of the car.

While he is riding along he overtakes two "greasers" who have just robbed a pretty girl of her purse. Graham is quick to the rescue, and engages in a hand to hand encounter with the two men. He succeeds in holding his own, when the auto approaches. The girl rushes to Murray and asks his aid, but he, seeing that Graham is being delayed, orders his chauffeur to proceed. Graham is forced to best the two Mexicans single-handed, which he does, and restores the purse to the young horse-woman.

In the meantime Murray has arrived at the ranch and upon inquiring for Willis Johnson, has been directed down the road which he had so recently traversed.

He drives back and comes upon Graham escorting the young woman home having given up hopes of seeing the unknown Willis Johnson ahead of his rival. He is surprised when Murray rushes up to the young woman and makes an offer for the borax property and more surprised when the young woman announces that she is Willis Johnson. When Graham tells her that he is also negotiating for the property, she informs him that she will sell to no other on account of his gallant conduct in rescuing her. She also denounces Murray for his cowardice and greed, and the discomfited rival sulkily enters his car and is driven away, while Graham progresses happily in his role of cavalier and magnate.

"BREAKING UP ICE IN FINLAND."—The port of Helsingfors is in the grip of ice and frost, and a wide expanse of frozen water meets the eye with vessels held fast in the ice. Great icebreaking vessels swing slowly out of the port, plough through the frozen field and masses of splintered ice fly on either side of the thin furrow of water left in the wake of their stern. The icebreakers' work is not yet finished, however, for ships caught in the ice have to be assisted and towed back to dock.

"GETTING EVEN WITH THE LAWYER,"—Herbert Brief is a successful and respectable lawyer. He has fallen in love with Norah, the daughter of parents, who look upon him as a model of all the virtues. Norah, however, against the wishes of her parents has a great liking for Fred Dauber, a penniless artist. Dauber has a lady friend, who, like himself, is a student of art. To her he confides his troubles and begs her to help him. She agrees, and a note is dispatched by her to the barrister. In it she professes her admiration for his eloquence and makes an appointment to meet him after he comes from court. Herbert meets her and is persuaded into going to her studio, where he is lured into posing as a model in fancy dress. Other students come in, and when the fun is at its highest Norah and her parents enter. Bitter is the disillusion of the latter as they gaze upon their prospective son-in-law and his company, and Dauber seizing his opportunity obtains the consent of Norah's parents to his marriage to their daughter.

"ON THE ETHIOPIAN FRONTIER."—The first picture has been taken on a feast day, and a group of savages seated around a fire and hacking at the meat taken from the roast is clearly shown. Then follows a remarkable picture. A number of birds are devouring the remains of a hippopotamus, when a sportsman take aim at one of them. His shot reaches its mark, but before his attendant can reach the "game" a crocodile has seized the wounded bird as it lies on the bank and carried it off. Turning from this scene we come upon a more novel kind of sport, which is none other than the native method of spearing fish, extremely fruitful, and very interesting to watch.

"DETECTIVE'S DREAM."—Padlock Soames, famous detective, worried by his non-success in the capture of Slippery, the notorious thief, falls asleep and dreams that a defiant challenge by the criminal to catch him meets his eye in the columns of a newspaper. In his dream the detective believes himself to be possessed of a magic mirror on the surface of which is reflected every action of the thief; that he accepts the challenge with equanimity, and that by means of this valuable glass he is enabled to baffle Slippery in every ruse which he adopts.

Physically, however, Padlock finds he is not a match for the agile thief, and although he engages in several struggles with him, one of which takes place on the surface of a broad sheet of water, he is in every case

"TOMMY GETS HIS SISTER MARRIED."—Alas! poor Gwendolin, she cannot marry the man of her choice and she won't marry the man of her father's picking, and things are in a bad way in the household of Laff. Needless to say that Gwendolin is meeting Archibald clandestinely near the pines, and one sweet day Tommy Laff intrudes his roguish self into their midst, as 'twere, and finding them saddened by the news that John Bowlimbs, the father's choice for a son-in-law, is about to arrive, he announces a plan to rescue the languishing damsel and the love-lorn youth from their unhappy position.

In the next scene, John arrives. He has been well named. His legs give evidence of the fact that he was brought up on a barrel. John's reception is varied—by the parents' cordial, by the young lady decidedly frigid and by the youngster with vociferous delight. Speedily follows the greatest series of heart-breaking, side-splitting episodes that ever the mind of young America devised for the discomfort of others. The power of resistance in John, however, seems inexhaustible, and it is only when Tommy rushes to the street and calling the nearest police officer tells him that there is a crazy man upstairs that the persistent spirit of John is overcome. Between John and the officer of the law ensues one of the prettiest rough-and-tumbles ever witnessed, in which the combatants roll all over the floor in the hall, on which Tommy has thoughtfully spread strip after strip of sticky fly-paper. Once John is out of the house quiet reigns again, and Archibald arriving at this opportune moment, presses his suit with better success, as the distracted father is now willing for anything for the sake of peace. Tommy is always welcome now at Archibald's.

"CAGLIOSTRO."—The picture opens with Cagliostro in the laboratory of the alchemist, Athlotas, his instructor in magic. The latter predicts to his pupil that his fate is interwoven with that of a Gypsy girl, Lorenza. Cagliostro first meets her in a cafe, where he picks a quarrel with the Chevalier D'Oisement, who is conversing with her and wounds him in the duel that ensues. Lorenza tries to intervene between the duellists, but Cagliostro by mesmeric influence forces her to be still, and after carries her to his home, where seeing that she is an excellent hypnotic subject he compels her to act as a medium. Lorenza predicts the French revolution and the death of Marie Antoinette. Cagliostro aided by Lorenza gains celebrity and repute, and is commanded to give an exhibition of his magic before the King, Louis XVI and his Queen, Marie Antoinette. The latter delighted with the strange wonderful things, requests to be allowed to read her own future in the crystal. Cagliostro refuses, but is compelled to obey the Queen's command, and raising the glass to her eyes she reads in it the story of her doom. The King, wild with anger, orders him to be seized, and at the same moment the chief of the police appears to denounce him. The Chevalier D'Oisement had not forgotten Cagliostro, and after obtaining proof of his magical practices had finally accused him to the chief of the police as a sorcerer. In his cell Cagliostro is haunted by visions of the marriage of Lorenza to the Chevalier, and this remarkable man, who really loved the Gypsy girl passionately, seeks relief in death by means of a poison ring rather than wait for the judicial sentence of death, which in that prejudiced period he felt sure would be his fate. The character of Lorenza is portrayed admirably by Mlle. Napierkowska, the graceful dancer of the Paris Opera House, whose previous appearance in filmdom was as the messenger in Cleopatra.

"A MAD DOG SCARE."—Josiah Brown and a few of the small town lights are seated in front of the village grocery arguing the merits and demerits of the present Congress when their attention is called to an article in the "Weekly Bugle" just published, warning the populace to beware of mad dogs. Each of the four remembers seeing the dogs in question and begin to feel shaky. A city chap, a drummer from the East, who had arrived the night before, sees an opportunity to wake up Sleepy Hollow and at the expense of the superstitions of the corner grocery clientele. Accordingly he enlists the services of the town pump comedian and they tie tin cans to the two most ferocious looking dogs in the village who at once start on a rampage, running over people and creating more excitement than a circus parade in Mudville. Josiah big and fat was a special mark for the frenzied dog and in the excitement loses a half yard from his trousers. He is more than sure that he was bitten. The whole town is in a turmoil. Going home, the family fly from the house, finally almost exhausted from excitement, he is roped by the populace and tied on a chair. The town constable set as a death watch to see that he does not chew the ropes off. The dog is killed and shipped for examination. Three days later a telegram is received that the dog had no hydrophobia, but only suffering from a case of fleas. Joshua is released amid general tumult and returns to the fond embraces of his family.

"THE COWBOY'S STRATAGEM."—Bob loves Mab and his love is returned, but as usual, the course of true love fails to run smooth. Bob and two of his cowboy friends go on a fishing and hunting trip in the Platte River bottoms. On their way they stop at the Post Office. An eastern lady cut horseback riding stops to ask Bob for directions, Mab sees Bob apparently paying marked attention to the lady. Her jealously is aroused. Bob follows her home, explains, and the cloud blows over. Bob pops the question, Mab accepts and the ring is given.

The Eastern lady's horse runs away with her, Bob makes a heroic rescue and Mab for the second time in one day finding cause for jealously, returns Bob's ring and goes away in anger. Bob's companions come upon a bear, and as Steve's gun fails to work, the boys return to camp and find Bob in a good humor to vent his anger on a bear or anything else that will prove an outlet for his feelings.

After finding and shooting the bear, Bob hits on a happy scheme to square matters with Mab and it is this plan that gives our picture story its name, "A Cowboy's Stratagem." It's a "corker" and for genuine merit and scenic environment will be found a true Selig, consequently in a class by itself.

VITAGRAPH CO.

UNCLE TOM'S CABIN.—Part One.—The incidents of this story are some of those preceding and leading up to the civil war in 1861 and the Declaration of Emancipation.

The central figure in the drama is Uncle Tom, a slave in the possession of the Shelbys of Kentucky. Tom is a peculiarly extraordinary character possessing all the virtues and none of the bad qualities of his race, a possession brought about by a gradual realization, absorption and practice of Christian principles through a close study of the Bible.

To the Shelbys he is an invaluable asset, because of his honesty and trustworthiness. Mr. Shelby, although owner of vast estates, has become greatly involved in debt, as is often the case with aristocracy. His notes have come into the hands of a slave trader named Haley, who presses Shelby for money long overdue. While visiting Shelby on one of his periodic "duns," he agrees to purchase "Uncle Tom" and Harry, a child of a quadroon, Eliza, Mrs. Shelby's maid.

It is a hard bargain, but necessity, which is apt to drive to extremes, succumbs and the deal is made. Eliza overhears the transaction, and, loving her child with all her heart, decides to flee with him to the Ohio side of the river. She escapes from the house during the night, goes to "Uncle Tom's" cabin and tells him and his wife, "Aunt Chloe," all about her trouble, and also Tom has been sold to the slave dealer, and advises him to get away while there is yet time. Tom, feeling it his bounden duty to live up to the tenets of his sale as well as his own conscience, refuses, but blesses Eliza and wishes her Godspeed.

When Haley discovers the flight of Eliza he is frantic, and, calling into service some of Shelby's slaves and the ever-ready bloodhounds, he starts in pursuit of his prey. Eliza has made her way with her dear little Harry clapsed to her bosom to the banks of the Ohio river in a driving snowstorm, with the piercing cold winds carrying the baying of the bloodhounds to her ears as they follow mercilessly in her tracks. The ferryboats are not running, and the boatment who usually ply their traffic across the river are afraid to encounter the fierce storm and the ice floes at the risk of their produce and their own lives.

Spurred on by mother love and courage born of liberty and protection of the helpless, Eliza unhesitatingly jumps down the river's bank onto a large cake of floating ice, which rafts her down the stream, then from one piece of ice to another she leaps like a deer until she reaches the Ohio side of the river, where she is assisted up the bank and seeks shelter for herself and child.

Haley and his negro aides are baffled in the capture of their quarry. Haley is furious; the negroes delighted, and while Haley goes to the tavern to appease his wrath the darkies show their pleasure in fits of laughter, and return to the Shelby place to report Eliza's escape. Haley, after a night of it in company with Marks, the lawyer, and Tom Rorer, a human bloodhound, goes back to take possession of "Uncle Tom," by the sale of whom he hopes to make up the loss of Harry.

Uncle Tom, after a last farewell to his wife and little pickinnies, and a hearty good-bye from young "Mars" George Shelby, who promises he will purchase "Tom" himself some day, gets into Haley's wagon, shackled hand and foot, with a sad heart but Christian resignation, bids farewell forever to his old Kentucky home.

"UNCLE TOM'S CABIN."—Part Two—Haley, with Uncle Tom and his other slaves, boards the steamboat and starts down the Mississippi for Louisiana. On the boat going home from a visit to Vermont is Mr.

Augustine St. Clare with his little daughter Eva, a beautiful child of delicate temperament, and a maiden aunt named "Miss Ophelia." On the way down the river poor Tom makes himself helpful and cheerfully obliging to everybody, lending a hand with the freight and saying a kind and courteous word whenever spoken to.

Whenever he can find time he reads in his laboring way his Bible which is a source of great comfort to him. Eva is especially attracted to Tom. He has his pocket stored with odd toys of his own manufacture which furnishes her great amusement during the long and tedious progress of the boat. One day Eva falls overboard. Uncle Tom with unhesitating courage jumps into the river and brings her safely back to the boat.

This cements her attachment for Tom. She begs her father to buy him for her own. The father, always ready to satisfy her every wish, makes a deal with Haley, and Tom is purchased for Eva who makes him her companion and attendant. "Miss Ophelia," although a Northerner, is shocked at the readiness with which Eva associates and confides in Tom, but as she learns afterward it is not misplaced and well deserved.

The St. Clares arrive at their home in New Orleans. Tom is initiated as a member of the household and while officially the coachman he is personally the body guard of Eva and he is her constant "fides achates." We can see the sensitive nature and constitution of the child gradually succumbs to the climatic changes and the rackings of the severe cough and cold which has settled upon her lungs. Her father decides to move the family and household to his country home, where he hopes Eva will improve and get well.

It is here we are introduced to "Topsy," a coal black little negress whom St. Clare buys for "Miss Ophelia" to call her own and bring up in the way she would have her go. From this time on to the close of the film "Topsy" is a noticeable and amusing person.

For two years Uncle Tom's life with the St. Clare is an uninterrupted dream, excepting the thoughts of his separation from his dear old wife and his children. After two years Eva's illness becomes so bad she appears to be undergoing a process of translation and looks more like a vision of immortality in the midst of mortal things. Often she talks with Uncle Tom about Heaven with an understanding that makes Tom think, and everybody else for that matter, that she is not long for this world. These suppositions are well founded, for it is not long before Eva is seen on her bed surrounded by her parents, Aunt Ophelia, Uncle Tom and the servants of the family. She bids each one good-bye, giving each some little keepsake, then peacefully passes away to join the other angels in Heaven.

"UNCLE TOM'S CABIN." — Part Three. — The sorrow following the death of little Eva has scarcely passed when the house of St. Clare is again thrown into mourning by the death of Mr. St. Clare, who was stabbed while trying to stop a quarrel between two men. Mr. St. Clare had promised Uncle Tom his freedom, in anticipation of which he is inspired with new hope and great ambition to work for the liberation of his wife and children, but all this is doomed by his master's untimely end, and all the servants of the St. Clare place are sold to speculators and other masters.

Tom is sold to Legree, who is brutal in the extreme, and treats poor Tom with little less consideration than a dog. Legree has established as his mistress Cassie, a quadroon slave, whom he treats as badly as he dares, for she has a strong influence over him and despises him with a heartiness that she cannot hide. One day, working in the cotton field, Cassie meets Uncle Tom, and is impressed by his generosity and gentleness of spirit and his all-abiding faith in God.

At the same time Legree bought Tom he bid in a young mulatto girl named Emmeline, whom he also introduced into his household to displace Cassie, whom he tries to relegate again to the cotton picking rank of slaves. Emmeline likes Cassie, abhors Legree, and keeps as far from him as possible. Tom is subjected to every sort of indignation and uncomplainingly does his duty. It is not until he is asked to flog a poor slave girl that he refuses to obey his master, and is himself unmercifully whipped by Legree and two of his slaves.

Cassie finds life with Legree unbearable, and hates him with an indescribable intensity. She plans to accomplish escape for herself and Emmeline, and asks Uncle Tom to go with them, but he refuses to leave while others suffer for no more reason than himself. Cassie plays upon Legree's superstition and fear, in reality, he is an arrant coward, and she makes him believe there are ghosts in the garret of his house, and when she and Emmeline take flight and he pursues them with bloodhounds and slaves, the women retrace their steps, after passing through the swamps to throw the dogs off the trail, and return to the garret, where they remain for three days and make good their escape when favorable opportunity presents itself after Legree has given them up as gone.

Legree, filled with rage, for want of better excuse accuses Uncle Tom of knowing something about Cassie's escape and being party to it. Tom denies that he had any hand in it, and refuses to reveal his knowledge of it. Legree vents his spite and cussedness by administering a severe beating to Tom and felling him with a severe blow.

Young Shelby, who promised Tom at the time his father sold him to Haley that he would repurchase him as soon as he could, now comes to Legree's place to buy him back. Too late! Poor Tom has gone to his eternal freedom to dwell with his Master, Who makes no distinction in color, creed or class and prepareth a place for all those who love Him and keep His Commandments, and of Whom Tom was a faithful disciple.

"THE CALL TO ARMS."—No period of the world's history is so attractive as the Mediaeval. It was so fraught with picturesque romance that the mere mention conjures up thoughts of brave warriors, noble women, love and sacrifice. But as in every other time the good had always to battle with the evil. The moral of this Biograph production is the powerful influence of covetousness. When cupidity is aroused there is seldom any counteracting element in the human make-up strong enough to dispel it. Hence it was that when the Feudal Lord and his bride were visited by their cousin at a time when this Lord was presenting to his bride the family heirloom—the Great Ruby of Irskaat, the cousin coveted it, and was determined to secure it. The lord receives a call to arms, and in this the cousin sees a way to achieve his design. The lord, however, appreciating the danger of leaving this valuable jewel unguarded, buries it in a secluded part of the grounds. His soldiers now assembled, he departs, leaving his wife to the care of his trusted servants. No sooner has he left than the cousin returns with the subterfuge that he will stay at the palace guarding the wife until the lord's return. This the wife at first appreciates, believing his tender well meant. Surreptitiously he rids the palace of the servants, placing his own in their stead. The poor woman is now in the absolute power of this despicable villain. By entreaties and threats he tries to make her divulge the whereabouts of the ruby, but he finds her adamant. Not wishing to use violence, he will pursue another course—flattery and wine. While he gets the wine, the wife writes a note and dispatches her page, whom she discovers in the garden beneath her window, to her husband with it. Off the page goes on a mad dash, only to become exhausted before the end of the journey. Meeting a band of gypsies they give the boy refreshments. The drink induces sleep and when the boy awakes he finds several hours have elapsed. Arriving at the lord's tent, he delivers the missive and the lord leaps into the saddle and dashes towards the palace. In her endeavor to keep the traitorous cousin at bay the wife has accidentally fallen headlong from one of the parapets of the palace to the walk below. Out rushes the cousin, only to find that the fall resulted fatally. He carries her inanimate form in, and now he fully realizes the enormity of his deed and falls cowering at the foot of the altar in the little chapel. At this moment the lord dashes up. Entering, he finds his wife cold in death. Stunned for a moment, he rushes into the next room, where the cousin grovels, with one object in mind—vengeance.

"UNEXPECTED HELP."—We should not place too much confidence in our will power, by going too close to the edge of propriety, feeling sure of our power of resistance. While the spirit is willing, the flesh is weak, but our will may most time whip the flesh to be submissive to the spirit, still conditions may occur to make us helpless tools of our inclinations. Hence, absolute avoidance is safer than power of resistance. John Bradley is a trusted clerk with an oil company. Enjoying a fair salary, he is comfortably fixed in a modest little village home with his wife and two small children. Starting from home in the morning he is accompanied by the two little ones, who always looked forward to each morning's scamper in the hills with pleasurable anticipation. He is met at the office door by the manager and handed a large sum of money, with instructions to carry it to the bank. This is witnessed by a well known gambler of the town, who, being in hard luck, resolves to get that money by hook or crook. Making a short cut across the little town, he manages to intercept John on his way to the bank, and in the course of their conversation invites him to have a drink, as it is half an hour before the bank opens. The invitation is accepted and while in the saloon the gambler tries to inveigle John into a game, but here his will serves him and he resists the fascination. However, he drinks at the serving of the gambler and is the next moment sitting helpless in a chair. The drink was "fixed." When he awakes they all pretend he lost the money at the card table. The influence of the gambler makes this story believed even by the United States marshal, to whom he appeals. The poor wife is beside herself with grief when John tells of his misfortune, so she goes about the town imploring her friends' aid in her husband's behalf. They, of course, have heard such stories before, and give her little heed until she meets the parish priest and his assistant. They listen to her tale of woe, and having on them pistols, which they carry for protection while passing over the hills, feel sure of getting at the truth of the situation with these terrifying implements. Making their way to the saloon, they take the gambler unawares. Under the menace of these two big six-shooters, his hands go up, and while his assistant and the wife hold the guns the old priest searches the gambler, regaining the purse of money intact. This the wife joyously carries to her husband, who takes it off to bank. The old priest, however, admonishes John, warning him to avoid such chances in the future. It is needless to say that John has been taught a lesson.

"PEG WOFFINGTON."—The stage has given us throughout the centuries certain characters whose names are household words. Peg Woffington lived and delighted the public over one hundred and fifty years ago, yet the charm of her personality has kept her memory bright up to the present generation. Peg was beloved by many men, yet Cupid's darts had failed to pierce her heart. Many offers were made to her and all were rejected until the incident of the present story.

Two men, Sir Charles Pomander and Ernest Vane, both fall in love with Peg at the same time. Pomander's offer, on account of the manner in which it is made, Peg resents as an insult. Vane's, on the other hand, is agreeable to her, for she falls desperately in love with this handsome young country gentleman.

All goes well, and Peg thinks Vane's love is honorable and that he intends to make her his wife. Great then is her surprise when, at a banquet given in her honor at Vane's home, Mrs. Vane unexpectedly arrives. Peg, not knowing who she is, and seeing the strange woman rush into the arms of her suitor, asks: "Who is this woman?" "This is my wife" is the reply which transfixes Peg as if she were struck by a thunderbolt. Mrs. Vane asks her husband to introduce her to the company and he tries to give some excuse. Peg, concealing her feelings beneath a brave air, steps into the breach and introduces the entire assemblage, saving the day for Vane and permitting the company to withdraw gracefully. Vane tries to explain matters to Peg and suggests that they elope, but she spurns him and his offer. Pomander, seeing the breach between Vane and his pretty, charming wife, attempts to make love to the latter and receives from her the same treatment that Vane did from Peg.

In his anger Pomander tells Mrs. Vane of the attentions which her husband has paid to the famous actress, Peg Woffington. He then withdraws. As Mrs. Vane is about to leave the room Peg and Vane enter. They do not see her as she is in the doorway. Vane is pleading with Peg to go away with him. The scene is interrupted by Mrs. Vane coming toward her husband and, after upbraiding him, fainting in the midst of her angry outburst. Peg views the scene before her with mingled emotion. She still loves Vane, though she has rejected him, and sneers somewhat at the sentiment of the wife.

We next see Peg in the green room of a theatre trying to study the lines of her part. Mrs. Vane is ushered in and pleads with Peg to give up her husband. Peg at first is inclined to be cold, and the other woman sobs in her despair. Peg is moved to pity and, taking Mrs. Vane in her arms, she promises that she will help her. The question now is how a reconciliation can be effected between Vane and his wife. A brilliant idea suggests itself to the mind of Peg. She writes a letter to Pomander under Mrs. Vane's signature, in which she asks him to meet her (Mrs. Vane) at the rooms of Triplet, the playwright, at two o'clock the following day. Mrs. Vane objects to the sending of this note until Peg explains the nature of the trick. Peg writes another letter to Vane, telling him that if he wishes to save scandal to his name he will be at the rooms of Triplet the following day at two o'clock. This letter is signed, "A Friend."

Mrs. Vane now becomes a willing confederate of Peg's. Triplet, by the way, is a poor playwright with whom Peg has made an appointment to read one of his tragedies. His home is in a garret, and Peg comes there the next day before two o'clock for a reading of the play. We see the generosity and bounty of Peg in the way in which she relieves the distress of Triplet, his wife and children, and makes the poor man happy, for the moment at least. When Triplet finishes reading his tragedy Peg expresses her delight with it, and indicates to him that it is a work of art. At this point Mrs. Vane arrives, and Peg explains to Triplet that she wishes to receive some friends in the room. Triplet withdraws. Peg disguises herself in Mrs. Vane's cloak and sends Mrs. Vane out of the room.

Having received their separate letters the men concerned arrive in proper order. Pomander thinks he is making love to the wife of his friend and is becoming very ardent in his declarations when the indignant husband dashes into the room. The two men are about to fight with swords, when Peg casts off her disguise and brings each man to a full realization of the error of his ways. Vane, who has learned to value the affeciton of his true wife, is happy when she comes to his arms, and Pomander, the foppish villain of the story, is politely shown the door. Happiness comes to all save Peg, whose heart has received a wound which only her great ability as an actress enables her to conceal.

This story is a splendid vehicle for comedy, pathos and dramatic climax. None of these elements have been neglected, and every detail of the picture is splendidly depicted both from a photographic and dramatic standpoint.

"AN UNEXPECTED REWARD"—In this picture little Dan Cupid plies his trade beneath Southern skies and waving palms, and in such a dainty and fascinating manner that one almost feels the soft balm of the tropical breezes; while the faint scent of roses and violets might almost be felt creeping from out of the canvas of this charming love story, "The Unexpected Reward," which happened one day in spring when a fair pink and white miss had reached the alluring age of sweet eighteen. Upon her birthday her father presents her with a beautifully carved bracelet. Scarcely have the blushes of pride died away when a dapper young suitor for her hand arrives with an invitation for an auto ride to the seaside. Soon the gay party arrives at the beach. An hour has scarcely passed before the young miss and her girl friend are disporting themselves in the water.

Suddenly the father hears a cry of alarm! Yonder, far out at sea, his daughter is waving signals of distress and is being swept farther and farther seaward by a heavy undertow. At once the fond parents turn for help to the girl's suitor, but he fails to be equal to the occasion. Fearing for his own safety he refuses to go. A stranger hears the appeal for aid and seeing the dangerous position of the girl, in a moment strips of hat and coat and dives head first into the water from the pier. The long, steady strokes of the swimmer soon prove to the frantic mother and father that he will reach the girl in time. The surf is stronger than they reckoned, however, and before the swimmer can reach her side she gives up from sheer exhaustion and sinks beneath the waves. A moment of despair and then the watchers on the shore see the rescuer dive under the water and bring forth the limp body to the surface. After a hard swim back to shore willing hands drag them both to safety.

An hour later the girl has revived and the party is returning home when the daughter discovers that she has lost her bracelet. This fact comes to the ears of her brave rescuer, and he decides to recover the lost article if possible. He succeeds in doing so, too, after numerous dives around the spot where she sank and where the bracelet had fallen from her wrist in her struggle for life. Needless to say the bracelet is returned to the fair owner, greatly to the chagrin and anger of her cowardly suitor, who quickly sees that the hero of the seaside is fast holding full sway in the thoughts and mind of this fair miss of eighteen.

The cowardly gallant decides to humiliate his proud rival before the eyes of the girl at the earliest opportunity, which chances to be the following day. While out driving with the young lady they chance to meet the finder of the bracelet and, driving up to the curb, the dainty miss insists on again thanking her rescuer. The jealous suitor succeeds in humiliating his rival so that hot words are exchanged, and in a fit of rage at the fond admiration for the manly young fellow which the girl so plainly shows the coward raises his whip to strike. The next moment it is wrenched from him by fair hands, and sweet young lips, hot with anger, politely inform him that he may drive on alone, which he does in a towering rage. Her hands are placed in that of her hero—a quick glance of love, and he knows that all is well for him.

A few days later little Dan Cupid inveigles the two into a visit to a shady nook in the garden by the fountain; and what the fishes saw they never told, but the bees among the flowers heard the faintest sound of a kiss and only buzzed the louder to drown the sound of others that they knew would follow.

This picture is a dainty, simple love story of beauty and charm, and brings back to us all the memory of the days when we were sweet eighteen and brave twenty-one and life had a kiss waiting for us somewhere at the close of the long summer day.

"BUMPTIOUS AS AN AVIATOR."—Our amusing little friend Bumptious again makes his appearance, and shows his versatility by entering the field of aeronautics. Needless to say he starts in with his usual unlimited confidence, and in the course of the picture again illustrates humorously the adage that "Fools rush in where angels fear to tread." This time it is not a matter of expense which starts him on the road to a conquest of the air, but the seeing of the successful flight of one of the world's famous aviators. The expression of wonder and amusement from his wife and other of the town folk naturally jar upon his sensitive nature, and he assures them that the whole thing is very simple and that he could probably do better if he tried.

He does try, and succeeds in building a most simple and artistic looking aeroplane of his own, which after a private view by his particular friends is taken to a roof top and poised for flight. Of course a large crowd gathers, and after a brief dissertation on the beauties of his own machine little Bumptious takes his seat and starts the machinery. To his delight the aeroplane flies over the edge of the house and sails off into the ambient atmosphere. What he does not know is that far above him in the blue sky floats a big balloon, from which dangles a rope with an anchor is caught at the end of it, and that this anchor is caught in the top of his aeroplane and had gently but firmly assisted in its launching. His friends take in the situation and it causes them great joy. We see successive views of the areoplane dangling from the balloon and the perturbation of the two balloonists above, and finally of little Bumptious dangling from the front of the aeroplane in midair in a vain attempt to reach the ground, hundreds of feet below him. His motor spins the propeller around aimlessly in the air above him, and the next thing we see is a sudden descent. He lands in a heap in a grassy place, fragments of the ruined aeroplane strewing themselves over him in wild disorder, and this is followed by the alighting of the two ballonists close by, who no sooner strike terra firma than they proceed to wreak revenge upon the cause of their trouble, who is struggling to free himself from the debris. Their anger is so great that while they are engaged in pummeling our somewhat stout friend Bumptious they fail to note that their balloon has sailed away and left them; but they take it out of him finally and with such a thoroughness as to give him ample cause for the discouragement which is apparent when we see him limping home through the sunset, down and along a stretch of country road.

If Bumptious previous predicaments have been laugh provcking, the present picture must surely be counted in vaudeville parlance "a riot"; and were any evidence needed to prove that the Edison Company is producing the brightest and most original comedies of the day this picture should offer it and settle the question.

ESSANAY FILM MFG. CO.

"A FAIR EXCHANGE."—Here is a scream comedy film, typical of all the Essanay's hilarious laughgetters.

The story starts with an accident in the kitchen of Dr. Nokure's home, when a water pipe bursts. Bridget discovers the leak and hurries off to tell her mistress about it. After further examination on the part of this latter and the cook Mrs. Nokure does the next best thing in telephoning to the plumber, advising him to rush somebody up to fix the pipe immediately.

Mr. Plummer calls out his force of able men and tells them to hurry up to the doctor's house. "Just take your time about it boys—we need the money." With significant nods the little army of six plumbers hurry out to the scene of action.

When they arrive they investigate the leak, merely a small crack above the hydrant, and go into consultation as to how it can best be fixed. During this important prelude to the actual work "Shorty" is rushed out to a nearby saloon for beer. Finally all agree it will be necessary to begin somewhere in the parlor and there they go and begin rummaging lazily about the room, tearing up the carpets and otherwise destroying order in the house. Mrs. Nokure finally finds them loafing on the job and sends them back to the kitchen. Then she calls up her husband and informs him about what the plumbers are not doing.

In the kitchen Mr. Plummer's force contrives to do everything but mend the leak in the pipe, but when Dr. Nokure comes on the scene every plumber's son of them is working with all his stored up energy. The doctor, however, is finally soused with a spray from the leak and beats a hurried retreat. However, there is an end to everything and after four or five hours of pottering around and killing time, the leak is mended and the robbers make their departure to report to their chief.

The next day Doctor Nokure is enraged when he scans the figures of the plumber's bill. The whole amounts to some $411.44. The doctor takes his troubles to the plumber but this individual argues that the figures are correct.

A week later Mr. Plummer limps into his office and drops weakly into a chair. He is suffering with all sorts of pains and when his wife enters a few minutes later she immediately advises him to go see a doctor. "Ah." thinks he, "here's a chance to get some money on that bill, or at least get my money's worth!"

He is helped into the doctor's office by his wife and a clerk and the doctor hurriedly makes an examination. During the course of the examination the doctor is planning a brilliant stroke for revenge and, calling his assistant aside, he tells him to hurry out and bring in a force of some six or seven medical students.

Then Mr. Plummer is forced into the operating chair bound and gagged and strapped securely, while the doctor and his assistants get busy. Before the job is through Mr. Plummer has received all sorts of treatment, good and bad, from the pulling of a tooth to a shoe shine. He leaves the place swathed in bandages and is advised not to become excited at anything on the penalty of death.

A week later Dr. Nokure delivers his bill for the sum of $411.44 with a carefully itemized list, which is exceedingly humorous in itself. He is about to storm out of the office, but remembers he must not get excited so he goes peaceably and enters the doctor's office to make inquiry about the bill.

The two men argue, then exchange bills. The accounts balance. Seeing the humor of the situation both burst into hearty laughter.

"A PERSONAL MATTER."—Here is an uproarious little comedy farce which should tickle the risibilities of the most particular and critical people. It is released with "A Fair Exchange" and completes a reel of excellent comedy film.

Our hero Henry has been into mischief again as we are informed when he does a few capers over a certain personal advertisement which he has clipped from the newspaper. This item reads:

"Will gentlemen in light checked suit, white derby hat, Main street car, Tuesday afternoon, meet lady in pink at the fountain in the park, Wednesday at 4 o'clock?"

Now, Henry was the chap who had met the lady on the Main street car at the time specified in the note and he recalls now with joyous recollection that happy meeting. However, further than this we are not told what occurred but the case is clear; Henry is wanted to be seen again by this fair lady.

Mrs. Henry comes into the room as Henry is clipping the item from the paper and notes with suspicion his happy smile. She demands an explanation and he gives it to her in the statement that he has just discovered a bargain in his choice havana cigars. This satisfies his wife for a time and Henry hies himself off to the bedroom to make ready for the meeting in the afternoon.

Dragging out his checked suit and derby hat, he hurries to the kitchen, puts an iron on the stove and proceeds to make creases in the trousers. His wife, however, is unable to contain her suspicion and goes out to purchase a newspaper which contains the personal.

During her absence Henry busies himself fixing up his clothes, but as he is in the midst of this process the telephone bell rings and he hurries out to answer it. While he is gone a tramp steals into the kitchen, purloins the suit, the derby hat and other of Henry's attire and makes away with them.

Henry returns and finds the suit gone and realizing that he cannot now keep the appointment he dons his business suit and goes to his office.

The tramp in the meantime has found the personal in the coat of the light checked suit and resolves to keep the appointment with the lady himself. But at the appointed time Mrs. Henry comes on the scene and what follows is sad to relate for the tramp. Henry has come on the scene and rescues his frustrated wife from police, after she has discovered that the gentleman in the checked suit is not her inconstant Henry. The tramp thief, however, does not get away so easy and after restoring the clothes to Henry he is taken away by various offiicers of the law.

Broncho Billy, our hero in this instance, is a bad man of the first water, cattle rustler, black knight of the road, and his depredations number countless midnight raids on stray cattle bunches, stage hold-ups in lonesome mountain passes, and a few "shooting-up" affairs. However, Billy's record is getting too strong for even the sheriff of the county and a posse is organized to take the bad man in his lair. Yet Billy does not lack friends as is evidenced by the following note from an unknown friend:

Friend Broncho: The Vigilantes Committee suspect you of cattle rustling. The sheriff is on your trail. You will stretch a hemp if you are caught. A Friend.

Words go a long way in the West and Billy, who has received the note at his shack saddles his pony and rides away.

An hour later he draws rein at a prairie schooner outfit, pulled up under the trees of a little grove, the horses cropping the grass round about and a sweet faced young girl cooking coffee over a campfire. In the wagon an old man is lying and he is informed by the girl that her "daddy" is sick. She offers Broncho a cup of coffee which he accepts with thanks, then mounts into his saddle and hurries on his way.

We return again to Millie Merrill, the girl of the prairie schooner, who has broken camp, hooked up the horses and is driving away. As evening comes on, Millie halts at the door of a shack, untenanted, investigates and finds it will prove habitable and more comfortable for her sick father. This latter has grown constantly worse and his exertion in getting out of the wagon has used up all his little strength. He drops in a heap on the shanty floor and the girl, apprehensive and worried, goes to the door and looks out. Just then Broncho Billy rides into view, she signals him and turning his horse he hurries up to her. She explains, when they enter the shack that her father is in a very grave condition, that they are without medicine, and begs him to ride to town and fill her prescription. Broncho Billy realizes that to return to town will mean his capture and death and he tells her so. However, he takes the prescription and says that if he cannot find another messenger he will go himself.

Billy rides off and comes across a Mexican. He explains to the latter and asks him to go to town for the medicine. The Mexican's eyes twinkle when he sees the silver and he nods his head, but as Broncho Billy rides away he tears the prescription into bits, pockets the money and goes away exultantly.

Some time later Billy passes a herd of cattle and the old desire to rustle takes the better of him. But as he is stealing off with the bunch he again comes across the prairie schooner and believing something to be wrong crosses over to it. It is empty and the horses with the lines under their feet are cropping the grass. Broncho turns the cattle loose, dismounts from his nag and mounts the seat of the wagon. Then he drives back to the shack, pounds on the door and receiving no answer to his knocking bursts down the door and finds the man and his daughter stretched out on the rougn board floor, apparently unconscious. Under the intense strain of caring for her father and assuming command of the caravan she, too, has fallen ill.

Broncho Billy curses the thieving Mexican who had stolen the money, carries the two into the wagon and mounting the seat, whips the horses into a gallop. Some time later he draws up in town, jumps from the wagon and throws up his hands as the guns of the sheriff and his posse are leveled at his head. He indicates and wagon and the two sick persons are taken out and carried into the doctor's office. Then he turned to the sheriff and holds out his hands but this officer of the peace hesitates about putting the handcuffs on his captive and finally ends by telling Billy he is free to go if he will promise to mend his ways. The bad man, redeemed, shakes the sheriff's hand and gives his promise.

"THE STEP-DAUGHTER."—A strongly dramatic story which moves interestingly toward a satisfactory and unexpected ending. A mechanical engineer, Gordon Harvey, has married for a second time, the new wife having a daughter of about the same age as his own daughter, Mary. So long as Harvey lives there is merely the secret enmity that women know so well how to conceal, but when a telegram is received announcing the death of the engineer, all pretense is discarded and Mary becomes the household drudge, while her stepmother and Gladys enjoy the income of the comfortable fortune that Harvey left. In time the situation becomes so intolerable that Mary leaves her home and supports herself as the bookkeeper in a restaurant. Word is received from Frank Underhill that he has returned to America from Brazil and is now possessed of great wealth. He announces his intension of calling upon his childish sweetheart. Mrs. Harvey conceives the plan of substituting her own daughter for Mary, since the letter makes it plain that Underhill has not seen the girl since she was a child, and the deception proves mildly successful until they chance to visit the restaurant. The women do not see her until it is too late to retreat, but they would have escaped detection even then had not the little locket that Mary has worn constantly become detached from its slender chain. Frank restores the locket and is surprised to find it the one he gave his little playmate. Explanations follow and the wrong is righted to the satisfaction of all except Mrs. Harvey and her scheming daughter.

Hubby quietly advises cook to throw mamma out of the kitchen and after throwing her out plentiful as mother-in-laws, so he decides upon desperate deeds. He takes mamma out in the auto and fixes things so that she will fall out. He takes her horseback riding and makes mamma's horse run away. He takes her out on the lake and scuttles the boat, and there are other lively happenings. Mamma patiently submits to these various entertainments and saves hubby from a watery grave to boot, but at last she tears herself away and hubby is tickled to death at the results of his strategy. He is pluming himself upon being one of our best little planners when a letter comes from mamma. It seems that she wanted to go home the day the cook started something, but hubby was trying so hard to make things pleasant for her that she felt she had to stay on, even though hubby was not succeeding very well. Wouldn't that upset you? It upset hubby for fair.

MORE PICTURE ON OCEAN GROVE BOARDWALK.

Half of the skating rink on the South End pavilion (formerly Lillagore's), Ocean Grove, has been rented to A. M. Haddad of New York, who will shortly open it as a moving picture theatre. He will give hourly exhibitions of motion views and illustrated songs from 2 to 10 p. m., every weekday.

The inner half of the rink constitutes the picture establishment. The room is 25x85 feet and is now being fitted up and arranged for its new purpose. A partition separates the picture place from the other half or ocean side of the rink.

WATKINS WILL HAVE AIRDOME.

James P. Drake and Charles Harrington, two enterprising young managers of Watkins, Pa., have leased part of the Glen City property and are constructing an airdome, 50 x 100 feet.

It is expected the work will be completed within the next two weeks, the formal opening being dated for July 23. Only the best motion pictures will be used in connection with the vaudeville program. Both these young men are well known in their section of the state, and it is expected their new enterprise will be welcomed by all the people in Watkins.

AIRDOME FOR WALLINGFORD.

Wallingford, Conn., is soon to have an open air place of amusement. The land 250 feet square on Hall avenue west of Colony street has been leased by the Unique Amusement company. This plot of ground will be enclosed with an 8-foot fence of wire and cloth. In addition to chairs there will also be seats arranged in horseshoe form.

The stage will be at the north side. Entrance will be through the store, No. 9 Hall avenue, now occupied by the Rhymers' club. It will have for its name "Open Airdome" and it is expected to be in readiness for operation on Monday, July 11.

The program of amusement to be given will include motion pictures and illustrated songs.

ESSANAY'S WESTERN PRODUCER

of Western life. There is no saying when he and the Company will return; for, as was the case in the last trip, if the lead shows good, it will be followed until the last glimmer of precious metal has been extracted.

Mr. Anderson made his first pose before a moving picture camera years ago, when with the Edison Company. That was when 60 and 80 feet reels were the fashion. He "participated" in "The Great Train Robbery," an act for which he was never held accountable by the police authorities. His next experience was with the Vitagraph Company, when, in conjunction with J. Stuart Blackton and Albert E. Smith, "Raffles," "The Servant Girl Problem," "Sherlock Holmes," "Black and White," and various other subjects were produced.

Mr. Anderson next went to Pittsburg to establish a plant for Harry Davis, the theatrical manager, who owned, or controlled, a circuit of legitimate theatres at the time. That was about 1902. After making negatives of "The Grafter," "The Up-to-Date Messenger Boy" and "One Hundred Dollars Reward," (and prints of the last two mentioned), Mr. Davis got cold feet. He could see no future for moving pictures and discharged his working force and dismantled the factory. Afterwards, about 1903, when Mr. Anderson joined the Selig forces, "The Grafters" was re-posed and proved a big success with Selig patrons, being one of the best comedy sellers of its time.

It was while with the Selig forces, that Mr. Anderson made his first Western trip in the picture business. During that tour he produced "The Girl from Montana" (the first subject produced by him amid Western surroundings), "The Bandit King" and "Western Justice," all three proving popular.

Desiring to become interested in a film manufacturing enterprise, Mr. Anderson became associated with Geo. K. Spoor, when the Essanay Company was about to incorporate. The first year's work was confined exclusively to comedies, including "The Baseball Fan," "Mr. Inquisitive," "The Hoosier Fighter," "All's Fair in Love and War," etc., etc

Since first starting in the business, Mr. Anderson has produced 485 subjects and has written, on his own admission, a large percentage of the scenarios used by him. When asked what he considers the best work done by him, Mr. Anderson named "The Baseball Fan," as his best comedy and "Away Out West" and "The Bad Man's Last Deed" as his best Western dramas.

Mr. Anderson is now 29 years of age. He was born at Little Rock, Ark., and was reared in Pine Bluff, in the same state. His first occupation was that of cotton buyer, purchasing the product when it was hauled into the market place of the city on the bluffs from adjoining farms.

POSTERS THAT HOLD YOU UP

If the day of the old fashioned melodrama has departed into oblivion—surely like Hamlet, its ghost still lives in the shape of the billposter. To prove this fact, all one has to do is to stroll along Fourteenth street, between Broadway and Fifth avenue, New York city, and there in front of such amusement places as the Chrystal Hall and the Comedy Motion Picture Theatre, your eyes will behold such luring pieces of advertising art, as never adorned the covers of a "Jesse James" or "Nick Carter" dime novel. In fact the poet Longfellow might put it "The deeds of great men are before us."

Some might call such lurid paintings as modern advertisements. To be sure they attract the crowds—they can't help it. They are anything but an uplift to the morals of a great city like New York. Such posters might have done well in Nero's time—not ours, even then they would out-Nero, Nero.

For instance, if you should stop in front of the so-called Chrystal Hall, your eyes couldn't help but be attracted by such posters as the "Indian Sun Dance" or a scene taken from a motion picture entitled: "The Right of Labor," or "The Great Mill Strike," which was exhibited in front of the Comedy Theatre next door. Both these posters are thrillers and there is no mistake about it. They fairly hold you up.

"The Indian Sun Dance," is certainly a great piece of posteronic art, it has any painting of Frederick Remington beaten to a frazzle. The description could hardly be painted in words Here we see an Indian brave with ropes tied to his flesh ready to be led to the "test." One end of the rope is thrown over the limb of a tree—and at the signal—a number of braves and squaws are ready to pull his quivering body from the ground. In the distance we see more braves dancing the death dance in honor of the great Sun God.

It is enough to put Spartacus to shame and cause either Jeffries or Johnson to shiver like an Arctic explorer in the ice pack.

"The Right of Labor" or "The Great Mill Strike," at the Comedy theatre, is equally as lurid. Strikes come and go, but none like "The Great Mill Strike." John Mitchell or Samuel Gompers could never settle such an affair as shown by the posters.

Here we see the foreman of the mill in jail, bound and gagged; the strikers are just ready to put a dozen or more bullets in his back when the sheriff rushes in with his posse and, saves his life. Oh! its a dandy poster, and all must admit it will draw a crowd. To add to these alluring sights there are a few stabbing scenes that have the Paris Apaches beaten a mile.

the branches. The pushful Urban abroad absorbs the science of older nations, better equipped than his own, applies it and commercializes it; and this combination of push and ingestion accounts for Urban's success over Edison, the other fellow."

Talk of Urban absorption! Why its capacity is sufficient to relieve the Old and New World of the last vestige of their combined egotism, and then leave ample room for more

Yes; Urban romps. And, inflated with his absorbed, or inherent, egotism, like an escaped balloon, he rushes profanely into high places.

Some years ago, in New York, I called on the world's then greatest physicist, Lord Kelvin, who at the time was visiting in this country. My mission was to get his views on a certain scientific question for the magazine that I represented. I felt pretty small before that master mind; but he was urbanity and courtesy idealized. I shall never forget the tactful, gentle manner in which he explained that the interview must be brief, as he had an appointment to meet Mr. Edison in New Jersey; and I can still recall the look of pleasure on his face as he dwelt on the importance of that engagement and comtemplated the delight of the meeting.

It takes big brains to appreciate big brains, and genius to measure genius. And the truly great man need never waste his wind by blowing his own horn. The world does the blowing for him.

Kinemacolor is merely one of the toys that Mr. Edison turns to in his spare moments for relaxation. Where there are so many worlds to conquer, the Great Wizard cannot afford to waste his real working time on playthings.

Pastor Praises Licensed Films.

The Magnetic Film Service Co., of Cincinnati, O., writes me that the firm has furnished the Rev. F. J. Finn, Pastor of the largest Roman Catholic Church in that city, with selected films for entertainments given to the Orphans' and various other Homes, for two years past. The following letter, received from Father Finn last week, by the Magnetic Film Service Co., is convincing evidence of the refined and elevated character of licensed film subjects:

Gentlemen: I wish to thank you sincerely for the many favors you have shown me during the past year, and especially for your kindness in furnishing pictures for the Fourth of July celebration at Cummonsville for the benefit of the little orphans.

The pictures—five in number—were all high class. One was an optical poem; another an optical sermon, and the other three were good, clean comedies. About four thousand people, men, women and children, viewed these pictures, and all spoke of them in the highest terms.

These five films, chosen out of your stock with the greatest taste by yourselves, not only show the elevating work that has been done by the moving pictures, but also furnish good hope of still more wondrous possibilities.

Again thanking you for your favors, I am,

Yours sincerely,

(Signed) F. J. FINN, S. J.

A Kleine Release Puts Orchestra in Spasms.

The Seattle "Times" of July 7 had the following humorous article on a Gaumont film ("A Little German Band") which was recently exhibited in the Majestic theatre, that city:

This is the story of the psychological moving pictur and the Dutch Salome—of the moving picture that made Herr Lombard wiggle so that he could play no longer in the middle of the fiddle, and started Manager John Cooke, of the Majestic, to singing "You've Got Me Going, Kid," right there in the congregation while the show was going on.

It isn't every moving picture that attains to the dignity or importance of the theatrical criticism, but this one is different. Like the advertisement for the bum coffee, "There's a reason." Any time a simple little film can break up an orchestra, make John Cooke sing and cause Tom Considine to do what is nothing more or less than a plain mariuche, all right out in the presence of the company, it has a criticism coming to it.

The man up in the "conning tower" at the Majestic pulled the film for the first time yesterday. And it didn't look like much of a film, either—at the start; it was the finish that disgraced Lombard, Cooke et al. One wouldn't believe, at first glance, that the moving picture of a little German band could do such a thing.

The band starts off with the conventional German brass stuff—that is, the picture makes all the motions and Herr Lombard and his orchestra were due to make all the music. After a moment or so of simple preliminaries the band begins to sway, in unison, in rhythm and in perfect time to the music.

Another moment and Herr Lombard begins to sway, so does his fiddle, so does the cornet, the clarinet and the rest of the orchestra. The picture of the band moves faster and so do Lombard and the rest of them, and then the audience gets it. By the time the film is half gone everyone in the house is doing a modified and decently clothed copy of the Salome thing, and John Cooke, aforementioned, has burst forth into song. The finish is merely a riot of notes; Lombard is too busy dancing to care much for key, time or anything else; the film has him hypnotized and the audience going, and there is no telling what would happen were there another hundred feet of film.

Essanay's New London Offices.

H. A. Spoor, General European agent of the Essanay Company, in a recent letter to Geo. K. Spoor, president of that concern, writes: "I expect to move into the new offices July 21 or 23 at the latest. The new address will be 5 Wardour Street, London, W., and if any American friends (or enemies) of the firm come to London, be sure and have them call on me, to show off, because we have offices that will do the firm proud."

President Geo. K. Spoor tells me that his company is doing exceptionally large business in London. The orders have been increasing heavily right along and what puzzles him is: where all the film is going.

I have seen several printed programs, used in leading picture houses in England, and forwarded here by Mr. H. A. Spoor, and each shows the Essanay films specially featured, with the Indian head trademark appearing on each side of the title. This is convincing evidence of the popularity of the Essanay Western product in the "tight little isle."

It is gratifying to find that one of the greatest, if not the greatest, dailies in the United States has come out clearly in an editorial announcing that it is not protesting against the exhibition of the Reno pictures, but only printing the news regarding the protest. In its issue of Monday, July 18, the Chicago Tribune had the following editorial under the heading as given:

Consistency is a Jewel.

"The Tribune has received and printed a number of communications calling attention to the ludicrous inconsistency of the newspaper protest against the display of the Johnson-Jeffries fight pictures. The correspondents say that they do not approve of the pictures, but that they are appalled by the journalistic hypocrisy which can devote a year to giving publicity to the preparations for the fight, surrender pages to a detailed account of it, supplement this by printing photographs of its most agonizing moments, and then complacently demand the suppression of the moving pictures.

"The Tribune comments on this merely to say that it is in full accord with its correspondents and to call their attention to the fact that IT HAS NOT LIFTED ITS VOICE AGAINST THE FILMS. It borrows a phrase from numerous letters on the subject, and says that it does not approve of the pictures, but it values consistency a bit too highly to put itself in the attitude of the Pecksniffian protestant.

"The Tribune gave its readers everything about the prize fight that it could get worth printing, and possibly something that was not worth printing. It did so because the public was more interested in that fight than it has been in any other event of the year. So the circulation manager informs the editor. It suspects that the public was more interested in it than in the Lorimer exposure. It gave merely a page to the report of the Legislative Voters' League, but because it thought its readers ought to be interested rather than because it was certain they would be.

"All the hypocrisy is not journalistic. A plentiful supply of it can be found in estimable homes. That, however, is not the point. THE THING THE TRIBUNE WISHES TO EMPHASIZE IS THAT FOR THE REASONS WHICH HAVE COME SO READILY TO ITS READERS IT IS NOT PROTESTING AGAINST THE FIGHT PICTURES. IT IS PRINTING THE NEWS REGARDING THE PROTEST. THAT IS ALL.

"The hands—journalistic and otherwise—raised in protest must be clean hands, and we fear that they will be sadly in the minority."

McMillan Fakes Reno Contest.

A. W. McMillan, of this city, well known as an "independent" manufacturer of fake film, made fake pictures of the Reno contest at Forest Park, an amusement resort outside of the city limits, on Wednesday, July 13. "Kid" Cutler, now a wrestler and at one time the sparring partner of John L. Sullivan, personated Jeffries, and a colored "pug," called Hawkins, appeared as Johnson.

McMillan makes no effort to conceal the fact that the pictures are spurious; on the contrary, he announces that they are a reproduction of the Jeffries-Johnson mill. He expects to reap a rich harvest from "independent" exhibitors who are ready to extract nickels from the pockets of their patrons at any hazard. McMillan at one time owned the Exclusive Exchange, an "independent" concern which he sold to the owners of the Precision Exchange, of Pittsburg several months ago. It takes brazen hardihood to advertise wrong-doing; but nothing in that line is impossible to an "independent."

Jones & Spoor Secure Permits.

Aaron J. Jones and Geo. K. Spoor have secured permits thus far in the following houses, for the exhibition of the Jeffries-Johnson pictures: The Haymarket, on West Madison Street, seating 2,000 people; the Folly, State and Congress Streets, seating 1,600, and the National, at 53d and Halsted Streets, with a capacity of 1,400. In addition, a permit has been secured for the presentation of the pictures, on Saturdays and Sundays, at the new White Sox baseball park, on the South Side. The park will seat 20,000 people, all of whom can have a good view of the screen and the pictures.

The first road company was sent out by Messrs. Spoor & Jones, Tuesday, July 19, for a tour of the Jeffries-Johnson pictures, opening at Decatur, Ill., for two nights; thence to East St. Louis for a run of eight days, and thence to Peoria, Ill., for one week. The mayors of these cities granted the permits without delay. The ruling prices of admission during the tour will be 25, 50 and 75 cents.

Chicago Film Brevities.

Henry G. W. Dinkelspiel, attorney-at-law, San Francisco, passed through the city on his way to New York, Friday, July 15. Mr. Dinkelspiel is the legal adviser for the licensed manufacturers in the Jeffries-Johnson picture matters.

H. T. Loper, owner and manager of the Lyric theatre, Peoria, Ill., was a caller at the Chicago office of The Film Index last week.

H. H. Colburn, of the Orpheum theatre, Burlington, Wis., is one of the few who has a good word to say about business these sweltering days. Manager Colburn tells me that he is running his house on Saturdays and Sundays only during the hot weather. Standing room has been at a premium for the last two weeks.

Louis A. Klene, manager of The Arc theatre, La Fayette, Ind., was a visitor in the city recently. Manager Klene has his house so well ventilated that he is running through the Summer. He reports fair business, considering the heat.

Walter S. Altland, manager of the Fairyland theatre, 4442 State Street, Chicago, and F. J. Flaherty, manager of the Lyceum theatre, 3002 W. Madison Street, called at The Film Index office last week. They state that the hot weather has reduced their business considerably, but that they are still able to make a little over expenses.

H. A. Emig, general manager of the Colonial Theatre Company, of Joliet, Ill., visited F. C. Aiken, general manager of the General Film Co., Monday, July 18. Mr. Emig tells me that his company has just opened a new house in Quincy, Ill., its capacity being 400. The Quincy house makes the eleventh theatre now on the Colonial circuit. Mr. Emig states that all the houses have been doing fair business during the hot spell, and that it is now picking up in a gratifying manner.

HAS NO FEAR OF RIOTS.

Evidently the fear of race rioting in the South, over the exhibition of the Johnson-Jeffries contest, is beginning to grow less. The first city executive of the Sunny South, to come forth and let it be known that he will not stop the pictures is Mayor Wikle, of Anniston, Ala.

Mayor Wikle seems to have no fear of race riots, and says before he gives any orders to stop the pictures he would wait and see what effect they have in other cities, so its more than likely the pictures will be shown.

Among the Exhibitors

Alger Brown will erect a new motion picture theatre at 114 North Washington street, Lansing, Mich. When completed, the house will be one of the best equipped in the state.

Mr. and Mrs. Walter Wilson, of Shelbyville, Ind., have purchased the North Side Nickelo, and will run the best films during the summer. The house has been improved to the extent of $400 since they purchased it.

Picture houses at such small summer resorts as Point Pleasant and Bay Head, N. J., are doing a big business these hot summer days. The managers have found a unique way of building theatres along the beach; they build the house in such a manner as to have the front face the ocean, thus letting the sea breeze blow through at all times.

Lyman H. Howe is giving the Kansas City people a good run of pictures at the Shubert theatre. Last week his best pictures were those showing scenes in and about Paris.

The Orpheum theatre, Franklin, Pa., is running extra reels of motion pictures during the summer. The management is using only the latest films and the patrons are more than pleased with the mid-summer entertainment.

The Star Motion Picture Co. have leased Memorial Hall, Springfield, Mass., where it will run first class motion pictures.

Two well known Vitagraph subjects, "The Wings of Love" and "The Little Mother at the Baby Show," were the principal attractions at the Kane theatre, Kane, Pa., during the week of July 4.

The popular Family theatre, Port Jervis, N. Y., reopened with pictures July 1. Will J. Foster, a baritone soloist, has been engaged to sing the illustrated songs.

The opera house, Chicago, Ill., is now closed. The last motion picture entertainment took place July 4.

The Empire theatre, Butte, Mont., is certainly giving its patrons the best there is in the motion picture line. Last week the house gave several films taken from cowboys scenes. Also, at the performances there were many cowboys present to witness the riding of several of their friends in the pictures.

Jackson & Stevens have sold their interest in the Imperial theatre to S. E. Sherman, of Hartford, Conn., who will run motion pictures in the future. The house will open for the fall season Sept. 1.

The new theatorium, Morrisville, Vt., will open for the first time August 1. The house will seat 200 persons.

The close of the summer will see one of the most modern motion picture theatres in Charleston, West Va. The manager of the Elk theatre will construct a new building on Tennessee avenue.

The Majestic Motion Picture Place, of Pottsville, Pa., which is conceded to be one of the most modern in the country, opened July 9. Besides having the best pictures obtainable, the management has installed an $850 Matchless Cunningham Player.

Daniel L. Fisher, of Newton, N. J., is remodeling the front of his pool room and billiard parlor for an up-to-date picture theatre. When completed the house will seat 300 persons.

Fort Wayne, Ind., will probably be one of the first small cities to see pictures of the Johnson-Jeffries fight. The pictures will be shown at the Gaiety theatre. Fort Wayne has no fear of there being any one hurt as the result of Johnson winning from his white opponent.

Palmer Fox, who has been running a first class motion picture house at St. Johnsville, N. Y., is soon to move to new quarters. His new theatre will be in the Fox Building, which will be completed within the next few weeks. The house will seat 200 persons. Mr. Fox will give his patrons the best pictures obtainable, and there will be at least two changes every week.

Motion picture managers along the Jersey shore have no complaint as to the business they are doing this summer. From Atlantic Highlands to Cape May all the first class houses are crowded every night with summer visitors.

William E. Morrison, of Salamanca, N. Y., has purchased a motion picture theatre in Rochester, and will open in a few days.

"A Wireless Romance," one of Edison's famous films, has been drawing big crowds at the Globe theatre, Boston, Mass.

The Concord Park theatre, Natchez, Miss., has opened with motion pictures and vaudeville for the summer.

Lawson & Paoli have opened a motion picture theatre in the Walsh Building, South Range, Mich.

Joseph Archer, of North Howard street, Baltimore, Md., is having his motion picture theatre enlarged.

ARCADE THEATRE, PORTLAND, ORE.
People's Amusement Co., proprietors. Seats 300. Admission 10 cents. Photo by Wm. Wright.

Harry Marsey has been granted a license to operate a motion picture theatre at Niagara Falls. The license cost $100.

Division Passenger Agent Pascault and City Ticket Agent De Vaughn, of Buffalo, Rochester & Pittsburg R. R., are running a motion picture theatre at Du Bois, Pa.

The front of the Star motion picture theatre, at 3d and Hamilton streets, Allentown, Pa., is being remodeled.

PREMIUM THEATRE, SAN FRANCISCO, CAL.

Fred A. Stone, the "Scarecrow" comedian, is hunting mountain lions with a motion picture camera. At present Mr. Stone is in the wilds of Colorado.

Robert E. Green, formerly of Portland, Me., has been made manager of Acker's Family theatre, Bangor, Me.

The new theatre on Ashuntunck street, Thompsonville, Mass., is nearly completed. The house, which will be used for motion pictures and vaudeville, will be under the management of Nathan Sisitsky.

The Lyric theatre of Fort Wayne, Ind., has been leased by Edward Klein, Harry Brian and L. A. Crowley, who are operating it as a picture theatre.

The National theatre, Patton, O., is being used as a picture house during the summer months.

Lyman H. Howe is showing scenes from the Paris Flood at the Shubert theatre, Kansas City, Mo.

Cooney & Woolison, managers of the World in Motion, at Pittsfield, Mass., have purchased a new Powers picture machine. This is the first machine of its kind used in Pittsfield.

Plans for the opening of the Colonial theatre, Fort Wayne, Ind., have now been completed, and that house will be ready Sept. 1. The house will seat about 1,000 persons. Motion pictures will be the chief attraction.

The Milford motion picture theatre, of Milford, N. H., has closed for the summer, on account of repairs that are being made. The house will open some time during the latter part of August.

Motion pictures at the Scenic Temple, East Providence, R. I., are attracting big crowds every night. The pictures consist mostly of travel views.

Richard Hipple, of Middletown, Pa., has sold his shares in the motion picture theatre, on South Union street, to Messrs. Leber & Durborow.

The Nickelette, on Main street, Vanderbilt, Pa., which is being repaired, will open in about three weeks. The house is being enlarged and repainted.

Biograph pictures at the Colonial, Vincennes, Ind., are making a big hit among patrons of that well known house.

F. J. Carroll, a well known Brooklyn baritone, has been engaged by the management of the Nickelet motion picture theatre, of Stroudsburg, Pa.

Manager A. Speros, of the Columbia theatre, Pottsville, Pa., is running a double picture bill during the summer months.

E. O. Huber & Son, of Camden, N. J., have erected a motion picture theatre at Holly Beach, N. J.

Manager J. W. Larned, of the Columbia theatre, Bloomsburg, Pa., has closed his house for repairs. A new fireproof booth will be put in.

The motion houses of Defiance, O., opened for the first Sunday night performance July 17.

David Young, who has been conducting a motion picture show at the corner of King and Middlesex streets, Camden, N. J., has sold his interest to a well known Western syndicate.

The Brocton Board of Trade, Brocton, Mass., will soon begin to boom that city by showing motion pictures of the shoe industry.

"The Sheriff" and "A Hunting Story," two of Selig's late films, were the big picture hits at the Lincoln Square theatre, New York City, last week.

The Johnson-Jeffries fight pictures at the Colonial theatre, New York, are drawing good crowds. The pictures are exceedingly clear and please the local sports in every way.

Charles Bear, a well known motion picture magnet, of Virginia, has purchased a piece of property on Center street, Roanoke, on which he will erect a modern picture theatre.

Marcus Garnone has filed plans for the building of a motion picture theatre at No. 76 Catherine street, New York City. The house will cost about $7,500.

Johnson-Jeffries fight pictures at the Alhambra, 125th street, New York, are keeping the Harlemites busy during the week.

SALES CO. OFFICERS RE-ELECTED.

All the former officers of the Sales Company, Lemmel's "little trust," have been re-elected: Carl Laemmle, president; P. A. Powers and Edwin Thanhauser, vice-presidents; Charles Bauman, treasurer; Herbert Miles, secretary and general manager. Thanhauser was provided for by enlarging the board of officers, making two vice-presidents.

Synopsis of Production Issued by the Leading Song and Novelty Slide Makers.

SCOTT AND VAN ALTENA

"WHEN YOU DREAM OF THE GIRL YOU LOVE."—A pretty love ballad with words by Louis Klein; music by Leo Edwards; published by Victor Kremer Co. The story is of a young man desperately in love who sees beautiful visions of his darling at night. These visions are beautifully portrayed in the illustrations with handsome models, good posing and livid coloring. In true Scott & Van Altena style.

"HIDE FROM THE LIGHT OF THE MOON."—Words by Dave Clark; music by Sally Ginsberg; published by Ted Snyder Co. A song with a pretty tune and dealing with a pair of lovers, the Park and the romantic moon. The illustrations show beautiful moonlight views, with models full of life and expression. Novel effects abound, and the set, on the whole, is an attractive one.

"SOME DAY WE'LL BE HAPPY."—Words by John Lyle; music by George E. Lyle; published by Consolidated Music Supply Co., Chicago. A sentimental ballad, with illustrations representing beautiful rural scenes. In the first half of the song the couple are school children, while in the second part they meet again after a number of years. The views in this set are exceptionally fine, with artistic coloring, beautiful floral and novel effects, and should appeal to those who admire the rustic in nature.

"HONEY, I WILL LONG FOR YOU."—Words by Arthur Longbrake; music by Ed. Edwards; published by Joseph Morris Co. An exceptionally good song, with a Southern atmosphere, and beautifully illustrated in true Scott & Van Altena style. A pleasing variety of scenes delight the eye, and charming coloring make the set a very attractive one. "Quality," the keynote of this firm, is ever present in all their work.

"MY MORNING ROSE."—Words by Arthur Longbrake; music by Ed. Edwards; published by the Joseph Morris Co., New York. An Indian song of great merit, for which Scott & Van Altena have made illustrations posed for in rich native Indian costume. The costumes, camp fires, etc., give an excellent opportunity for fine coloring that has not been lost to the manufacturers. The woods, where Indians lived, play a large part in this set, as do also many novelties—clever ideas by Scott & Van Altena.

"YIDDLE ON YOUR FIDDLE, PLAY SOME RAGTIME."—There is hardly a person who has not heard this great ragtime song hit of Irving Berlin's; published by Ted Snyder Co., New York. Its popularity, like a gale of wind, has traveled from one end of the continent to the other, casting its currents in every direction. Its contagious rythm affects everyone, creating a hilarious feeling. This feeling is portrayed humorously in a set of illustrations which contain what we are all glad to see when appropriate—a little "rough house."

"SOMEBODY ELSE; IT'S ALWAYS SOMEBODY ELSE."—A pathetic little love ballad set to excellent music by Geo. W. Meyer; words by Jack Drislane; published by F. B. Haviland, New York. A set of slides have been produced for this song that not only contain a more than usual number of the Scott & Van Altena novelties, but are posed for by unusually handsome models in picturesque places, and are colored with good taste by some one with a thorough knowledge of the subject. It is a pleasure to look at this set.

"HELLO, MISS LIBERTY."—March song, with music by Fred. Fischer; published by the Fred. Fischer Music Publishing Co., New York. Words by Thomas J. Gray tell of how Americans, after they have traveled over the various countries abroad, are glad to see their own land again. The slides include many scenes of European countries that are both interesting and instructive.

"BLAZE OF GLORY."—A fine march song by Abe Holzman; published by Leo. Feist. The illustrations are striking scenes; portraying the glories of the good old U. S. A.; deeds which we have done and of which we are justly proud. Striking novel effects, with fine photographic quality and coloring, make this a set which all will surely admire.

DE WITT C. WHEELER.

"LOVE SICK."—Words by Louis Weslyn; music by Herbert Spencer; published by M. Witmark & Sons. One of the mushy love ballads which, if good, are all to the good. This one fills the bill both in lyrics and melody. The slides do more than fill the bill. They fill the mind with wonder that it is possible to obtain such beautiful effects in a song slide. Perhaps never has Wheeler combined such grand scenery, such good looking models and such artistic coloring in one set. It is his best set. The novelties, of which there are many, are surprisingly clever and very taking.

"COME ALONG, MY MANDY."—American version by Nora Bayes and Jack Norworth, and sung by them all last winter at the Broadway Theatre in the "Jolly Bachelors." Published by I. B. Harms, New York. For slides with beautiful models this set can't be beat. The girl is pretty, the man handsome, and they pose in an excellently easy and graceful maner, so as to become at once favorites with audiences who view the slides.

"IN MY GARDEN."—Song by Clare Kummer; published by J. H. Remick & Co. Miss Kummer, the composer of "Dearie," can always be depended upon to produce a hit, and "In My Garden" is no exception. The slides are an excellent example of an artist's work, for only an artist could discover scenes such as reproduced so beautifully in this set. Not only are the scenes beautiful in themselves, but are colored so strikingly as to make them twice as impressive. A good song, with a splendid set of slides.

"SOMETIME IN AFTER YEARS."—Words by Francis Glen Brown; music by Walter Eben Miles; published by J. H. Remick & Co. A sentimental love song on the reminiscent order and of a higher class than the average ballad. A song really worth hearing. The slides are of the usual high order produced by the Wheeler house, and aptly illustrate the lyrics, with enticing models in beautiful surrounding scenes, which Wheeler scours the country to obtain.

"OH, YOU SPEARMINT KIDDO WITH THE WRIGLEY EYES."—Guess that's going some. It takes William Jerome to write the clever lyrics. When it comes to "Tutti Frutti beauty" and "peptonized kisses," he's right there with the sticky stuff. Jean Schwartz is there with the right music dope, too. Published by Jerome H. Remick. You all know what Wheeler does when he gets hold of a funny song like the "Spearmint Kiddo." He does it up right and makes a set of slides that make a hit. This one will.

"TO-NIGHT, SWEETHEART, TO-NIGHT."—Lyric and music by Evelyn Bloom; published by Jerome H. Remick, New York. A sentimental love ballad, set to waltz music. Illustrations by Wheeler show that the improvement in song slides still continues. Each slide contains, besides good posing, a picked background of remarkable distinction. This gives the slide a scenic value, as well as illustrative. The set is a good one from every standpoint.

"DREAMING OF YOU."—Poem by Tell Taylor; music by J. M. Wilcockson; published by Wilcockson Music Co., Hammond, Ind. One of the "dreamy" songs which, when of a high order, always please, as this one is sure to do. The waltz melody of the chorus is in a beautiful theme and captivating in the extreme. The slides are really remarkable for their beauty. They illustrate not only the song, but illustrate what a beautiful country this is and what picturesque spots there are in it, if one only has the artistic eye to find them.

ALFRED L. SIMPSON.

"YOU LOOK JUST LIKE A GIRL I USED TO KNOW."—Another beautiful love ballad written and composed by the celebrated author, Don Ramsay, author of "Some Day When Dreams Come True." Published by Walter Jacobs, of Boston. This is a great song and is making a great hit. Slides for same are very beautiful and in the usual loving style.

"NOW YOU CAN HAVE YOUR O. U. KID, BUT IT IS A LOVIN' WIFE FOR MINE."—Words and music by Herbert Ingraham; published by Shapiro. This is a very novel and comic song and shows how the devotion of a good husband will overcome any desire for the pleasures of the wine table, etc. Slides for this song are very funny.

"IN BAMBOO LAND."—Lyric by Earle C. Jones; music by May Aufderheide; published by J. H. Aufderheide, Indianapolis, Ind. This is one of the greatest sets of slides Simpson has ever made. Just at this time when every one is appreciative of lore and pictures it is bound to make a great hit. Slides are humorous as well as artistic. The coloring is above all criticism. Some of the tropical effects are something wonderful.

"SADIE BRADY."—Everyone has seen Nora Bayes and Jack Norworth in the "Jolly Bachelors." This is their song and is published by the Norworth Publishing Co., New York City. The slides are really remarkable for their beauty. The slides for this song are Simpson's best and carry out in perfect detail the story.

"DEAR OLD COMRADE."—Words by Bartley Costello; music by J. B. Mullen. Mr. Mullen is the composer of "Two Little Girls Loved One Little Boy," "The Man Behind," and many other well-known hits. The slides are made by Simpson, and the subjects are well chosen, and the posing extremely artistic. The coloring is exquisite.

"WHEN."—Words by Ida L. Simpson; music by Alfred L. Simpson, who is also the composer of Billy Scanlon's world-famous lullaby, "Peek-a-Boo." As Mr. Simpson is the composer of the above song, he has let himself out on the slides, sparing neither time nor expense to make them perfect, as far as coloring and good photography can do. The song is making a big hit already.

"STAR OF MY DREAMS, SHINE ON."—Lyric by Arthur J. Lamb; music by John T. Hall. These two well-known composers need no introduction to music lovers, as they are known wherever songs are sung. This new ballad is even better than their average. Simpson has made a great set of slides, which must be seen to be appreciated. Each slide is a gem of art, and the coloring is true to nature. Charles K. Harris is the publisher of this charming ballad.

"WHEN THE IVY'S CLINGING, DEARIE, ROUND AN OLD OAK TREE."—Words by Robert Roden; music by J. Fred Helf. Another masterpiece by the authors of "When You Know You're Not Forgotten by the Girl You Can't Forget," "Colleen Bawn," "Meet Me, Sweet Kathleen, in Honeysuckle Time," etc. Simpson has made a very beautiful set of slides in true Southern setings, that do what some slides do not—really illustrate the song and convey the sentimental spirit intended by the author. J. Fred Helf is the publisher of this coming hit ballad.

LEVI COMPANY.

"IN DEAR OLD TENNESSEE."—By Olive L. Frields; music by Harry L. Newman; published by M. Shapiro. This is the big song hit for which Shapiro paid $5,000 to the Sunlight Pub. Co., Chicago, and naturally this song is a big winner. The slides are excellent and fit the song perfectly. Novelties are absolutely original and will make as big a hit as the song itself. No one appreciating a good song and an excellent set of slides should be without this number. The best set of slides ever put out by the Levi Company.

"I WONDER IF YOU LOVE ME."—By Mabel Hite and Tom Kelly; published by M. Shapiro. Shapiro does not get out very many ballads, but when he does, it usually is a big hit. We predict for this new ballad a wonderful success. This song is Mabel Hite's big hit in her act, and that is sufficient in itself to show the value of the song. The slides are most remarkable for their beauty and artistic coloring. An excellent number.

"JUST FOR A GIRL,"—Published by M. Witmark & Sons. This song is the biggest number that the Witmark concern has put out in some time and is an absolute hit. Slides are first class in every particular and are beautiful. The demand will be heavy owing to the extreme popularity of the song, and you should place your order immediately.

"IF THE MOON TOLD ALL HE KNEW."—Published by M. Witmark & Sons; words and music by Fleta Jan Brown. Novelty song, and the slides contain twelve novelties, each and everyone of which are absolutely original. If you haven't a set of these on hand, it is to your interest to order them.

"IN THE VALLEY OF OLD ST. JOE."—Words and music by Dennis Mackin; published by M. Witmark & Sons. This is one of those sentimental ballads for which M. Witmark & Sons are noted. Posing is excellent, slides are artistically colored.

"DOWN WHERE THE BANANAS GROW."—Words by Louis Weslyn; music by Ted S. Barron; published by M. Witmark & Sons. Special arrangements were made for the posing of this song and the results are wonderful. A glance over this set will show that the scenes reproduced are more than beautiful and only obtainable in Havana. A good song with a splendid set of slides.

"ANY LITTLE GIRL, THAT'S A NICE LITTLE GIRL, IS THE RIGHT LITTLE GIRL FOR ME."—Words by Thomas J. Gray; music by Fred Fischer; published by M. Shapiro. This is the biggest hit published by M. Shapiro within the last three years and the melody is being whistled by almost every street urchin. The slides are good.

"BUT NOT ON SUNDAY,"—Words and music by L. Yosco; published by M. Shapiro. This is a great novelty song and the slides contain some original novelties.

"IN MOONLAND FAIR,"—Words and music by Mary Speed Mercer; published by Chas. K. Harris. This song is a beautiful ballad and in the hands of Chas. K. Harris will undoubtedly prove a pronounced success, as the melody is more than exceptionally sweet. The slides contain original novelties and are very beautiful.

"I USED TO SING, 'I WISH I HAD A GIRL,' BUT NOW 'IT'S DON'T TAKE ME HOME.' "—Words by Roger Lewis; music by Frank Blazek; published by McKinley Music Pub. Co., Chicago. The McKinley Music Co. confine themselves mostly to high class songs, and when they do put out a popular number it is way above the ordinary. The slides tell the story in a charming manner, and are first class in every particular. It is an exceptionally good song and a first class set of slides.

NOVELTY PUZZLETTES.

Exclusive original puzzle pictures by the famous puzzle man, Sam Loyd:

CHANGING LETTER SERIES.—This is a particularly clever set, done in Loyd's best style. The puzzles seem hard, yet how easy to solve when you know how.

HIDDEN GEOGRAPHICAL NAMES.—A very interesting lot of puzzles, that will make theatre patrons think hard, and at the same time amuse them immensely.

CITIES OF THE UNITED STATES.—Clever puzzle pictures, representing in puzzle form cities in this country. Beautifully colored and well illustrated. Entertaining, amusing and of a highly educational character.

STATES OF THE UNITED STATES.—Representing in puzzle form the states of the United States. Second set of series of puzzle slides designed to increase box-office receipts.

POPULAR FLOWERS.—Puzzlettes of the best-known flowers. Beautifully colored. Six puzzle slides, as usual, and explanatory slides and answer slides.

DAYTON'S NATIONAL THEATRE OPENS.

The National Theatre, that ever popular amusement palace, of Dayton, O., threw open its door to the motion picture public July 4. The opening performance called for a crowded house, which has been kept up ever since. The first run of pictures was furnished by the George K. Spoor Company of Chicago. The pictures will be changed three times a week.

In order that the popular songs be sung in a manner that will be appreciated, the management has engaged Miss Veo Thompson, one of the most accomplished pianists in the city to play these songs. It has also engaged Jesse Trimmer, a well known baritone, to sing.

A SUCCESSFUL EXHIBITOR.

Mr. A. M. Gollos, one of Chicago's leading exhibitors, was in New York during the last ten days, for the purpose of studying the situation previous to planning his new theatre. He was disappointed in the shows put on by the average New York exhibitor, and was very strong in affirming that Chicago is far ahead in the matter of shows. Mr. Gollos is proprietor of three very successful theatres: the Royal theatre, 1369 Milwaukee Avenue, with a seating capacity of 350; the Kedzie theatre, at 3204 West 12th Street, seating 400, and the New Royal theatre, at 6723 S. Halsted Street, seating 300. At neither of these houses is vaudeville given, although in each house there is a large stage and five sets of scenery.

Mr. Gollos has tried vaudeville in his time and now states he would not use it if it were given him free with a bonus of $200 a house. He knows he can make more out of a straight picture show, and, notwithstanding the abnormally hot month they have had in Chicago, he said the people were waiting in line each night to enter his theatres and each house netted him a very nice profit. In each case the price of admission is five cents and each house has a six-piece orchestra to play with the pictures, a pipe organ, and runs three reels of film; one first run, one seven days old, and one thirty days old, together with an illustrated song. Mr. Gollos is well satisfied with this service for which he pays $115 per house and obtains it from the General Film Co.'s branch, presided over by the genial Fred. Aiken. Mr. Gollos attributes a great deal of his success to the fact that he always endeavors to see each film previous to release at the manufacturers and thus is enabled to book a more suitable program.

AERODOME OPENS AT MUNICE.

The new aerodome at Muncie, Ind., is now completed and is doing a profitable business for its owner, Charles H. Roemer. The house is running the best of pictures and vaudeville which is changed twice every week, thus giving its patrons a chance to see something new all the time.

The aerodome seats 1,500 persons; all the seats being arranged in such a position that those in the back of the place can see with perfect ease. Illustrated songs are also features at this house, there having been a well known singer engaged to sing all the latest popular songs.

ALLIANCE SQUARE DOME OPENS.

The new Square Dome theatre, Alliance, O., opened Thursday, July 14, by F. E. Hartzell. This playhouse has been erected between the First National Bank building and the Taylor building. The Woods orchestra furnished music for the opening and a selection of pictures different from those used elsewhere were shown.

The building is so arranged that those in attendance get the full benefit of the evening breeze. A new feature at this playhouse was the serving of refreshments.

The lot is graded carefully and the seats placed so they will give the guests a comfortable place to rest and see the show. The building end is an improvement for the square over the bill boards that formerly adorned the front of the lot.

WIFIE'S MAMMA

THE LAUGH LIMIT

We're not going to try to tell you just how funny this film is because the newest story always is "the best ever" in the advertisements, but if we have put out a funnier story lately—and we've made more than one bull's eye—we've lost our judgment, that's all. The laugh starts in the second scene—the first is short—and you don't stop laughing until the next day and it's good for chuckles for weeks after. Insist on having it or there's something in life you're losing.

THREE HEARTS

AN UNUSUAL PROBLEM

Should a man engaged to a girl against her will and horribly disfigured in a railroad wreck insist that she keep the promise made her dying father and marry him, or should he give up his last hope of happiness that his rival may rejoice? What would you do? What Jasper Creighton did is most interestingly told in this gripping story.

SHOULD HE GIVE HER UP?

CASUAL COMMENT

FROM the story of the Detroit convention of the F. S. A. told by the representative of The Film Index, Mr. James S. McQuade, the casual observer will conclude that it was a funeral—the obsequies of an obsolete organization, at which there were few mourners.

While there have been no real functions for such an organization to perform for the past eighteen months or more and consequently no real reason for its continuation, it is still a matter of regret that such an organization could not have been continued for social purposes. There is nothing like getting together now and then.

However, the rapid evolution of the motion picture trade has relegated the exchange to its logical position in the trade and with the decreasing importance of that factor it was quite natural that an organization composed of exchange men should cease for lack of reason to exist.

Hence these tears, and we say this with sincerity, because there were a lot of good fellows in the F. S. A. and some jolly times have been recorded at their meetings. The final act of turning over to the National Red Cross Society some $400 remaining in its treasury was a fitting legacy to a worthy charity.

AS a trade factor the demise of the F. S. A. is not to be seriously regretted. In the nature of things it was destined to failure from the beginning. Modern trade methods do not give a lasting place to the middleman. It is the manufacturer in every line who is the natural dictator of trade terms and conditions. This was pointed out by The Film Index nearly two years ago when certain exchange men were uttering ultimatums and damning the Patents Company for a grinding monopoly.

Since then those same exchange men have become "independent" film makers and are industriously trying to accomplish the very ends which they roundly denounced.

While we think of it there is another exchange organization, the "alliance," which will sing its swan song within the year. And that brings us to another story.

HOW long will the present state of peace exist between the so-called "independents." The terms of peace are by no means binding and can last only so long as the various persons to the agreement keep faith with each other.

Already it is rumored that the domestic makers of pictures are framing things to shut out the foreign makers allied with them. As against the Laemmle-Kessel-Steiner-Miles combination, what chance have Lux, Great Northern and such to increase their trade?

Absolutely none; and if we are not misinformed, those foreign makers are already beginning to feel the pinch of discrimination which has surely been framed up against them by the "sales company." The prospect for an early revolt against that combination is good.

ON another page of this issue of The Film Index is printed a long and interesting letter from J. D. Williams, now of Australia, commenting upon the picture business in that far away land. Mr. Williams was formerly in the picture business in the United States and is an enthusiastic booster for American, and particularly, licensed pictures. He relates his view of conditions at length and combats the opinion of Mr. C. Spencer, an Australian picture man, expressed in a previous issue of The Index, in several particulars.

While we like much that Mr. Williams says about American methods, we hesitate to endorse his scheme to extend those methods in their entirety in Australia. We believe that the cheap "nickelodeon" is a detriment rather than a benefit to the picture trade and do not believe that particular American method should be permitted to find lodgement elsewhere. We hope that Mr. Williams will strive to maintain the high plane which pictures seem now to occupy in Australia.

In all other respects we say Amen to his efforts.

ATTENTION of exchanges is directed to the new rules of the National Board of Underwriters regarding the storage of inflammable film, published elsewhere in this issue. Complete instructions are given for the construction of storage vaults for that class of film. This will not affect those who handle only licensed N-I film which is of proved noncombustible properties.

WHEELING FILLED WITH PICTURES.

"Just now Wheeling, W. Va., is in the grasp of the motion picture craze," writes our Wheeling correspondent, "and at present there are twelve houses using motion pictures to entertain their audiences and 47 reels of pictures are shown in the city every evening. It is not a low estimate to state that each of the show houses will average a thousand people each evening. The smaller houses do not get that many people, but the larger ones do, and frequently run over it, one house having a record considerable over 2,000 for an afternoon and evening. With two exceptions all the houses use license pictures. The trust puts out 23 different pictures on the market each day so it can be seen that a large majority of the pictures have to be repeated at the different houses. Two houses use independent pictures. Of late there has been a marked improvement in the grade and character of the pictures and the patrons are quick to appreciate it."

THE MILK PICTURE.

Edison Company Co-operate With New York Milk Committee in an Educational Subject.

A recent issue of the New York Times contained an interesting yarn about a "health drama in pictures" which read like this:

A moving picture play to illustrate the dangers of impure milk is the latest addition of the reformers to the motion picture repertoire. For the last few days the camera men have been out on the New Jersey dairy farms, snapping scenery and collecting local color. The plot for the dairy play would hardly be called subtle, but is deemed sufficient to point the moral.

In scene one, the son of an old-fashioned germ-scoffing farmer has returned to the old farm with his wife and little boy. The cow barns are depicted realistically, with the open pails of milk standing around ready to receive dust and flies. The son, educated more scientifically, protests vigorously at the old order, and offers advice. Thrice does he protest, and thrice are his warnings rejected with scorn, graphically depicted.

The son's assistance thus rejected, the young couple pack their trunks to depart, leaving the old farmer to drop a few regretful tears over the empty baby carriage of the small grandson.

The next scenes are in New York whither the son has taken his family. The baby has become ill; every one is distressed. The doctor shakes his head, and, pointing to the milk bottle, indicates that the milk has caused the trouble. In grief the son sits down and writes to the old farmer, telling him that the little boy is dangerously ill (the letter to be flashed upon the screen). The anguished grandparents arrive, and the old farmer discovers that the bad milk came from his farm. Emotional climax.

Just at this point authorities differ. The motion picture specialists want a "happy ending," with the old farmer's barns being repainted, the cows washed, and dairymen in white suits presiding over the ceremonies, while the little boy, miraculously restored to health, watches the proceedings, held by his repentent grandparent. The reformers, however, suggest that to drive the lesson home the small grandson must be let die, so that the last scenes are not yet completed.

And then The Globe, which is always harping about the iniquities of the motion picture, condescended to say this editorially:

"MILK"—THE VILLAIN.

When the dirty milk from your own father's farm threatens your baby's life, sanitation becomes a science with considerable dramatic possibilities. The moving picture folks, having conceived this novel idea, are preparing, it is said, to realize on it. They have been touring the Jersey dairies with their machines, taking pictures of the cows and cow sheds, the milkers, and, particularly, the dirt.

These are to be combined with the necessary principals—a farmer, his city dwelling son, wife and baby, a milk inspector or two, a doctor, and perhaps a few million vicious milk germs of various breeds—and staged in the 5 and 10-cent show houses of the country. It is really much to be hoped that this ingenious piece of news is made of whole cloth. For, silly as the plan sounds, if it were carried out in an effective way, an educational work of very great value would certainly result.

The chief difficulty in the way of sanitary reform is the ignorance and indifference of the great mass of the people. If they don't laugh at the warnings and cautions of experts and health boards, they pay little attention to them. Hygiene in the abstract makes little appeal to the layman. Of course, infecting your own son's baby with tuberculosis by ignorant and careless dairy farming is no worse, morally, than infecting anybody else's baby, but it seems very much worse.

A graphic representation of such a tragedy would have a far greater effect upon the average mind than a bushel of health board leaflets and newspaper warnings.

So we wish the best of luck to the moving picture folks in this new field.

Our curiosity aroused an inquiry developed the fact that the Edison Mfg. Co. made the picture. It is a good picture and deserves to rank with the now famous "fly-pest" picture which is doing so much to aid the fight on flies.

As it is not to be released until September an extended review at this time would be a little premature, but the story is not far from the description given in The Times article reprinted above.

CUTS PICTURE SHOWS.

The City Council of Cape Gerardeau, Mo., at its last meeting, July 1, passed an ordinance whereby all motion picture theatres and like resorts are prohibited to give Sunday performances. The Council in no way eliminates the playing of Sunday baseball,

"THE CHEYENNE BRAVE"

A Pathe American Subject
That's a Thriller

AMONG the several Indian subjects of recent release Pathe's coming subject, "The Cheyenne Brave," is entitled to a place of prominence. The story is not unlike some other Indian pictures that have been issued, but there is a difference in treatment and sufficient variation of the theme to entitle the plot to some claim for originality.

A Cheyenne brave is in love with a young Indian maiden and is beloved by her. The chief of the tribe turns down the brave's suit and gives the girl to the son of a Sioux chief who comes and takes her to his wigwam.

SCENE FROM PATHE'S, "THE CHEYENNE BRAVE."

Swearing vengeance to the great Manitou the Cheyenne brave sets out one night and takes the young squaw from her husband's tepee. The act is discovered and pursuit is started. The brave and the squaw take to canoes followed by the outraged husband and the members of his band, also in canoes. The chase is a long one and ends in the capture of the fugitives. The husband proposes to fight his rival and a hand to hand contest with knives ensues in which the husband is defeated. Thereupon he relinquishes the squaw to the Cheyenne Brave, whom he characterizes as a brave man.

The merit of the picture lies in its spirited action from start to finish. There is no moment when there is not something doing to hold and entertain an audience. Some very pretty scenic effects are also introduced which add to the interest of the picture.

NEW PATHE STUDIO.

American Company Will Have Fine Modern Building at Jersey City Heights.

Contracts have been let for the erection of the American Studios of Pathe Freres, to be built on a plot of ground recently purchased by that concern at Jersey City Heights, a section of Jersey City, N. J., peculiarly well suited for the purpose. The cost of the studios including the site, will amount to $80,000.

The ground upon which the building will be erected lies along the eastern side of the elevation known as Jersey City Heights and is about 200 feet square, fronting on Ogden avenue and Congress street on the north and west sides. On the east there is an abrupt bluff to Palisades avenue below which protects the studio from obstruction by possible building operations on that side which might obstruct the light.

SCENE FROM PATHE'S, "THE CHEYENNE BRAVE."

In dimensions the building will be about 80 feet by 60 feet on the ground with an elevation of 54 feet, divided into three floors and a basement.

In the construction of the studio some novel features will be introduced, not hitherto employed in motion picture studios in either Europe or America. In the basement will be located a lunch room, kitchen, heating plant and other machinery, needed in operation.

On the first floor will be the dressing rooms, lavatories and offices. The second floor will accommodate the scenic studio with paint frames and space for floor painting. The American artist in scenic effects uses a frame and bridge to work on, while European scenic artists paint with their canvas spread on the floor. Both will be accommodated. On the same floor will be the property and costume rooms; a carpenter's shop and laboratories for the operators.

The studio proper will occupy the top floor and will be entirely enclosed in glass. It will contain a water-tank 23 feet square, and about five feet deep, and a series of traps, and other devices used in staging every sort of picture.

Throughout the building will be installed a complete heating and ventilating system and each dressing room will be heated and supplied with running hot and cold water.

Iron and brick will be used in the construction of the building which will be of ornamental design.

In speaking of the enterprise Mr. J. A. Berst, vice-president and American representative of Pathe Freres, explained that it was not the company's intention to build the greatest studio in the world, but that it would be a good one and equipped to meet all requirements.

It is expected that the new studio building will be completed by Nov. 1st of this year.

DRUMMER WANTS PICTURES.

So disgusted have many of the commercial travelers become over the action of those who have attempted to stop the exhibiting of the Johnson-Jeffries fight pictures that a traveling man, by the name of Thomas F. Ryan, has written Governor Eberhart, of Minnesota, asking that the pictures be exhibited for those who enjoy the sport.

Mr. Ryan thinks it a grave injustice to stop the pictures, and in his communication to the Governor states the following:

"Myself and hundreds like me want to see those fight pictures. Are we to be denied this right to please a few who have no red blood in their veins?"

ANOTHER KALEM "PIONEER"

Novel Plot Involving Indian Raid and Escape of Children In a Well

A FRONTIER picture that will attract attention by the motion picture audiences is soon to be released by the Kalem Company under the title "True to His Trust." The scenes and incidents are typical of pioneer days. The log cabin, the pioneer, his wife and children form a picturesque group in the opening scenes.

According to the story the pioneer goes to his work of tilling the soil. A little later his wife carries to him a jug of water which he forgot when he started out. She leaves the baby with an older brother and while the parents are away a band of Indians make an attack on the cabin.

The little chap hears them coming and quickly drops his baby brother in the well-bucket and drops him down into the well letting himself down after. Here the children remain while the Indians ransack and fire the cabin.

In a distant field the father and mother see the smoke of their burning cabin and hear the yells of the Indians. Horror stricken at the probable fate of their children, yet realizing how hopeless an attempt at rescue would be, they set off on horseback for help.

A hard ride brings them to an army post and the soldiers set out to catch the Indians. The settler and his wife follow and reach the cabin which is still in flames, but find no trace of the "kiddies." Evidently their voices are recognized by the boy in the well for their attention is attracted to cries in that direction. Then the bucket is quickly pulled up bringing the children to the arms of the rejoicing parents.

SCENE FROM THE KALEM SUBJECT, "TRUE TO HIS TRUST."

This picture is another of the series of woodland scenic effects which the Kalem producers manage to blend so pleasingly with their stories. It also brings again into the picture that coming celebrity, the Kalem Baby Actor. The "tiny lad" has appeared several times and seems to enjoy the work. Watch him grow.

BUYS PRINCESS THEATRE.

Leroy Tudor Now Proprietor—Names it "Starette" and Makes Improvements.

By a deal closed July 14 Leroy Tudor, who has made such a success in his management of the Star theatre, Marion, Ind., purchased the Princess theatre on West Fourth street of A. J. Isenbarger, taking possession at once. He has changed the name of the theatre from the Princess to the Starette.

With the opening of the Starette under the new ownership motion pictures of the best quality will be introduced and a splendid program of special numbers will be given. The Misses Marguerite and Lucile Ervin, violinists of splendid ability, and Miss Beatrice Kemmer, pianist, will play. These young ladies are prominently socially and have hosts of friends in Marion who will be pleased to greet them. Eddie Allen, formerly of the "Winning Miss" company will sing at the Starette and altogether a most excellent program will be given.

Mr. Tudor has established a high standard for quality in his management of the Star theatre and he will pursue the same policy at the Starette, making it fully as popular as the Star. He has been very successful in his management of theatres and will make his new purchase go. The Princess has been open about six months. It is a modern little play house and is well equipped for its purpose. Mr. Isenbarger sells the theatre that he may take up enterprises in which he is interested in the west.

The Star theatre on East Fourth street will continue to be operated with high class entertainments. Miss Lottridge, one of Marion's sweetest singers, has been engaged for an appearance and the patrons of the place will be highly entertained, there being a change of program with everything new.

Mr. Tudor is the pioneer motion picture show man in Marion and his success has attracted the attention of people in this business all over the country. He gets the best pictures in the market and always gives his patrons the best to be had regardless of expense.

UNDERWRITERS' NEW RULES.

National Board Will Require Special Vaults for Inflammable Film.

The National Board of Fire Underwriters has formulated the following rules and requirements, as recommended by its committee of consulting engineers, for the storage and handling of nitrocellulose films in connection with motion picture film exchanges:

1. Film Storage.—(a) Each reel of film to be kept in a separate metal box with tight fitting cover, except when being examined or repaired.

Note.—A reel ordinarily contains 1,000 feet of film 1 11-32 inches wide, and weighs about five pounds; diameter of reel is approximately 10 inches.

(b) Films should be stored in a separate building, or vault, not exposing other property; if permitted in a building with other occupancy, to be in standard fireproof vaults or safes.

Vaults.—In buildings of non-fireproof construction to have self-supporting brick walls, not less than 12 inches thick, laid in cement, and extending from the ground. Top and bottom of vault to be waterproof and made of brick or concrete arches of the same thickness as walls (arches may be sprung between steel beams if the latter have standard protecting coverings), no wood top flooring to be used. Size of vault not to exceed 750 cu. ft. Opening into vault to be protected on outer side of wall with standard vault iron doors at least 3-16 inch thick, and made smoke proof by closing against a rabbet at top, bottom and one side, hinge side of door to close into a groove; door and wall frames to be of equivalent construction to the standard iron fire door, vault pattern; and on the inner side of the wall by an iron door of at least No. 14 U. S. gauge. Fixtures inside vaults to be of incombustible material. No lights other than stationary vapor-proof incandescent electric lamps, properly guarded, to be installed inside,—switch to be outside and provided with pilot light or other indicator. No heat to be permitted in vault. In fireproof buildings having standard protection on the steel frame-work, vaults may be carried on the structure from floor to floor. Walls to be of brick, not less than 8 inches thick, or of hollow tile not less than 12 inches thick, laid in cement. Size of vault not to exceed 750 cu. ft. Top and bottom of vault to be waterproof and made of brick, tile or concrete at least 8 inches thick. In all other respects to comply with specifications for vaults in buildings of non-fireproof construction.

Safes.—Size not to exceed 150 cu. ft. To have an angle iron frame continuous at all edges; angle iron to be at least ¼x2 inches, and for large sizes increased proportionately. On safes larger than 40 inches high, 30 inches wide and 30 inches deep, an additional stiffening of heavy steel at least ¼ inch thick, and of width proportioned to size, but never less than 2 inches, to be used at top, bottom and sides. Sheet steel plates to be not less than No. 12 U. S. gauge for the outer shell and not less than No.

TWO EDISON COMEDIES

"How the Squire was Captured" and another "Bumptious"

A CLEVER comedy, "How the Squire Was Captured," is scheduled for early release. It has the merit of being truly a comedy. There are no overdrawn situations, no attempt to burlesque, as happens so often in so-called picture comedies.

The story is simple and direct: The old Squire is enamored of a young girl who is visiting her maiden aunt. The giddy old fellow makes eyes in church, which the aunt takes to be for herself. The girl has a lover and the young folks conspire to help matters along, especially as the aunt is not particularly friendly to their own love making.

EDISON SUBJECT, "HOW THE SQUIRE WAS CAPTURED."

All the squire's presents to the girl are turned over to the aunt; letters are fixed to appear to be sent to her and she falls unsuspectingly and willingly into the trap.

Finally the squire sends a beautiful mantilla to his fair one with the request that she wear it that evening if she loves him. This is turned over to the aunt with the request.

Delighted with the prospect of an offer of marriage the lady dons the mantilla in such a manner as to conceal her features and coyly seats herself in the arbor to await the squire.

Eager to see how the affair progresses the young people hid themselves in a nearby tree. The squire comes overjoyed to find that his affections are not spurned and proceeds to make his advances to one whom he supposes to be the girl. Up in the tree the young folks are hugging each other over the success of their planning.

Finally, as the squire, on his knees, declares his intentions, the lady of the mantilla discloses her identity to his utter consternation. What the Squire might have done had there been no witnesses, must be left to the imagination, for the young folks make their presence known at the critical moment. Straightening a sour face the old squire accepts defeat and the aunt and joins her in bestowing a blessing upon the love affair of the young folks who have tricked him so nicely.

ANOTHER "BUMPTIOUS."

Having failed dismally as an aviator, exercises no deterrent influence upon our self-sufficient friend Bumptious, in his search for experience. His latest effort is also in the line of locomotion, this time with an automobile.

A highly colored poster on a billboard gives him the fever and he acquires a knowledge of driving a machine from a book.

Thus equipped Bumptious visits the automobile man and buys a car. The air with which he spurns the suggestion of the man who delivers it, that the position of chauffeur would be acceptable, should convince one not acquainted with Bumptious that he really knows more about an "auto" than the man who made it, and you feel a hope that he may, after so strong a bluff, make good.

When Bumptious attempts to apply his knowledge you are forced to admit that he is still "bumptious," unskilled and unafraid; also, his "jonah," the girl who chews gum, is there, and even Bumptious, as he discovers her presence hesitates for a moment. But he has invited his friends to go "joy riding" and he gets busy.

Taking his seat Bumptious trys several levers, but fails to get a response. Taking a peek at his book of instructions he starts to "crank up." His "compression" is there all right and considerable exertion is necessary to get the crank over. Just as he seems about to succeed he gets a "back fire" that hurls him head long into the gutter.

By this time the friends become skeptical and alight from the machine, unwilling to risk their lives with Bumptious at the wheel. Nothing daunted he again takes his seat and manages to start something and the machine begins to move backward.

Up to now the comedy of the subject is delightful; but at this point the temptation to do "stunts" with the camera overcame the picture man and Bumptious is made to gyrate backwards over the highway with lightning rapidity, finally to be flattened against the trunk of a big tree with which the motor collides—altogether an impossible proceeding, and a burlesque on the subject.

At the end, getting back to earth, Bumptious trades his machine to a passing farmer for a jackass, and rides home astride his patient and long suffering brother to be greeted by the jeers of his friends.

The bit of trick photography might have been dispensed with in a subject so fertile to the great improvement of the picture.

EDISON SUBJECT, "BUMPTIOUS TAKES UP AUTOMOBILING."

A DRAMA BY ROY NORTON.

"Sans Familie" which is French for without a family, is the title of a picture interpretation of

WHEELER OUT SCOUTING

Big Song Slide Man Makes Flying Trip to Chicago, Detroit and Buffalo

One of our largest song slide manufacturers, De Witt C. Wheeler, took a flying trip west last week to size up the condition of picture affairs in that part of the country. Things have been changing so rapidly in and about Chicago of late that the big slide producer did not know just where he stood. He decided to find out and made short work of it, too. Mr. Wheeler arrived in Chicago by the Twentieth Century Limited on Monday morning; had a talk with Mr. Selig and other manufacturers, exchange men, and James W. McQuade, western representative of The Film Index; visited many of the downtown motion picture shows, and was on his way to Detroit that same evening. From Detroit he went to Buffalo and arrived home Wednesday morning.

Mr. Wheeler believes that the outlook for song slide men is very bright. He found in Chicago that cheap vaudeville had been abandoned by most houses and replaced with two or three illustrated songs. The exhibitors' only complaint to Mr. Wheeler was that they could not get as many good sets of slides, such as he and one or two other concerns turn out, as they would like to use; that they were sometimes forced to show the cheaper, poorer sets of slides in order to have a daily change of songs. This state of affairs Mr. Wheeler hopes to improve very shortly. He hints at a big project on foot that will make it possible for exhibitors to obtain ten or twelve new sets of the highest class slides each week. If the project is successful, it will rest with the exchanges to give standing orders for more sets of the good, standard-price slides in order that exhibitors may be assured of the best. Slide producers must have standing orders for every set of slides they turn out.

The trouble heretofore has been with the exchanges. Many of these organizations have loaned slides free of charge, along with service, of course, and have not been very particular about the slides they buy, figuring on the least amount of money as a basis of expenditure. But Mr. Wheeler's trip has convinced him that picture theatre goers are beginning to know slides by the names of their makers, as films are now known. He believes that with the recent improvement of most all exchanges, there will be a greater tendency on the part of these exchanges to buy only the best of the output in slides.

SUCCESS WITHOUT VAUDEVILLE.

Ben Morris of Bellaire, Ohio, Tells How His Company Dropped Cheap Variety.

The Film Index, New York, N. Y.

Gentlemen:—As a motion picture exhibitor and reader of your paper I have taken a great deal of interest in the vaudeville question relative to pictures and would like to quote you three instances that have lately come under my personal observation.

Our Olympic theatre seats six hundred people and was built as a vaudeville house, and like most such places it ran pictures that helped chase people from the house, and finally made a flat failure. Our company took the house and put on a six reel motion picture show, running new licensed pictures, using two Motiograph machines fixing up the house to the comfort of the patrons, and with temperature close to the top notch we have been having a business averaging nearly a thousand a night. We would not put vaudeville on if we got it free.

Early this summer our company went into Wheeling, taking the elaborate Court theatre, in which the Nixon-Nirdgling summer vaudeville circuit had just made a failure. There were twelve other picture shows in Wheeling and we were told that unless there was illustrated songs or some special acts it would not be made a success. We advertised "the right kind of pictures for the best class of people" and again the pictures have scored, and the Court is averaging twelve hundred a night, drawing on the merits of the pictures.

The North Star theatre at Martins Ferry ran pictures and vaudeville with indifferent success. Another theatre started running two vaudeville acts and three reels of old junk pictures. The North Star man, acting on our advice, put on a straight, all evening picture show and in three weeks has more than his business back, with no cheap vaudeville stars (?) to eat up his profits. Yours truly, BEN L. MORRIS.

IT'S UP TO KOHL.

Editor, Film Index.

Dear Sir:—Some time ago I read and was quite interested in an account of Mr. Wright's, of the Kalem Company, recent trip published in your paper, especially his sojourn in Cleveland. I have often rode with that Prince of Good Fellows, Mr. Kohl, and have also come to the conclusion something was wrong with his auto, but it never struck me as being the "Pip." It almost puts me in mind of the horse that insisted on stopping at the wrong place when his fellow had his wife or best girl out for a drive, in fact, when Mr. Kohl's auto stops it's a safe bet that there is not only a watering trough, but a dispenser of other wet goods not far away, and who ever heard of an auto getting thirsty? Yours truly, OLD BATTLE SHIP, Cleveland, Ohio.

The above anonymous communication from Cleveland regarding Kohl's automobile seems to require an immediate disclaimer from that gentleman. There seems to be a strong suspicion that his "timer" or "magneto" or "jump spark" is so arranged as to stop working when in the proximity of dampness. How about it?

one of Roy Norton's stories. It is a pathetic tale, and though a bit involved in its pictured version, is none the less interesting.

The little hero follows his father from France to a mining camp in Montana. His mother is dead, and he arrives at his destination only to find that his father has been killed in a mine accident, thus leaving him without a family.

An old miner takes him in, and the little fellow in turn feels called upon to care for the two motherless children of another miner. This father does not like the little "frencher" and attempts to drive him away. On one occasion the surly fellow aims a savage blow at the boy, but loses his footing and is killed by falling down an embankment.

This fatality gives the little hero his opportunity. He takes charge of the tiny orphans and installs them in his home giving them his own bed, after which he writes a note to his benefactor, the old miner, to the effect that he is no longer "sans familie," and falls asleep across the table.

There are several amusing incidents worked into the picture, one of which is the trouble the little fellow has correcting the table manners of the rough old miner.

By James S. McQuade

IN my last letter there appeared an article, written Wednesday, July 20, stating that permits had been received for the exhibition of the Reno pictures in certain Chicago theatres. Mr. Aaron J. Jones, the chief owner of the Reno contest privileges in Chicago and Illinois, was so certain, on the date given, of receiving the permits for Chicago—the prospects and assurances being so bright—that it was taken for granted that the issuing of the permits would be only a matter of form when Chief of Police Steward returned.

Chief Steward returned Monday morning, July 25; and late in the afternoon, issued the following order to Herman F. Schuettler, Asst. Supt. of Police:

"PERMIT THE EXHIBITION OF NO PICTURES OR REPRESENTATIONS IN ANY FORM OF ACTS ILLEGAL IN THE STATE OF ILLINOIS."

The terms of the order, which is intended chiefly for the prohibition of the Jeffries-Johnson pictures, are so uncompromising in their nature and so broad in their import that the chief was fairly bombarded with questions as to the effect on other films, art, the drama and publications of all sorts.

"The order speaks for itself," was the only reply he would make.

"How is it to be interpreted?"

"Literally," he answered. "Literally, as it reads."

His audience gasped. It was pointed out that "acts illegal in the state of Illinois" are "represented" by the hundreds in classic and modern plays, in many of the world's greatest paintings and sculptures, and in books, magazines, and papers beyond number.

"The order speaks for itself," the chief maintained.

Examples of Contrary Acts.

Acts contrary to the laws of Illinois have been found in the following, given as a few examples of the point raised with the chief:

PLAYS—Hamlet (murder), The Witching Hour (gambling), The Nigger (lynching), Strife (riot), Baby Mine (kidnapping).

PAINTINGS AT ART INSTITUTE—Death of Caesar, Gerome; Challenge, Munkacsy; Bathers, Bouguereau.

SCULPTURE—Dancing Girl, Boxer, Slaughter of Niobe's Children, Farnese Bull.

Dozens of other suggestions were made of plays, paintings, and sculptures portraying scenes that would excite the police of Chicago were they to behold them on the streets, but the entire field of the "illegal acts" was not covered by them.

Offenses Enter Into Many Plots.

In addition, there are the following offenses against the state statutes which frequently enter into plots of plays for the moving picture shows and other theatres: abduction, arson, assault and battery, bigamy, bribery, burglary, conspiracy, criminal carelessness, cruelty, carrying deadly weapons, counterfeiting, drunkenness, dueling, embezzlement, extortion by threats, false imprisonment, forgery, fraudulent sales, bucket shops, bookmaking, larceny, libel, lotteries, malicious mischief, resisting officers, racing, speeding automobiles, trespass, vagrancy.

It has been the rule of the police department to bar all pictures endangering the morality of youth, but among the films shown, as well as in the melodramas of the legitimate theatres, there are few that may escape showing "acts illegal in the state of Illinois."

After this sort of discussion had spread through the city hall like wildfire, it became known that so far as showing pictures of prize fighting, whether of the Reno battle or some other fight, and whether of the moving picture of the stereopticon variety, is concerned, the police will not issue a permit of any sort and all exhibitions of such pictures will be stopped.

This point was made clear and then one theory was accepted generally. That was, that Chief Steward, in order to place himself on legal standing, in anticipation of charges of discrimination, issued his order covering all "acts illegal in the state of Illinois."

When this conclusion was reached it was declared that there was little cause for worry on the part of the Art Institute, the legitimate theatres, or the nickel theatres, so far as exhibitions, which thus far have passed police censorship, are concerned.

Mayor Busse Refuses Reno Permit.

As I write this article (Wednesday noon, July 27), Aaron J. Jones is in the office of Mayor Busse seeking a permit for the Reno pictures in Chicago. Mr. Jones and Mr. Spoor, accompanied by Attorney Eli B. Felsenthal, made a request for a permit in writing yesterday, according to ordinance, and before them Chief Steward wrote across the face of it, "Not granted."

By a provision of the moving picture ordinance of 1907, not contained in any other permit ordinance, a request for authority to exhibit may be taken up with the mayor, after the chief of police has refused to grant it. Chief Steward formally refused the order, and Messrs. Jones and Spoor went immediately to the mayor, and he announced that his decision would be made known this morning (Wednesday).

Before reaching his decision, it is likely that Mayor Busse will consult with Corporation Counsel Brundage, who has already expressed informally a belief that the courts will uphold the barring of any pictures "dangerous to the morals of youth," even where the exhibition does not come within the ordinance classification of "immoral or obscene." This opinion he based upon a recent Supreme Court decision, declaring that the city officials have wide discretionary powers in such matters.

The first effect of Chief Steward's order of Monday was the withdrawal of permits for moving pictures of all prize fights and of training bouts.

In closing this article, at 12:45 p. m., I have just learned that the mayor has refused to grant the permit. The only course now open is to mandamus the city, and proceeding toward that end will be begun as soon as possible.

"Rotten" Films Demanded by Sales Co.

In its issue of July 23, on page 16, the "Moving Picture News," of New York, has an advertisement of the Atlas Film Co., an "independent" concern, that affords a striking illustration of freak advertising. This abnormal effusion, in which the firm mentioned seeks to gain a reputation for candor, at the expense of business integrity and everything that stands for sound business morals, in part reads as follows:

"ROTTEN" is the term for at least two of our first releases, but the Sales Co., needing the films, insisted upon our releasing thirty days before our plant was ready."

Who suffered by this unprincipled and shameless policy? Not the Atlas concern, because it evidently received full price for its "rotten" films; nor yet the Sales Co., for it collects its weekly assessment from the manufacturers of "rotten" product. Nor did the burden fall on the shoulders of the "independent" exhibitor, who is always ready to deceive the public by a pyrotechnical announcement of the good things which he has never got.

Who then is the victim? There is only one answer: The moving picture theatregoer who serves as the fly for the "independent" spider.

The Sales Co. needed the films, indeed! Of course, it did, and its policy is: "Fool and skin the public by giving them any old kind of film, 'ROTTEN,' if necessary, but get the money."—Selah!

Waterproof Films To Be the Rule.

W. A. Daniels, president of the National Waterproof Film Co., of this city, during a recent visit to New York, arranged with J. J. Kennedy, president of the General Film Co., to waterproof all films released by the Chicago branch of the latter company, at 85 Dearborn street. A sufficient number of washing machines will be installed in the offices here to wash all waterproof films, at least once a week.

It is understood that the Edison Manufacturing Co. has secured the interests of F. K. Babson in the National Waterproof Co. For the past year the Edison Co. has been issuing waterproof film and has tested thoroughly the benefits resulting from the waterproof process.

Ability, Ambition and Youth.

H. Odenthal, formerly manager of the Colonial theatre at Springfield, Ills., one of the houses on the Colonial Theatres Co., circuit of Joliet, Ills., has been added to the staff of the General Film Co.'s offices, at 85 Dearborn street, by Manager F. C. Aiken. Mr. Odenthal's duties will be confined chiefly to the booking and program departments.

The film rental business so closely parallels the banking business in various details and in system, especially in the department of records and tabulations, that Mr. Odenthal finds himself at once amid congenial and familiar surroundings. For six years he was connected with the First National Bank of Joliet, working his way up to the position of teller through all the subordinate positions.

Mr. Odenthal already finds that the habit of exactness in the transfer of figures, or of items, is of much greater moment in the film rental business than in the routine of banking; as, in the former business, an error, once made, is beyond correction, for the reason that the damage immediately follows the error, while in the banking business sufficient time elapses before the damage can take effect, thus affording an opportunity to trace the mistake and remedy it.

As manager of the Colonial, Mr. Odenthal was thoroughly proved and found worthy, his business training in banking affairs having taught him system and a careful reverence for hindsight and foresight. Full of youthful ambition and a glutton for work of the strenuous kind, Mr. Odenthal has a splendid field before him for advancement. Under Manager Aiken's watchful and critical eye he can rest assured that merit and ability will not go unrewarded.

A PROTEST FROM AUSTRALIA

J. D. Williams, an American, Disputes Common Report Regarding American Product

THE Film Index is in receipt of a very interesting communication from Mr. J. D. Williams, an American motion picture theatre man who recently established himself in Australia, with headquarters at Sydney, N. S. W. Mr. Williams' purpose in writing The Index was to correct a number of erroneous impressions regarding the motion picture business in Australia which have gained currency recently. Any further explanation is not necessary as Mr. Williams' letter deals with facts and does not mince matters in the least. It follows in full:

As I have been a regular reader of your valuable paper ever since its inauguration I will thank you very much if you will give this article notice in your valuable columns.

From time to time in the American and English Moving Picture Journals I have noticed some articles regarding the situation of the moving picture business in Australia which have been written from a selfish standpoint and do not relate the true conditions of affairs.

I read the article in your paper of May 14th regarding an interview with Mr. C. Spencer of Sydney, and as a matter of fair dealing and justice to the manufacturers of moving picture machines, I would like to correct this statement in order to convince your many readers of the tice of this article.

Mr. Spencer states that picture machines in use in America will not do for Australia. You can no doubt readily see after my explanation in this matter that this article is written by Mr. Spencer for mere selfishness or ignorance, although his object is not plain to people who are not acquainted with the conditions. Mr. Spencer had the sole agency for the Edison machines and films at one time in Sydney, and for some reason unbeknown to the writer he lost this agency.

Regarding the American machines will say that I have used an Edison and Powers machine ever since they have been in existence and naturally may feel a little inclined to favor these machines. I have been running the Colonial Theatre for nine months in Sydney and have two of the latest Edison machines which I have used in this theatre ever since it opened, and can honestly say that there is no better picture produced in Sydney than the one we get at the Colonial theatre. We are using 80 amperes and have a throw of 120 feet getting a 25 ft. picture. All that was necessary to do to our machine was to get an arc-lamp that would carry 100 amps; and we have had no trouble whatever with our machines; they stand up well and give perfect satisfaction.

The machine mostly used here is what is called the Pathe English model; they are the same kind of machine that Pathe sells in America. This is the machine Mr. Spencer uses at the Lyceum, although he advertises extensively a machine made in England for sale in his exchange department.

I have tried on several occasions to get the Kinedrome machines from Mr. George K. Spoor, which I consider a much better machine than any made in England or Germany. I have about closed a deal with Messrs. Powers & Co. for the agency for their machines in Australia, as I have had so many favorable reports regarding the Powers No. 6 that I am sure that it is a much better machine than any in use here, in fact, I know the Powers No. 5 is as good or better than any of the foreign made machines I have seen here. In our Exchange in Sydney we will not rent pictures to a theatre using a machine having what we call a beater on it. These machines destroy film, and I would much rather have a film after it is run through a Powers or an Edison machine one hundred times than to have it after it is run through a machine with a beater on it ten times.

One other thing I would like to call attention to in this article is regarding pictures. Mr. Spencer speaks of the fine pictures produced by the American companies, and I might add that there would be no occasion for these enterprising American manufacturers to spend vast sums of money to produce fine pictures if every exhibitor assumed the attitude that Mr. Spencer does. For instance up-to-date he never has shown a title on a film and the public have no opportunity of telling who manufactures these films unless they are personally acquainted with their trade marks. Mr. Spencer also thinks that some two or three picture shows is quite enough for a city of 600.000 population. There was only 14,000 feet to 20,000 ft. of new pictures being released in Sydney before we arrived here and now there are at least 30,000 ft. which is about one-third of what will be released in one year.

Mr. Spencer will not rent pictures to a continuous show, and is doing all he can to prevent them from opening. Of course it is a well-known fact that continuous shows wear out fully eight times as much film as a show which only gives one performance a day. Then again as they change their programme often you can easily see the reason why these shows are better for the manufacturers of film. The picture people in Australia all try to conduct their pictures in their own names, such as Spencer's pictures, which naturally gives the public the impression that they manufacture them themselves.

I must say that I admire the way shows are conducted in this country, however from a standpoint of a film exchange and the manufacturers there is not much opportunity for them to make money. I think that a happy medium between the way that shows are conducted in America and Australia is the right way in every particular to conduct a moving picture show. For instance, we must charge popular prices before this amusement will ever become popular with the people and remain so forever. Then again we must have a continuous show in order to give the entire public an opportunity of visiting shows often. The picture business is just starting in Australia, and there is still thousands of people in Australia who have never seen a moving picture show; this may seem strange, but is nevertheless true.

I opened the Colonial Theatre last October with the idea of conducting a show the same as they do in America. We had at that time seating capacity for 600 people and charged 6d. admission equal to 12 cents in American money to every one; we showed 3,000 ft. of film, and we immediately found that the idea would not go, as the public were not educated to the short shows. We were not discouraged as we have had ten long years of experience in the west and not being "tenderfoot" we decided to change our mode of operation. We showed 5,000 and 6,000 feet of film at one performance and charged 3d. admission, children 1d. for afternoon shows only, and from that time on the house has always been crowded, as it was the low price of admission that made the people go to our theatre, and enabled us to show to thousands of people who had never been in a picture show before. We had remodelled the place extensively before opening, but after running a couple of months we decided to double the seating capacity; this we did by extending the balcony, or dress circle as it is called in Australia, and tearing out the stage and extending the house 40 ft. back. We then installed 1,200 upholstered opera chairs and furnished the place throughout in the most up-to-date way. We now charge 3d. or 6 cents in American money for the entire lower floor and 6d. or 12 cents for any seat in the dress circle, 1/- for box seats. We are now showing to an average of 4,000 people daily and our success has been phenomenal. The public are well satisfied and would much rather see a performance which does not last more than one hour.

We show 4,000 feet of first run film at each performance, and give about eight performances daily. We are directly connected with seven more theatres and have a number under construction. We have the very best location in Sydney, in fact the only theatre in Sydney located where the heavy traffic passes the door. Our location in Sydney is similar to that of the corner of State and Van Buren streets in Chicago.

Mr. Spencer speaks of the conditions being different here regarding theatres, and will say that the law here is practically the same as it is in U. S. It would be an easy matter to open a theatre here seating 200 to 300 people as very few exits are required for so few, however it would be a hard proposition to get a location and a person would have to build his own place as the stores here are too small. Then again I don't at the present moment think it would be a paying proposition as the expenses are so high here and of course the large crowds come mostly in the evening.

Several of my American friends have asked me regarding the conditions here in Australia in the moving picture business. I have advised them all that it would take at least $25,000 to erect any kind of a show here in Australia, and if they have to buy their programme, as we do, it would take a great deal more. However, there is room here for a number of enterprising Yankess as everyone from U. S. is called over here, but they must have money in order to get in the picture business here. We have just recently opened up a large film exchange which supplies the very best service for our theatres, and will be glad to work in conjunction with anyone from U. S. by furnishing them good service should they desire to open in this field.

We have just recently organized the Colonial Theatre into a Limited company of $50,000 capital and it is now paying more than 100 per cent. dividends. We have under way a larger company with capital stock of $200,000 and we intend to work the picture business in Australia in the future as it is worked in America combining the American idea of continuous shows and low fees of admission together with the luxuriously furnished theatre, and full orchestra, which always prevails in places where higher prices of admission are charged.

We heartily agree with the Patents Co. in their methods of doing business in the moving picture field, and we must undoubtedly give them credit for the high standard to which they have elevated the moving picture business. We might add that so far we have never run anything but Patents Company's film. We have now placed standing orders for all the film turned out by Pathe, Gaumont and Biograph Companies, and will select our other subjects from the other different American manufacturers.

The American films are very popular in Australia, the Selig war pictures are decidedly so. The Selig, Essanay and Kalem films were practically unknown in Australia before we came here, and to-day beyond the question of all doubt Selig war pictures and Essanay western dramas are the most popular pictures in Aus-

"THE GAME"—A DRAMA

Vitagraph Subject Dealing With Elemental Passions

TRAPPER JOE, the guide, is a simple child of the forest. His home, if a woodsman may be said to have one, is in the borderland of Northern civilization, traversed only by the feet of the trapper. It is in this sitting that the Vitagraph players have laid the scenes of a strong dramatic subject "The Game," for this week's release in which Trapper Joe plays the important role.

Joe knows nothing of "The Game" as it is played in more civilized society, so when Norton, the millionaire, decides to take his beautiful daughter, Margaret to the great wilderness of the North for a vacation, Joe is destined to acquire knowledge of the ways of a world other than his.

Margaret, is a coquette skilled in the art of dissembling. Upon the unsophisticated trapper she brings to bear her many artful designs. Like a vision she breaks upon Joe's perceptions and soon he is hopelessly entangled in the skein of love.

The awakening comes when he discovers his enchantress in the arms of her lover and intended husband who has come to visit her at the camp. Here the savagery of the primitive man asserts itself. Outraged at the deception that has been practiced upon him by the girl, Joe seizes the unsuspecting fiance and hurls him to the ground like a helpless child, then embracing the idol of his heart he flings her from him and departs into the denseness of the forest to become an aimless exile trying to escape the spell of the sorceress, until he finally falls a victim to exposure in a blizzard.

At the time of "Joe's" death, the woman who trifled with his trusting nature as she would a bauble, is being married to the man of her choice in a distant city surrounded by the grandeur and pomp of her class.

The blizzard effects in "The Game," are real novelties in motion pictures. The fury of the wind, the blinding driving snow and the bending forest are simulated with startling realism, heightening the dramatic effect of the picture.

VITAGRAPH SUBJECT: "THE GAME."

GANE TO OPEN NEW HOUSE.

On the night of August 22, William J. Gane, who runs the Manhattan motion picture theatre at the corner of Broadway and Thirty-first street, New York City, will open the new Neumeyer theatre, Easton, Pa. The house, when completed, will be one of the most up-to-date in Pennsylvania; it will cost in the neighborhood of $150,000 and will seat 1,200 persons.

The naming of the house, was done in a most unique manner. In order to give it the name of some prominent man in the city, the citizens (through the newspapers) were allowed to send in the name of the person they thought the most prominent. When the time came for the drawing of names John H. Neumeyer, a well-known banker was called winner.

The house will run the best of motion pictures and vaudeville. The standard of Mr. Gane's performances are known to be the best that can be given the public and Easton will be able of competing with any town its size when it comes to clean first class entertainment.

MONTGOMERY IN JACKSONVILLE.

Memphis Picture Theatre Man Buys House and is Back in Business.

F. T. Montgomery, of Memphis, Tenn., the man who bears the reputation of having done more for the moving picture business in the south than any other individual, writes a correspondent of The Film Index, is in Jacksonville, and will, on August 1, open the Amusu theatre, having purchased it outright from J. C. Gray.

The name of the house, together with its policy, will be changed by the present owner, who gives his personal guarantee to the people of Jacksonville that they will have the pleasure of visiting one of the most up-to-date picture houses in the southern states, when once he gets things to going in good shape.

The house will be strictly a moving picture house, the only other feature being high-class singing. Several artists have been engaged, and will report for the opening performance on August 1.

All employees of the house will be uniformed, and Mr. Montgomery states positively that he intends to cater to the patronage of the ladies and children, and the high-class element of the city. His pictures, according to his statement, will be the latest that can be rented, and he has ordered one of the latest model machines.

The house will be remodeled and redecorated and carpets will be placed in the aisles. Other improvements will be made to the front of the house, in fact, the place will be changed greatly.

The performances will be commenced at 1 o'clock in the afternoon, and there will be no intermission at all, running through until 11 o'clock each evening.

Mr. Montgomery, according to press comment from Memphis, is a live wire, and leaves nothing undone to please his patrons. In other words he intends to give Jacksonville one of the most modern picture houses ever opened in the city.

Mr. Montgomery also writes to The Index as follows:

Editor The Film Index:

"As I informed you sometime ago I sold my theatres in Memphis and have recently purchased a very beautiful little house in this city. By the expenditure of some money I believe I can make it one of the most beautiful houses in the south. It shall be my earnest effort to try and elevate the moving picture business in this state as I did in Tennessee. I will use license service and I really anticipate a very good future for the business.

"Thanking you for past favors, I beg to remain, yours truly.

NEW PROPRIETOR FOR PALACE THEATRE.

H. W. Lawrence, of Philadelphia, Pa., is now the new proprietor of the Palace Theatre, Mahoney City, Pa. He arrived in this city last week and is stopping at the Mansion House. Mr. Lawrence has already begun making arrangements to have the house put in first class condition for the winter.

The Palace is one of the best motion picture theatres in this section of Pennsylvania and the new manager claims he will keep up its reputation of securing the latest and best pictures on the market. Miss Ester McGinnes has been made treasurer of the house and M. Leo McInerney has been engaged to sing the popular songs.

ROUND ABOUT DETROIT

McQuade Sees a Few Fine Picture Theatres in The Convention City

By James S. McQuade.

DURING the two days I spent in Detroit, at the F. S. A. convention, it was only natural that any spare moment would be utilized to learn something of the conditions surrounding the moving picture business there at the present time. And it was just as natural that I should familiarize myself with the workings of the only film exchange in Detroit, which not only attends well to the wants of exhibitors in that city, but also to a fine clientele throughout Michigan. I made it a point, therefore, to call on the National Vaudette Film Co., 69-71 Griswold street, at the first opportunity, where Phil Gleichman and Al. J. Gilligham are the mainspring of that firm's operations.

Appearances, nowadays, count tremendously and, to judge by them alone in this case, if one should only confine his attention to the imposing exterior of the offices in which these gentlemen preside, he could not fail to be impressed most favorably. The quarters, in which they have installed the various departments of their carefully systematized business, were formerly occupied by a prominent banking institution, and their safe and solid type of architecture gives one an immediate sense of security and strength.

But investigation convinces that the National Vaudette Exchange does not depend on appearances. You are furnished with facts that carry conviction just as correctly and pointedly as figures.

I was conducted through the several departments and found that everything is run with the precision and regularity of a carefully constructed piece of mechanism. The splendid salesroom for machines and supplies, well stocked and scrupulously neat; the accounting and booking departments, spacious and thronged by a tried and competent clerical force; the inspection, shipping and poster rooms, with busy and skillful workers; the ponderous vaults, neatly shelved and filled with reels of film, each shelf bearing a tag number corresponding to the catalogue reel number—all these convince you at once that the two men in the rich-appearing, private office, which you have passed through on entering, are putting their brains, experience and business acumen to good account.

The accompanying engraving gives views of the various departments in the National Vaudette Exchange and a fine exterior view of the front of the offices. Some may wonder at the absence of the working forces in the photographing, but they are reminded that these flash light pictures were taken after hours, as that was the only time a photographer could be secured to do this work on a hurry notice, and in time for me to bring them back to Chicago on the night train.

Detroit Moving Picture Theatres.

This brief mention of picture houses in Detroit will treat only of the principal theatres which run straight moving pictures. I was struck by one peculiarity of these houses; they are of small capacity, without exception, but not one of them is a "store" theatre. Each, from the street level (and below it) to the top story, is used exclusively as a theatre building. The pity of it is that they are not larger.

Princess Theatre.

This theatre, owned by the Michigan Amusement Co., is acknowledged by all who are unbiassed to be the leading straight moving picture house in Detroit. It was built two and a half years ago and can boast of the best class of patrons. With a capacity of 325 it has brought gratifying returns to the owners. Only six reels weekly are presented, with three changes in that period.

It was extremely warm weather when I called, but I found the interior cool and refreshing. The air is kept changing constantly by a large exhaust fan in the rear of the second story. This fan is operated by a 10 h.p. motor. In the center of the theatre ceiling, a circular outlet permits the heated air to rush upwards and the exhaust fan sucks it outside with the force of a strong breeze. Ceiling and side wall fans keep the air constantly in motion and a current of fresh air is kept constantly in motion throughout the entire house. The operator's room is about the coolest place in the theatre, due to a large portion of the intake passing through it.

W. J. Allen is manager of the Princess and he is ably supported by Mr. Stock, assistant manager and T. D. Moule, the treasurer. Strictly business principles are employed in the management of this theatre and everything that can be done wisely is done to gain patrons and their good opinion. The Princess is at 98 Woodward Avenue.

The Empress Theatre.

The Empress theatre, at 106 Woodward avenue, is owned by the Casino company (Caille & Kunsky), which also operates the Theatre Royale, the Casino and the Majestic. The first three mentioned run moving pictures strictly, the latter vaudeville and pictures. On entering this theatre one is immediately impressed by its lighting, ventilation, handsome interior, generally, and its comfortable seats.

Next to the Princess, the Empress can boast of the next best class of moving picture patrons. Like the Princess, its service is six reels per week with three changes, which appear to give great satisfaction to those who attend.

The Empress is a new house, and was opened May 1, 1910, at a cost of about $10,000. S. E. Overpack is manager and was brought from the Robinson opera house, Cincinnati, to open the theatre. The Empress will seat 320 people. Business has been very fair during the warm weather.

The Casino.

The Casino is situated at 28 Monroe avenue, and has been running four and a half years. Association and licensed film have always been used in this house. Its service is also confined to six reels with three weekly changes. An addition to the house was just completed two weeks ago, which increases its capacity by 100.

The Casino is the oldest moving picture house in Detroit, and is the original pioneer picture theatre. Like all the Casino Co.'s houses, and, indeed, like all the first class picture houses of Detroit—the Casino is well ventilated. It has a very handsome interior, the side walls being decorated with handsomely painted Cupids. The Casino has cost about $14,000 to put it in its present shape. Michael W. Schoenherr is the manager.

Theatre Royale.

The Theatre Royale, and the Casino, are both managed by the same indefatigable gentleman, Michael W. Schoenherr. This theatre has a capacity of 300. It was opened three years ago with the "Passion Play," which had a run of fourteen weeks. The Royale is very handsomely decorated, inside and out, and is very tastefully lighted by skillfully placed colored lamps. The service of this house is also six reels weekly with three changes. The performance is continuous from 9 to 11 p. m., two working crews being employed

The Theatre Royale building is the headquarters for various systems required in the operation of the Casino company's various theatres. Their sign department, in charge of David Alyea, makes all kinds of signs, both electric and painted; also large frame signs to be placed above the fronts of houses. Mr. Alyea turns out very neat illuminated panel posters, set on card board, in which he uses the pictorial subject of the posters furnished by manufacturers. Indeed, it would be hard to find in New York or Chicago, in front of even the first class houses, more attractive pictorial signs than are seen in front of the Casino Company's theatres.

At the Royale, too, is an electric fitting room and carpenter shop, where all repairs, of whatever kind required, are made for all the houses on the circuit. The house was well filled when I called, and the surroundings were very comfortable, owing to the fine ventilating system used at this house.

Empire Theatre.

The Empire theatre uses the highest class film service of any theatre in Detroit, presenting a first and a second run daily. The neighborhood seems to demand this, as this theatre is situated farther up Woodward avenue than any of the other moving picture houses. The attendance has been very fair through the hot spell, and manager Braun looks forward to an unusually good business this fall. The Empire is a substantially built house and a very neat structure.

The National Vaudette Film Company furnishes the service to all the theatres enumerated, and the care taken in the booking is evidenced by the lack of complaints regarding the competition of the same pictures in nearby houses

CLOSED FOR REPAIRS.

On account of a general overhauling and remodeling, the Nickelet, one of the first class motion picture houses in Allentown, Pa., closed July 18. The mirrors adorning the outside at the entrance will also be lowered and a new ticket office will be built. The entire system of ventilation will be changed, more electric fans will be added and the skylight in the rear will be opened, which will give the theatre perfect ventilation and add to the comfort of the patrons, which is the sole object of the management.

Offices of the National Vaudette Film Co., 69-71 Griswold St., Detroit, Mich.

Another feature, which will be added, will be the building of an extra room at the rear of the picture booth in which the sounds, represented in the pictures, will be duplicated as nearly as possible. An entirely new, and one of the latest, model picture machines will be installed and a new fireproof operating booth, which will conform strictly to the State laws, will be erected.

"PHILLY" TO HAVE NEW PICTURE HOUSE.

Sol. Hopkins, I. Miltrai, and J. W. Gardner, representing a theatrical syndicate, which recently purchased the old Market House, Passyunk Avenue and Morris Street, Philadelphia, Pa., have purchased 1628-30 Passyunk Avenue, and 1615-17 South Twelfth, which is to be added to the site for a motion picture and vaudeville theatre. Plot, with additional property, now measures 145 x 140. Plans for the playhouse are being prepared by John Allen.

WHAT THE MANUFACTURERS ARE DOING.

Lubin expects to take possession of his new studio about the middle of August. The studio is now in working order, but there has been delay in equipping the manufacturing plant which will be brand new in every detail.

The Vitagraph Co.'s new photographic department building is about finished. It is of concrete construction two stories high and is a material addition to the Vitagraph village.

Contracts have been let for the new Pathe studio in Jersey City Heights, N. J. The structure will cost when complete, including the site, $80,000, and will be completed by Nov. 1. A more extended discription will be given later.

PICTURES TAKE AT NARRAGANSETT.

Narragansett Pier, that famous New England summer resort, has at last got the motion picture craze and at the pier during the evening society in all its glitter sips its cooling refreshments, while the latest films display pictures of mirth and laughter.

Society wants only the latest pictures that are on the market and the funnier the film the better it likes it and always applaud when the climax is reached.

F. S. A. MEETING

Detroit Gathering Marks the End of the Association

By James S. McQuade.

DETROIT was still smiling in her gala dress, prepared specially for the Elks' yearly convention, when the members of the F. S. A. came straggling in to hold their annual convention, announced for July 21 to 23 inclusive. On Thursday morning, July 21, the following noses were counted at the Hotel Pontchartrain, where, in parlors K and L, the proceedings were conducted: H. E. Aitken and J. C. Graham, of the Western Film Exchange, St. Louis; O. T. Crawford, of the O. T. Crawford Film Exchange Co., St. Louis; H. A. Warner and P. Adler of the Duquesne Amusement Supply Co., Pittsburgh; J. B. Clark and R. A. Rowland, of the Pittsburgh Calcium Light & Film Co., Pittsburgh; J. R. Freuler, of the Western Film Exchange, Milwaukee; Robert Lieber, of H. Lieber Co., Indianapolis; E. Mandelbaum, of the Lake Shore Film & Supply Co., Cleveland; Edward Kohl, of the United Film Exchange, Cleveland; Phil Gleichman and Al. J. Gilligham, of the National Vaudette Film Co., Detroit, and Messrs. Pearce and Scheck, of the Pearce & Scheck Exchange, Baltimore, Md. With Messrs. Clark and Rowland, representing six exchanges, Freuler, two, and Messrs. Aitken and Graham, two, the list as given, showed a representation for seventeen exchanges.

A meeting of the executive committee was held at 10 a. m., when, with the exception of Percy L. Waters, of New York, all the members were present. Mr. Crawford was asked to participate in the deliberations, on the ground that official notification of the recent action of the M. P. P. Co. in his particular case, had not, up to that time, been received by the other members of the committee. The only business transacted was the planning of a boat ride to Star Island,, on the steamer Lou, Friday, July 22, and an auto sight-seeing trip, in Detroit; for Saturday, the closing day of the convention, for the benefit of the lady guests. It was also arranged to call a general meeting at 3 o'clock p. m., Thursday.

The 3 o'clock meeting revealed the fact that no business could be transacted, owing to the lack of sufficient members to form a quorum, and it was moved and carried that the meeting should be adjourned until Friday, at 10 o'clock a. m. By that time it was expected that several other representatives would put in an appearance. At the Thursday afternoon meeting, Messrs. Crawford, Aitken and Graham did not take their seats in the parlor, but remained in the hall outside, from which point they responded to their names at roll call.

Friday morning brought on the scene I. Van Ronkle, of the American Film Service, Chicago; Joe Hopp, of the Standard Film Exchange, Chicago; C. J. Hite, of the H. & H. Film Service, Chicago; Mr. Van Duse, of the Twin City Calcium & Stereopticon Co., and Mr. Christiansen, of the United Film Exchange, Cleveland. This added only four more exchanges to the list of the previous day, as Mr. Kohl had already represented the United of Cleveland. Mr. Crawford left for St. Louis Thursday night, not caring to take any further part in the proceedings.

The Friday morning meeting was not convened until 10:30 o'clock. A. J. Gilligham presided, and a resolution of thanks was passed to the remaining officers of the executive committee for their efforts on behalf of the association. It was also decided to devote Saturday to an auto-sight-seeing trip for the ladies in attendance, and, afterwards, the motion was put and carried unanimously that the balance in the F. S. A. treasury, after paying the cost of the items contracted for at this convention, should be donated to the National Red Cross Society of America. The amount thus disposed of so happily will be in the neighborhood of $400.

Secretary Freuler was emphatic in stating, and was desirous to have it appear in print, that during the meeting, there was no discussion of the General Film Co., and no reference made to any future action to be taken by the F. S. A. collectively. It was, however, recommended that every member present should return to his home city and conduct his business, as formerly, in his own way.

A committee, comprised of Messrs. Clark, Kohl and Hite, was appointed to purchase loving cups for the officers of the F. S. A., including O. T. Crawford, the former vice-president of the executive committee, as a token of the association's appreciation of their services.

Shortly before Joe Hopp, in funereal tones, made the motion to adjourn sine die, several draughts of the "bubbling liquid" were partaken of, and the first libation was poured out to the old F. S. A. as a thing of the past—a memory.

Just as the members had gained the office floor of the hotel, who should appear on the scene but "Pop" Lubin! And the welcome that "Pop" got was a hummer!

"I just heard of it, boys, in time to get here by the last train from the east. I wouldn't have missed it for anything!" And here "Pop" disappeared in the elevator, in the care of Secretary Freuler and others, on the way to remove his travel stains.

Mr. Lubin took in the boat trip to Star Island with a zest. The last seen of him, as the Lou pulled out, he was the central figure amid a fair bevy of ladies. And he was holding their attention, too, even more strongly than could a feature moving picture.

The following ladies visited Detroit as guests: Mrs. J. B. Clark, Mrs. R. A. Rowland, Mrs. J. C. Graham, Mrs. J. R. Freuler and two daughters, Mrs Robert Lieber and two daughters, Mrs. E. Mandelbaum and two lady guests, Mrs. Phil Gleichman, Mrs. A. J. Gilligham, Mrs. W. A. Daniels and Mrs. J. C. Graham.

W. A. Daniels and B. W. Beadell, of the National Waterproof Film Co., A. C. Roebuck, of the Enterprise Optical Co., and John Pelzer, machine sales manager of the Edison Co., were also in attendance.

NEW $10,000 HOUSE FOR SANFORD, ME.

Sanford, Me., is to have a new $10,000 theatre. Frank C. Leavitt has sold his Chicago Comique and the building will be moved off the premises to enable the erection of a new theatre which will be 70 feet wide by 100 feet long with a seating capacity of 1,300. This move has been contemplated for some time, but the deal was not consummated until July 18.

The present building has been purchased by Rev. Fr. J. J. McGinnis and it will be moved back upon his land. It will be remodelled and made into a school house for the parochial schools.

The work of removing the present building will probably be started July 20, and until the new theatre is ready for occupancy, the shows will be held at the K. of P. opera house, not a day or a matinee being lost.

The new building will be thoroughly up to date in every particular. The floors will be raised and there will be wide aisles so that the comfort of the audience will be looked after. The stage will be 28 feet deep with a curtain opening of 40 feet. The operating room for the motion picture machine will be of asbestos with the most modern equipment.

The contract for the building has not yet been let but the plans are completed and several contractors have figured on the work. It is expected that the new theatre will be ready for occupancy the first of October.

WILL BUILD THEATRES IN FLORIDA.

F. T. Montgomery, recently proprietor of the Majestic motion picture theatre of Memphis, Tenn., writes a Memphis friend that he is contemplating locating at Jacksonville, Fla., where he now is. In his letter he says:

"The worst motion picture show of Memphis is better than the best one now being operated in Jacksonville. In my trip down here I stopped a few days in Atlanta, and to my surprise found that there was a crusade on there against all picture shows. It seems so senseless and without reason. It seemed entirely out of harmony with the usual progressiveness that Atlanta has the credit of having."

NEW HOUSE A BEAUTY.

The "Princess" theatre, ocated at 216 North Twentieth street, Birmingham, Ala., resplendent in its beauty and freshness, opened Monday evening, July 19, and for nearly five hours was thronged to the doors with hundreds of pleased patrons.

The Princess is the result of the enterprise of H. M. Newsome, who has met with striking success in the motion picture theatre business in Birmingham, and the propitious opening last night is a guarantee of the success of this new venture.

The "Princess" will not be a vaudeville house, though high class singing will have a regular place on the program. Two new pictures will be run with each performance.

Mr. Franklyn Wallace and Mrs. Franklyn Wallace, who are always popular in Birmingham, are singing this week and making new friends with every performance. Mr. Green, a pleasing tenor, is also on the program.

An attractive feature of the new house is a seven-piece orchestra, which will be in attendance throughout the entire day. The new mirror screen on which the pictures are thrown is a new idea in screens, and makes a distinct lifelike picture.

A capacity of seating three hundred persons, and the excellent ventilation of the house, with its immense exhaust fan at the front of the house and a dozen fans arranged along the sides.

TWO NEW HOUSES FOR LOUISVILLE.

Within the next few months Louisville, Ky., will have two new picture houses within its midst—the Casino and the Orpheum.

At present the Kentucky metropolis can boast of some great picture houses, but it is claimed that the new companies will put up two of the most modern to be found anywhere south of the Mason-Dixon Line.

"WITH BRIDGES BURNED."—Among contemporary writers of fiction Rex Beach is one that holds a place in the hearts of the people by reason of his ability to tell stories of modern life and to get a grip upon the heart which modern environment and circumstances can so abundantly yield. In making the adaptation of this story to the motion picture realm, nothing of its original virility and feeling has been lost, but possibly the seeing of the action and the trials of the two young people about whom our interest centers may rather intensify the emotional appeal which the story makes.

The first scene shows the office of Comer & Mathison, contractors, and the dismissal of Louis Mitchell, a salesman, not because of his lack of ability but because of the hard times which make it necessary for the firm to cut down expenses. Mitchell pleads hard for his position and for the opportunity to do great things for the firm, and intimates that he dare not accept dismissal because he has just been married. This argument, while a good one, does not appeal to the hard-headed business man, and even Mitchell's producing of the photograph of the "only girl" fails to convince the older man. And so Mitchell is obliged to go home to the little wife and tell her they are now without an income. But is she dismayed? Not in the slightest degree! She is true blue and equal to the emergency apparently. After a moment's comforting of the downcast husband she tells him that she has a position, an undertaking waiting for him. She has seen in the paper the announcement that a big English syndicate is to rebuild the mining plants destroyed by the Boers during the war in South Africa. The contract involves about three million dollars, and she thinks it is just about the size contract that her husband should go after and get. The idea is so absurd and so wild that Mitchell cannot accept it at first and argues strenuously against it, finally concluding with the unanswerable statement that the firm would not finance his visit to London to go after the contract. But even this does not cause the young lady's determination to waver. She announces that she has a little money in the bank which she has saved up and that she will become financial backer of the enterprise. The fact that she has only a thousand dollars, and that the undertaking would naturally require about three or four thousand is hardly an argument worth considering, and after a few more fruitless attempts to dissuade her, Mitchell fearing to lose the proud position which he holds in the young wife's eyes, determines to go and do his American best to win the contract away from the rival concern on the other side. Of course, the firm having nothing to lose are nothing loath to let him make the attempt, and we see him at the bank with his little wife withdrawing the last money of her savings and then at the pier where she bids him good-bye and waves her handkerchief as the ship steams off down New York harbor.

In London he finds the business methods very different from those in America, and runs up against a snag in that a rival salesman who is a little fearful of this American invasion has conspired with the head clerk in the office to throw obstacles in his way. But worse than that when he finally succeeds in seeing the Director-General of the big syndicate, he learns that the mass of blue prints which he will be required to figure upon would normally take about three weeks time to go through, and he has but five days in which to complete this tremendous work. Nothing but the thought of the little girl who believes in him carries him through, but he makes the attempt with a gallantry worthy of knights of old. He locks himself in his hotel room and without sleeping, barely taking itme to eat in the five days and nights that follow, he goes through the mass of material and completes his work at the very last moment. But the rival salesman knowing the situation has contrived with the head clerk to set the clock ahead in the offices of the syndicate, so that when our hero arrives half frenzied with his figures he is five minutes too late and that the legal hour for handing in the estimates has past. If he had not worked five days and nights without sleep he probably would not be so easily turned aside, but the blow is too much for him, and dropping the precious documents on the floor, he staggers out of the office. We see the little office boy pick up the envelope and put it into his coat pocket. Then the scene shifts back to the lonely little girl waiting in New York and to the unexpected arrival of her husband, who has not brought the contract back with him. Of course, she is loyal and brave and tries to comfort him, but their hearts are nearly broken, and we would cry with them if we dared. Then there comes a telegram which makes the young husband believe that he is out of his head, for it's from his own firm and announces that the contract has been awarded to them and that he is therefore made their general sales manager at a big salary, and everything is lovely. Of course, we can guess that the little office boy knew the plot and handed the papers in, and like the two young people we would like to have hugged the office boy for his help.

The acting of this story is well nigh a model, for its distinct, quiet yet telling effects. It stands as a good example of the best in motion picture portrayal. There is an intimate heart-to-heart quality to this whole production which should make it one of the most appealing of the year and which will last in the hearts of the audiences all over the world, not only for the present year, but for many seasons to come. It should prove one of the good repeaters and continue to win new friends for itself, for Rex Beach and for the Edison Company for many moons.

"U. S. SUBMARINE 'SALMON'."—This most unusual film presents with remarkable clearness the evolutions of the submarine torpedo boat "Salmon" during the tests off Provincetown, Mass., prior to her acceptance by the U. S. Government. A few details regarding tne boat are as follows:

The "Salmon" is the latest submarine added to the U. S. Navy, being built by the Holland Electric Boat Company, Quincy, Mass., and is the largest yet constructed anywhere, being 178 feet in length over all and about 370 tons displacement. She is equipped with port and starboard gasoline engines of eight-cylinder type, capable of developing 200 horsepower each. These engines are for surface running. For running submerged she uses a storage battery which propels two 200-horsepower electric motors coupled direct to the gasoline engine shafting. She has shown a proven speed of 14½ knots per hour running on the surface and 13½ knots per hour running submerged. It is expected that her speed on surface will reach 16 knots.

The "Salmon" is capable of making a dive in three minutes by shipping water ballast, changing from full surface to an entirely submerged condition in this short space of time. In making "porpoise" dives when running water ballast is not used the ship rising and sinking entirely by manipulation of her horizontal rudders. She can remain under water at any reasonable depth for 24 hours without calling on the compressed air tanks, a crew of seven men being sustained for this length of time by the air taken under with the ship.

The "Salmon" is equipped with two torpedo tubes on the starboard and port bows, respectively, just under the surface of the water, capable of discharging a torpedo every minute. She has submarine signal bells and stetescope apparatus permitting transmission of signals at a distance of about 1 mile with sister ships when submerged. Further she has range finders and periscopes (tall upright poles) by which means the men below can see as far as the eye can reach in any direction.

The film shows the "Salmon" at close range, running on surface, submerging by water ballast, making "porpoise" dives and running submerged so that only the tops of the periscopes are visible. All the pictures were taken at sea from an accompanying boat in a fairly rough sea, and it is not going too far to say that the effect is thrilling.

To the many thousands of people who are keenly interested in the modern submarine boat and yet who never had, and never may have, an opportunity to see one, the picture will be a rare treat. Through the courtesy and cooperation of the Holland Electric Boat Company we are enabled to present it to the motion picture public.

"THE MOTHS AND THE FLAME."—The first scene in an artist's studio shows the old artist and his three pretty daughters, and indicates their infatuation for the romantic looking young violinist, who can be seen playing by the window in his room just across the area. He is the "Flame" about which the three little "Moths" of girls are fluttering, much to the old father's mingled amusement and disgust. And then stepping across the area we see the young violinist receiving an offer by telegram to play some numbers at the Waldorf, an opening which means fame and fortune to him. And then his dismay at the realization that he has no dress suit. In the midst of his despair he spies the suit belonging to the old artist which the daughters have been brushing and have hung in the big studio window almost within reach of the musician. The temptation is too great, and taking down a shelf on which his music rests, he puts it as a gangplank across the areaway and proceeds to go after the coveted dress suit. Of course, his three little adorers catch him in the act, and the surprise throws him off his balance and he narrowly escapes the fall into the area below. But the athletic girl rescues him and they pull him into the studio out of danger. The only thing he can do now is to explain his dilemma and threw himself on their mercy. Of course, they are only too glad to help him, and freely give him papa's dress suit and send him on his way rejoicing back across the plank across the areaway. Then the three little girls steal off one by one, each unknown to the other to the recital where he is to play. And here while they are showering their bouquets and adulation upon him among the other women, papa catches them and sends them home. Following this summary treatment the youth finds upon his floor three little crumpled notes which have been tossed across the areaway —three little proposals of an elopement to escape the cruel father. But he has a reason for not accepting any one of these three, and putting the notes in three bouquets, takes them with the borrowed dress suit back to the studio. Of course, the little girls are much embarrassed by his appearance before papa with the dress suit and also by his presentation of three bouquets, one to each, each of whom believes herself to be the one that he adores. And then the old father wakes up, seizes the bouquets angrily and pounces upon the notes which the youth would have so delicately returned to the writers. After reading them the irate old artist seizes our musician friend by the shoulders and gives him a good shaking, denouncing him for playing upon the affections of his three trusting innocent daughters. But Herr Flamme defends himself valiantly, and to prove that he has no such intention, produces from his pocket a photograph, which he hands to the father. It is a picture of a large, stout, middle aged German woman and five small children, and is inscribed "Deine liebe Familie, Lena." The old artist appreciates the humor of the situation and calls to the girls to look at the picture. The poor little "Moths" are petrified by its disclosure and can hardly believe that it is his, but when he assures them that it is the object of his heart's devotion they look at each other, shake their little heads, and with handkerchiefs to their eyes sadly and slowly disappear one by one.

The story is bright and fresh and the types and atmosphere interesting and unusual. The three little daughters are quaintly contrasted and the young musician, the flame at which they are so nearly scorched will be recognized as a reproduction of a very world-famous pianist. The whole picture should be another proof that fun and laughter can be produced without the aid of slapstick, and also that the Edison comedies have a distinctive atmosphere and tone of their owr which puts them in a class by themselves and which will probably in some measure account for their increasing popularity of late.

BIOGRAPH CO.

"AN ARCADIAN MAID."—Woe to him who will prey upon those of pastoral and bucolic innocence, for fate is sure to wreak vengeance, and that vengeance is invariably terrible. Such was the lot of an unconscionable villain who imposed upon the trusting innocence of the country maid. Priscilla, after a long and weary search, secures work at a farmhouse. She is at once ordered to do the washing, and is just ensconced at the tubs by the well when a young Italian peddler appears and is directed by her to the mistress. His wares appeal to the farm wife and he succeeds in disposing of quite a bill of goods. Leaving the mistress, the peddler passes on to Priscilla to thank her for bringing him to her mistress and to show his gratitude presents her with a cheap finger ring, at the same time bestowing upon her words of flattery. The poor innocent little girl is quite overwhelmed and believes every word he utters, treasuring the ring highly, which was not worth more than a nickel. The peddler's principal weakness is gambling, and he not only loses his money, but becomes involved in debt. His creditors press him for payment and he is at a loss as to how to raise the necessary, when the though of the little country maid occurs to him. He knows he has gained her confidence and that she loves him, hence he considers his plan easy. She, of course, has no money of her own, but she knows her master keeps his money in a sock under his pillow. The peddler persuades her to secure this money, pretending that he will take her away with him and marry her. This suggestion fairly hypnotizes her and so she commits the theft. The peddler pockets the money and promises to meet her at their usual trysting-place by the roadside. Here she repairs, only to learn that the scoundrel has just left on the night train. Wildly she dashes towards the railroad, only to see the train on its way. Crushed in spirit she wanders off, but the reckoning is inevitable. Fate now takes a hand and on the train the peddler engages in a brawl, during which he tumbles from the flying train. Struggling to his feet he drags himself to the woods. Here the maid meets him, and he in a burst of rage attempts to strike her, but injured more seriously than he realized, he falls dead at the foot of a tree. With this comes a vivid realization of her deed, and securing the money she had taken from the farmer, she hastens to make reparation by putting the money back from where she took it, the master being none the wiser. The affair has taught her a powerful lesson.

"HER FATHER'S PRIDE."—Of all human actions, pride seldomest obtains its end; for, aiming at honor and reputation, it reaps contempt and derision. It was the sin that overthrew the angels. It proceeds from the want of sense or the want of thought. The old father in this Biograph story was possessed of such unreasonable pride as to cause much misery and heartache. We cannot consistently call it pride, but rather, narrow prejudice. Mr. and Mrs. Southcomb dearly loved their only daughter, Ann, but being Quakers had set ideas, Ann was a pretty girl of twenty, bright, vivacions and romantic, and loved her parents devotedly, but she chafed under what she deemed almost parental despotism. They decried any ebullition her youth might induce, and frowned into silence her joyous ringing laughter. This condition told on her and she longed for life's radiant sunshine, love. It comes at last. Allen Edwards, a concert singer, while driving his auto in the neighborhood of the old Quaker's farm, meets with a serious accident, and is carried to the Southcomb homestead. He is in such a condition that he cannot be removed to his home for some time, and hence is cared for by the Southcomb family, although the old man openly expresses his aversion for the young man on account of the profession. An attachment springs up between Ann and Allen which ripens into sincere love. The old man is beside himself with rage when they broach the subject of marriage. But Ann is decided and the old man, though he loved his daughter, haughtily drives her from the house, for when pride begins, love ceases. He stubbornly refuses to have anything further to do with her. He becomes so bitter that he erases her name from the family bible. To him she is as dead. Many a heartache does the young wife suffer, though Allen has tried time and time again to effect a reconciliation, until one day they receive word that the old Southcomb farm had been seized for debt and the couple were forced to go to the poorhouse. What a shock this is to the young couple. It is the old story of pride defeating its own end by bringing the man who seeks esteem into contempt. The young people make their way to the poorhouse, where the old father is seem scrubbing floors, while the mother bends over a washtub. They are brought to the office to interview their disowned daughter, but the old man is still adamant, and while the mother is inclined to accept Ann's protection, the father stubbornly refuses, going back with hauteur to his scrub pail. Ann now realizes that something more than bare persuasion must be resorted to, and as she views through the half open door her parents' sad plight, an idea strikes her. Sitting herself at the organ, she plays and sings her father's favorite hymn. The sound of the music halts the old man in his work, and he crawls sobbing to the door to hear the better. Ann continues to play and sing until at last he staggers up to be folded in her arms. He now realizes how unreasonable he has been, not only to her, but to her mother and himself.

GAUMONT.
(George Kleine.)

"THE LORD'S PRAYER."—The Lord's Prayer! Even though we be engrossed in the utterly material, the common round of the struggle for bread or for gold and precious stones, how these words move us! Some of us may not even be sure of the words, so long it is since we knelt at our mother's knee and repeated it softly, rather abashed at the sound of the sacred symphony in our own voices.

Perhaps we may dimly remember just how we said it—slowly, very slowly, with quite a pause after each phrase—and maybe there was a picture in our minds for each group of words; a vague glorious picture, with a glow of yellow light upon it, and a halo of exaltation around it. "Our Father Who Art in Heaven"—that tender address! Who is so absorbed in worldly matters that those words convey him no vision? "Hallowed Be Thy Name"—A chastened reverence fills our very soul; we see a world of bended heads, a study in humility. "Thy Kingdom Come, Thy Will Be Done on Earth as It Is in Heaven"—We are lifted up by a wave of reverence, an ecstacy of renunciation. "Give Us This Day Our Daily Bread"—How small and helpless we are, after all; supplicants for favor, lacking which we are but clay. "And Forgive Us Our Trespasses"—Are we not almost ashamed as we ask it? "As We Forgive Those Who Trespass Against Us"—We bow our heads in contrition as memories of anger and bitterness against our neighbor confuse us.

"Lead Us Not Into Temptation"—While the spirit is upon us, we almost think there is no temptation. "But Deliver Us From Evil"—evil! What dark vision is that our brain conjures up? But we smile; for are we not protected? "For Thine is the Kingdom, and the Power, and the Glory, Forever and Ever—Amen."

What a study for the maker of pictures! To materialize in so far as moving pictures may be said to materialize—the half formed visions of a sacred dream—the realization of idealization. It seems almost too much to expect; and yet it has been accomplished with a wealth of beauty and an inspiration of action that makes one forget it is a moving picture at all. Truly, there is an artist in the house of Gaumont.

There is an impressionable age which we all pass through, in which all things out of the ordinary leave a deep, almost extravagant impression upon us. In those years, when we witness the rendition of some heroic play by one gifted in the art of representation, we leave the scene so transported that we scarcely recognize our commonplace surroundings. The period passes as the years advance; but now and then, even when we thikk that quality of our soul is dead, a bit of nature, a strain of music, a picture will recall it. "The Lord's Prayer" is such a picture; and if one can witness it without experiencing that strange exultation, let him go home and kneeling, repeat the sacred words until they become real to him once more.

"AN ANCIENT MARINER."—The habits of a lifetime are indeed hard to change.—This is an amusing picture of which the hero is a retired admiral, who follows on land the same routine that he practiced at sea. Thus in the morning his faithful servant runs up a flag over his bedstead and fires a small cannon to awaken him. One of the admiral's weaknesses is to give all his orders through a speaking trumpet, and this very much annoys everyone he has to do with. He cannot rest except in a hammock, and so when he goes to an inn one is slung up for him while he is partaking of refreshment.

"THE ACE OF HEARTS."—Laughter and sober excitement and romance and uncertainty gathered together into one film in exactly correct proportions.—

A captain is the proud possessor of a pretty daughter, who in turn possesses the affections of a certain young man. One morning the captain marches off for his daily recreation during the course of which he visits a near cafe and commences a game of cards with a friend. At a latter stage of the game the captain accuses his opponent of cheating. Cards are exchanged. At this juncture the daughter's suitor saunters in, sums up the position, and runs off to tell the daughter. Returning, he is prevailed upon by the girl to patch up the difference between the two old men, and the film ends with concord reigning supreme.

"TENERIFFE, THE GEM OF THE CANARIES."—This is the largest of the Canary group, measuring about sixty miles in length by half as many in width.

The bulk of the island is composed of mountains of volcanic origin.

Only about one-seventh of the island's area is under cultivation. In ordinary years sufficient grain and potatoes are produced to supply the wants of the island. Numerous fruits and berries are also grown.

Our panorama covers all the points of exceptional interest and gives a perfectly clear conception of the appearance of both the cities and the wilder portions of the beautiful island.

URBAN-ECLIPSE.
(George Kleine.)

"WITCH OF CARABOSSE."—A film containing some amusing trick effects, the witch transforming a villager into a wild beast. Under a penalty of lynching she is compelled to remove her spell. Our story follows closely an old French legend of a witch who lived in a heap of ruins near a medieval village. She was much feared by the young people of the community with one exception, a pompous young swain who takes great delight in leading the others against the mysterious woman.

He finally falls victim to her conjurings, much to the pleasure of most of his companions, as his foolhardiness had always been a matter of considerable envy.

After many unpleasant experiences he is released from the spell a wiser man.

"CAMEL AND HORSE RACING IN EGYPT."—This is a film of unusual interest, showing that the "Sport of Kings" is followed with much interest at Heliopolis.

The racing is not restricted to horses, however, ungainly camels also compete. An interesting part of the picture shows horses gracefully dancing to the strains of a band.

The scenes are presented in the following order:

I. The Paddock—Showing the numerous entries and the society of that tropical country. The fierce brightness of the sun has made possible remarkably clear-cut pictures.

II. Horse Races.—In which the contesting animals are all graceful Arabian steeds; beautiful in body, sleek of limb and small of hoof. They are ridden by native jockeys.

III. Camel Races,—The "Ships of the Desert" swing along at remarkable speed. It is interesting to note the east with which they seem to move in these races as compared with their clumsiness in ordinary action.

IV. Dancing Horses—This final scene is probably the most interesting and certainly the most beautiful. The finely bred Arabian steeds ridden by chiefs of the sand kingdom entertain in a fascinating manner.

The medley of European and native costumes one sees amongst the crowds lends a charm to the film.

"THREE HEARTS."—With three hearts one must be unhappy; one at least tastes the bitter sorrow of denial, and first Dick and then Jasper faces grim shadows. Dick and Synthia are in love, though Dick has not yet spoken to Synthia's father. The latter favors Jasper's suit, and when he is fatally bitten by a rattler he makes Synthia promise that she will marry Jasper, and he dies happy in the knowledge that she will be cared for. It is a bitter blow to Dick, but he conquers his grief and heartily congratulates the unsuspecting Jasper. There is a railroad wreck in which Jasper is terribly injured. Careful nursing holds life in the shattered body, but the face is seamed and scarred, and sightless eyes look out upon a world of blackness. Bravely Synthia respects her pledge and Jasper is given no hint of his disfigurement, while he has not yet acquired the sensitive touch of the blind. But Dick's mother writes to the mother of Jasper protesting against the sacrifice of Synthia, and Jasper overhears the letter read. It is a terrible moment for the afflicted man, and he gropes his way to his room vainly seeking to learn the truth from his mirror. Some hint of his appearance he gains and he writes to Synthia releasing her from her pledge. She and Dick are married, and as the wedding party leaves the church Jasper gropes his way to the altar where, but a moment ago Dick and Synthia stood in radiant happiness, and seeks the only consolation left him. A powerful story well told.

"AH SING AND THE GREASERS."—A cowboy comedy possessed of real novelty. The "Curly Q" ranch has a Chinese cook and the cook, of course, has a pigtail. There is not a rider on the ranch who is insensible to the appeal to that pigtail, and Ah Sing is constantly in hot water. Even the boss sympathizes with the boys, and Sing finds no comfort in complaint, so he gives warning that some day he will "get mad." The boss rides to town for the pay roll and two greasers plan to hold him up. The hold-up is prevented by the appearance of some of the cowboys, but the greasers follow to the ranch and are about to make the attack when they are spied by Ah Sing. Not long before Sing was made the victim of a jocular hold-up by the ranchmen, and when Sing spies two men with handkerchief masks he suspects a repetition of the joke and proceeds to "get mad" in his peculiar Oriental fashion. He mixes cayenne pepper with ammonia, and when the greasers make their appearance after having robbed the boss Ah Sing lets them have the mess full in the face. Their guns drop and Sing, master of the situation, is hugely enjoying the joke when the riders rush in. For the first time it dawns upon Sing that these are real robbers and not the tormenting cowboys, and he wilts, but he braces up to receive the thanks of the boss and his little daughter, and the congratulations of the riders.

"AN UNFAIR GAME."—A fashionable young society lady, to escape social whirl and exactions, and suffering from ennui, induces her father to take her on one of his annual fall shooting trips to the wilds of Northern Canada. Her intended husband promises to join them later.

Located in their camp, far away from civilization and surrounded by primeval forests, "Trapper Joe," who is one of nature's sons, unsophisticated, untutored and unaccustomed to the ways of the ultra monde, happens into camp and beholds Margaret, who breaks upon his astonished gaze like a vision of loveliness. Unused to the charms and graces of women of such refinement and higher birth, he is infatuated and at once enslaved by her beauty.

Margaret observes this, and for pastime and amusement plays upon Joe's susceptibility, and leads him on by her winning ways and practiced coquetry, until he is completely dazzled, like the poor moth flittering about the brilliant flame. His heart and mind are engrossed until the increasing passion of his soul bursts forth in a declaration of his love, and he wildly enfolds her in his arms and madly kisses her.

It is then she coldly casts him aside, as she would the cards when she had won the stakes and tired of the game. He does not understand her meaning and cannot give her up. It is not until he finds Margaret in the embrace of her fiance, who has come to the camp, that he realizes she has only been trifling with him. Infuriated, he rushes upon the man and throws him aside, then clasps Margaret to his breast. She repulses him, and he casts her upon the ground and hastens from the scene, anxious to forget his misery and seek solitude in his despair.

Margaret, with her husband-to-be and her father, leaves camp and returns to the city, where later on she marries. While her happiness seems complete—wedding bells are ringing and the nuptials are being celebrated—"Trapper Joe" is seen lost in a stupor of self-reproach and dazedly standing in the midst of a howling blizzard in his native forest. Suddenly his suffering bursts into a delirium, finally reaching a state of mental coma, in which he falls prone and helpless, soon becoming a victim of the relentless storm which enshrouds his body in a winding sheet of snow.

"THE WOOING O'T."—In quest of a better knowledge of botany and a closer touch with nature, a party of young girls rent a small cottage in the country and take possession of it with their preceptress, who is an expert botanist, and very little experienced in affairs de coeur. Coincidently a class of young fellows rent the cottage next door to the girls with the avowed purpose of studying geology under the tutelage of an old professor, whose heart might be mistaken for a geological specimen before it was analyzed by the aforesaid preceptress.

It does not take long for the boys to learn who their next door neighbors are, and the girls are not slow in acquainting themselves with the presence of the boys, and soon the merry dance begins, each boy pairing himself off with one of the girls, of which the observing professor and preceptress take note and decide to do likewise. Everybody seems to fall in love with each other, or someone else, but Sam; he has no one to love him, and has to depend on his ever-ready appetite, which seems to be his constant companion and best friend, who finds an abiding consolation in apples and eats.

The professor carries his research into the methods of his pupils in winning the hearts of the girls, and he decides to practice them in laying siege to the heart of the fair "Letitia," otherwise known as the preceptress. He notes that they hold a buttercup under the girls' chins and ask them: "Do you like butter?" wherewith the professor proceedeth to try it on Letitia, who is tickled to death with the professor's attention and the remembrance of her girlhood days.

She is filled with the spirit and gets quite kittenish, and remarks the playful ways of her charges, and determines to imitate them. One of the girls, while picking the petals from a daisy, says, "He loves me; he loves me not," and is caught in the act by her sweet heart, who kisses her. Letitia happens to be looking at the episode and says, "I will try that on the professor"— and she does. Then the professor sees one of his boys and a girl with a straw in their mouths, each chewing on an end until they come to the middle, when they kiss.

The professor seeks out Letitia and works the straw game on her. With what success the two elderly spooners keep up with their young friends can best be judged as they put into execution their youthful mimicry. They put one in mind of a couple of stiff-jointed mechanical toys trying to palm themselves off as a couple of sappy kids. They are the funniest yet, and a little more so. But even their poor foolish attempts at the rejuvenation of their susceptibilities are better than Sam's loneliness, who, with a "no-one-to-love-me" expression, is about to commit suicide by jumping into the lake with an anchor fastened to a rope around his neck; and he would have done it, too—if he hadn't found an apple lingering in the recess of his shirt bosom, and once more the passions of his soul are subdued by the supremacy of his appetite. He immediately removes the rope from his neck and begins to surround the apple with his own fat personality. The picture closes with Sam's smiles and the apple's finish.

"HER MOTHER'S WEDDING GOWN."—In a small Scotch village there dwells a Highland lassie who is ambitious to become a prima donna. She makes up her mind to leave home and secure a musical education in the city. Her mother and father object, and she is told by her father that if she goes away from home she cannot return. Her resolution cannot be thwarted by this severe penalty, and after a heart-breaking leave-taking between mother and daughter, and with a sad disappointment and farewell from her father, and the sympathy of the faithful collie dog,

NOVELTY IN IDEA

Ah Sing has no idea of being a hero. He's just a ranch cook who gets tired of having his pigtail tweaked every ten minutes and when he thinks that the cowboys are planning a repetition of a spectacular hold-up he gets ready for them and greets them with a dose of ammonia and red pepper. He is shocked when he learns that the men are real desperados, but he bears his lightly won honors beamingly. A capital comedy subject that is in every way out of the ordinary.

who evinces his sympathy by many remarkable attentions to all, she departs upon the career of her own choosing.

In the following scenes the father, assisted by his dog, is seen attending his sheep as they browse in glen and moor, in fields and pasture, presenting some very beautiful glimpses of natural scenery characteristic of the country in which the sheep herders feed their flocks.

While the daughter is away the mother dies; the old father is now left alone with his true friend, the dog, who tries to comfort the old man by waiting upon him, carrying his shoes and doing other almost human acts of kindness and attention.

The daughter, who has become an accomplished singer, starts on her return home. She arrives in her native haunts almost unrecognized, although she learns from a woman of her mother's death. She reaches her old home while her father is absent. She busies herself in an effort to console herself in the loss of her mother, and, in order to surprise her father, dresses herself in her mother's wedding gown, and sits spinning and singing when her father returns, sees her, and thinking he beholds a vision of his wife, shouts, "My bride! My bride!"

The daughter rushes to her father. He recognizes her, and when she tells him that she has come to live with him always his joy is unbounded. Then she resumes her spinning and sings her father's favorite Scotch ballad, "Annie Laurie."

"HER FIRST LONG DRESS."—Margaret longed for "the coming out season;' she had been promised her first long dress and its expected arrival was causing her no small amount of anxiety. At last the messenger arrived and delivered one box of joy, namely, the long dress. Losing no time in apprising her athletic brother of the fact, she hastened to don the new dress and sallied forth to do the boulevards. She attracted so much attention that the morning cruise proved an eventful one—for everywhere she went, the proverbial Johnny was at her heels.

Upon her arrival at the ice cream parlor, everybody wanted to give up their seat to her. Then when she sat at a separate table, they all with one accord moved gently to her side. This was too much for the young pet of the family and she, after many like experiences, returned home and decided to relegate the newly acquired gown to the wardrobe and return to her first love—the short skirts. While sobbing at the thought of parting with her first long dress, she was confronted by the brother, who suggests a stratagem and is soon fitted out in sister's summer lingerie, with the avowed intention of venting his pent-up feelings on the gay lotharios. Accordingly he visits in the same path as that covered by the sister and the first consternation was caused at the ice cream parlor, when he found it necessary to make a cleaning, which was done in regular Reno style.

On the street car he had occasion to do likewise. A walk in the park and the persistent trailers were again discovered and finished when the "new girl" picked the ribbon cutter up bodily and tossed him from the bridge into the lagoon.

"SHRIMPS."—An educational picture of rare value, showing the setting of nets, drawing in of shrimp, steaming, drying and preparing for market.

"THE LAW OF THE WEST."—In the shadow of the Cascades, Jim Dalton, a prospector, and his Indian guide, come upon a gold deposit. Elated with their discovery, Dalton hastens to tell his wife of their good fortune, leaving the Indian to guard the claim. The lonely wife, awaiting his return, has been robbed of the food in the house by two claim jumpers, who are camped on the main trail leading to Jim's find. On passing these rogues, Dalton by accident drops a rich nugget, this giving them an unexpected clue, and they follow it up. Coming upon the Indian left in charge, they overpower and throw him in the raging torrents before the falls, only to return to the coveted claim to find the return of Dalton and his wife, who had just arrived. He is forcibly detained by one of the rogues, while Rogers, the other, hastens to file his claim. The justice and claim agents question him and finally make a proposition of $2,000 for the prospect. This is accepted and the notice is posted. Dalton, heavy hearted, leads his wife away and goes slowly back to the lonely cabin in the mountains. The Indian, almost exhausted, drags himself from the water and creeps back to the cabin and tells what has happened. In the meantime the sale of the claim has been consummated and the rogues are celebrating their good luck when a quarrel ensues between them and rsults disastrously to Rogers, the elder of the two.

The Indian, who has been watching from cover, follows Johnson, the other, and informs the new owners of the circumstances. A vigilance committee is formed and the culprit is brought within the pale of the law. The $2,000 is given to Dalton, who identifies the rogues, as those who forcibly took the claim, robbed his home and threatened his wife. The Indian calling for vengeance for the treatment given him, Johnson is led away to meet his just punishment.

PATHE FRERES.

"BETTY AS AN ERRAND GIRL."—Betty is given employment as errand girl at a fashionable milliner's. Her first mission is to deliver to a customer's home an enormous creation that has been purchased, and which is contained in a box about twice as big as herself. On the way Betty lifts the cover of the box, and, momentarily, awed into admiration at the magnificence of the hat, gazes silently upon it for a few minutes. The next moment it is on her head with her own microscopic sailor hat reposing in the huge box and Betty is marching proudly down the street with the hat box on her arm. Long before her destination is reached she has played a few of her outrageous pranks and has escaped from her victims by hiding in the box. Ultimately she reaches her destination, delivers her sailor hat in its box and leaves with a light step to return to the store. The aggrieved customer, however, soon appears with the sailor hat in her hand. The situation is rapidly taken in by the milliner when she gazes with a horror-stricken face at Betty's miniature form surrounded by the enormous hat. There is a scuffle, a kick and Betty is flying through the doorway and will now have to look for another job.

"HUNTING BATS IN SUMATRA."—All parts of the world are ransacked to produce interesting subjects, and in this film we present something that is a distinct novelty. The location of the bats by the sportsman necessitates a pair of keen eyes, since the bats who sleep during the day time suspended to trees have all the appearance of hanging fruit, and one would scarcely think at first sight that they were living animals. But the sound of a gunshot disturbs the whole tree, the dark shadowy forms become animate, and the sky is darkened by a cloud of flapping wings. Even then one scarcely realizes that they are bats, and it is not until the sportsman picks up one of the fallen animals and stretches out its wings with the assistance of his attendant, that it is possible to form an accurate idea of its size and strength.

"UNDER BOTH FLAGS."—General Murray and his wife and daughter were stanch Southerners, but his son Charles had been educated at West Point and was a captain in the Northern Army. Neither his mother's and sister Ruth's tears and entreaties or his father's arguments could persuade him to fight against the Union. The general is advised of the commencement of hostilities and requested to send a trustworthy girl to act as spy by his friend commanding the Tennessee Army. Ruth, seeing the letter, volunteers to undertake the hazardous job, and she appears in the Northern camp disguised as a poor vendor of cakes. Her disguise is easily penetrated by her brother and he endeavors to persuade her to return home. Unobserved, however, she steals some important plans belonging to General Newhall and glides off, but the theft is soon discovered and she is captured before getting away, and the plans being found on her person she is condemned at a drum-head court martial. When imprisoned, with the connivance of a sentry, she changes clothes with her brother, and Charles remains in the barn prison, while she goes out to take command of his company and devise a means of escape. An order, however, addressed to her brother to bring on reinforcements to save the day is naturally handed to her, and she cannot help but go to fight against the South. A fierce battle is raging and the arrival of Ruth with her men turns the tide in favor of the Northern Army, and she is being congratulated by the general and his officers on her valor when she hears that the supposed spy is to be shot at sundown. Without hesitation she discloses her identity, explains matters to the general, and, in consideration of her bravery, is pardoned. But a pardon must also be sent for Charles, for the deception has not been discovered at the camp, and he will be shot in her place. General Newhall writes the pardon and she mounts a horse and starts on her wild ride, for sundown is now rapidly approaching. She arrives, however, at her destination in the nick of time, and a happy reunion between brother and sister takes place. The vividness with which the battle scenes in this film are carried out is remarkable.

"THE BARREL JUMPER."—The young woman who entertains in this film is of marvelous agility and skill in her chosen profession. She jumps in and out of big and little barrels like a regular Jack-in-the-box, performing the most astonishing feats with apparently the greatest ease. Her final act when she jumps into and out of a series of barrels blindfolded, commencing at a great height and jumping down and down and down, with never a mishap, is really a hair-raising performance.

"NO MAN'S LAND."—Mary had a little lover, who loved her well, but Mary also had stern parents who refused to entertain his suit. So the film opens, but the swain, to whom life was not worth living without his shepherdess, prevails upon her to leave her lambs and fly with him. Unfortunately, after having encompassed many difficulties they are stopped by the police and he is condemned to prison. Languishing in his cell there fluttered to the despairing lover a white pigeon bearing a message from Mary, that means of deliverance were concealed in his bread. Thanks to a long rope and a file found there the young shepherd succeeds in escaping from his dungeon, but only to fall into the arms of Mary's parents. Happily these allowed some appeal to be made to their hearts, and pardon was granted and consent to the union given. Thereupon the wedding was celebrated with much pomp and ceremony, and of course the pair lived happy ever after.

"NO REST FOR THE WEARY."—A traveler tired and weary tries to obtain some sleep in a country hotel, but fate decrees otherwise. The bed, as soon as he touches it, throws him out, and moves around and finally monsters appear who carry it off. The traveler then tries a chair, but this evades him and bobs around from spot to spot. At last he secures it, but as soon as he sits himself down a row of chairs appears and he is tossed from one chair to the next and back again. Finally the traveler is mixed up with the chairs, which multiply with great rapidity, and the film leaves him practically covered with them and unable to obtain his much desired rest.

"THE LATEST FASHION IN SKIRTS."—Mrs. Kate Scroggins, one of the leaders of the New Rochelle society, felt that it was incumbent on her to be in the fashion, and accordingly decided to order a hobble skirt. Naturally requiring to be as much up to date as possible she went to New York and obtained it from a Fifth avenue dressmaker. Little did she realize that the more fashionable the modiste, the tighter the dress round the ankles. It arrived home in time for her to put it on before going to Nelly Miller's reception. It took her but a few seconds to ascertain that she could not take a step over three inches long in it, and when it came to descending the stairs the only practical thing to do was to jump each step with the feet kept close together. These were difficulties easily solved, but what was she to do when she stopped a passing trolley and found she could not step up, and Kate was no lightweight either. There

"FIFTIETH ANNIVERSARY OF YOKOHAMA."—In 1860 Yokohama, which today has about 500,000 inhabitants, was nothing but a fishing village, and the celebration of the jubilee of the opening up of the town to commerce and European influence was recently celebrated with truly Oriental pomp.

"MULCAHY'S RAID."—Here is another Mulcahy story, the second of our series, and tells of the further adventures of Sergeant Mulcahy. The film contains also scenes showing the taking of a moving picture, but the real feature is a genuine cock fight.

The sergeant is seen patroling his beat, one fine spring morning, when a young chap cautiously approaches him and slips a note into his hand. The note contains the information that there is a cock fight in progress in the rear of a neighboring buffet. Mulcahy turns about to question the lad, but the young fellow has made good his escape and Mulcahy decides to go to the buffet and reconnoitre.

Next we are shown a company of moving picture actors, camera man and producer. A number of the actors are dressed as policemen and after watching them photograph an amusing scene, we next see Mulcahy at the rear of the saloon. He finds a knothole through a fence which gives him an opportunity to see what is going on behind. On the other side is a little group of men, drinking and betting, while they await the arrival of the birds.

Quickly planning a method of capturing the gamblers, Mulcahy hurries up the alley, when he runs into an artificial policeman employed by the moving picture concern. Mulcahy is flustrated and mistaking them for real officers, informs them of the cock fight and tells them he must have their assistance. The actors consider it a joke and volunteer to assist Mulcahy in rounding up the gamblers.

We next are shown the cock pit. The two birds are released and a hot fight is in progress when Mulcahy and his squad leap over the fence and begin laying about with their clubs. The mob of gamblers is cowed and coralled and Mulcahy leads the way to the police station.

At the station the gamblers are hustled in by Mulcahy, who is not aware that he has been deserted by his actor policemen, who have been called back to duty by their irate producer.

Inside, Mulcahy tells the sergeant the story of the capture, and is then questioned by the desk sergeant if he effected the roundup single handed. The patrol sergeant looks about and seeing that he is alone he answers "Sure, I did it meself." Whereat the desk sergeant congratulates him and pins on his pride-swelled chest the leather medal of the League of the Brave and Fearless.

"A COLLEGE CHICKEN."—This is a college boy story and, done after the usual vigorous style characteristic of the Essanay comedy films, it is among the best of our genuine screams.

We are first shown a dusky gentleman invading a chicken coop, from whence he issues bearing a fine, fat pullet. As he slinks up the street he runs into a bunch of college boys out on the usual campaign of deviltry. The suspicious actions of the colored man and the wriggling contents of the bag he carries excite the boys' curiosity and when it is found that the bag contains a chicken, it is removed from the colored gentleman's person, while he is told to make tracks in the opposite direction.

In their room the boys execute the chicken and prepare for a feast, despite the fact there is a card tacked on their walls from some college dignitary warning them of immediate expulsion if they are caught cooking food in their room. However, the boys unanimously agree that chicken is something other than food so they prepare for the feast.

During the execution of the chicken and the rendering of it into enough parts to go around the boys bring out a chafing dish, and other table accessories, when they are interrupted by the sound of footsteps in the hall outside. There is a wild scramble as the boys endeavor to hide all evidence of the feast, and when Prof. Pettibone enters he finds his young men studying faithfully, the only evidence of the feast being one or two chicken feathers which the boys failed to hide.

The professor goes out and a moment later the chicken is brought forth and preparations continue. Finally it is cooked and ready to serve when the professor is again heard coming up the hall. Seizing a waste basket the boys stow the cooked chicken into the basket and lower it out the window. When the professor returns he finds the boys again busily occupied with their tasks, but this time he stays longer, as he is perfectly sure that that delicious aroma of fried chicken must be real.

In the meantime the waste basket containing the chafing dish and chicken has been discovered by the girls occupying the room below and, believing this to be a present from the boys, they remove the dish and are soon busily employed. When the last atom of meat is stripped from the bones of the chicken they restore the bones to the chafing dish, write a note of thanks to the boys, and put the dish back into the waste basket.

In the room above the professor, who is unable to find any evidence of the supposed rule breaking, bids the boys good night. There is a rush for the window, the basket is raised and the chafing dish placed on the table, when, to their horror, they find nothing left but the bones.

"UNDER WESTERN SKIES."—Among our recent dramatic releases, Western, this picture will prove a feature. The story is one of exceptional strength, the atmosphere true to the story, while the photography is of the usual standard.

Kate Allison, an exceptionally beautiful Western girl, is engaged to marry a young Easterner, a long time family friend. In the first scene the fiancee is bidding his sweetheart good-bye, and he is to be accompanied to the station by his prospective father-in-law.

The girl is left alone with a warning that should she be molested by any of the crowd of drunken cowpunchers who would be returning from a dance at a neighboring ranch, not to hesitate to shoot.

We are next shown three young punchers, all intoxicated, riding up to the door of the cottage. All dismount, and one, peering into the window, sees the girl alone. Reelingly they enter to find the girl covering them with a Winchester, but the foremost of the gang strides forward and before she can pull the trigger jerks the gun from her hands.

The punchers resolve to play a game of poker to see who will win the young lady. A greasy pack is brought forth and the game starts. The girl sees the desperateness of the situation and resolves to employ desperate means in protecting herself. A card falls on the floor from the hand of the puncher nearest her, and seizing it she scribbles a line across its face and slips it into the puncher's hands. It reads: "I will be yours in marriage if you will protect me from the others."

The puncher reads the note, covertly watching the others, then as he looks at the girl a new sensation sweeps over his soul and he nods his head. He starts an altercation, accusing one of the others of cheating, which ends in all the punchers leaving the room to settle the dispute at twenty paces, in the old fashioned and gentlemanly way.

When the puncher returns to the girl he is alone. He tells her she must now make good her promise and swears faithfully to make himself worthy of her. She nods her head, but it is a look of hatred and scorn which she fastens on him as they leave.

They are married and go to the cowpuncher's quarters. He apologizes for his poverty, but repeats his promise to make her happy if she will give him a chance. Yet she steadfastly refuses to allow him to make love to her.

A few months drag by and the former fiancee of the girl traces her to her new home. He demands an explanation and asks her if she loves her husband. She answers angrily that she does not and then eagerly accepts his invitation to return East with him.

Without horses or other conveyances it is almost impossible for them to cross the strip of desert which separates them from her father's home, but they resolve to attempt the journey. On the way they become lost and the last drop of the canteen, which her fiancee had selfishly drained himself, finds them in desperate straits and facing the most cruel of all deaths. The girl stumbles and begs for his assistance but the panic-stricken young fellow refuses. They stumble upon the bones of a horse and the shock of this sight is the last straw on the camel's back and the girl totters to the ground in a faint. The young fellow offers no assistance but staggers desperately on.

An hour later, dazed and blindly tottering, he falls into the arms of a young prospector, who, after giving the young man restoratives, learns of the woman lost on the trail. The young prospector hurries back on the path indicated by the young fellow and an hour later staggers back into camp with the young girl in his arms.

She has regained her senses and recognizes in the prospector her deserted husband. The cowardly young fiancee then asks the girl to go on with him, but she refuses and clings to her husband, whom she has vowed to love and obey for ever after.

KALEM CO.

"A COLONIAL BELLE."—The Kalem Company's scout automobile in scouring Connecticut for appropriate picture settings discovered a colonial mansion dating back to pre-revolutionary days and in possession of descendants of the original builders. It stands today as one of the most perfect types of Colonial architecture in America, and with the special consent and cooperation of the owner a real episode of the Revolutionary War has been produced under the title of "A Colonial Belle."

No attempt has been made to deviate in the slightest from the original pretty story which is immortalized in many of the early school readers. Captain Roger Bacon, an officer in the Continental Army, is in love with Betty Wadsworth, a true patriot. The campaign has centered around the section in which the Wadsworth mansion is located, and a party of gay young Hessian officers take possession of the fine old house and make it their headquarters. Capt. Bacon in the meantime has been corresponding with Betty, and when she puts up a plan to outwit and overcome the Hessians he readily falls in with it. Betty organizes a little party in honor of the Hessian officers, and after a cotillion, an old fashioned game of forfeits is proposed. In this game the Hessian officers are induced to surrender their side arms to be won back during the progress of the game. As soon as the Hessians are disarmed, however, a signal is given to the waiting Patriots outside; doors and windows are flung open and Capt. Bacon with his men burst in and take the hapless Hessians captive.

Every scene in this production is vouched for by the Kalem Company as a true picture of stirring times in New England during the period of the Revolutionary War, and as such the film is of the highest educational value.

It will be noted that the gowns worn by the women of the Kalem Stock Company in this production are originals in possession of the owners of the mansion about which the picture was made. The cast of characters includes Miss Gauntier, Mr. Vincent, Mr. Mitchell, Mr. Vosberg, Mr. Vignolia and Mr. Melford, all Kalem favorites and one of the strongest and best balanced ever put together by the Kalem producers.

"THE LEGEND OF SCAR FACE."—In searching the New York museums for authentic material for Indian pictures, the Kalem producers run across "THE LEGEND OF SCAR FACE," which is, in Indian lore, a classic told in various forms by nearly every tribe of the American aboriginee. This is the story that is always told to the Indian boy when the father desires to rouse his ambition and to enthuse him with a daring to do great deeds.

Scar Face, as the legend goes, when a baby, was clawed and torn by a bear, so that when he grew up he was so badly crippled as to be almost utterly unfitted for the strenuous games and cruel warfare of his tribesmen. The old men of the tribe, however, had for years handed down a story that some day one of the tribe would be developed into a warrior much greater and braver than any who had preceded him, and hearing this story, the daughter of the chief decides that she will be the squaw of this famous warrior and of none other, and in a vision the face of the great warrior is revealed to her and to other members of the tribe. It is that of Scar Face, except that it has none of the scars nor deformities. The bucks of the tribe in derision tell Scar Face that he must indeed be the great warrior, and suggest that he go forth to win fame and renown for himself. Scar Face takes their jibe seriously, and does venture forth. His adventures are shown in the picture, and it is useless to say that they are of the most thrilling character, and when Scar Face has achieved all the necessary coups, a vision of the mighty Manitou appears to him and is told that if he will bathe in the waters of a certain mystic spring all of his deformities and scars will vanish. Scar Face does as he is told, and is transformed into a noble and prepossessing warrior. His fame has gone before him, and when he returns to his tribe he is acclaimed as the great war chief of the legend and the chief's daughter becomes his bride.

The Kalem players have carried out the mystical elements of the story in splendid fashion and the photographic settings are of such unusual beauty that the picture will undoubtedly be regarded as a model in its class.

G. MELIES.

"MRS. BARGAINDAY'S BABY."—Mrs. Bargainday reads of a bargain day sale, takes her baby and starts for the sale to avoid the rush. Arriving at the store she meets at the door Mr. Jones and requests him to hold her baby for her while she goes inside to do some shopping. He consents, supposing she will only be a few minutes, and while standing there with the baby in his arms several of his lady friends, attracted by the bargain sale, pass him by with surprise, and others entirely ignore him or smile with amusement. Poor Jones is in a pickle.

Mrs. Bargainday is fighting her way to the bargain counter and gets so in the spirit of the thing that she forgets, for the time being, all about Jones and her child. Jones is on the verge of collapse when Smith comes along with his baby in a perambulator and, while he steps up to the store window to see the display of goods, Jones puts Mrs. Bargainday's baby in the carriage with Smith's youngster and then "beats it" for his office.

Smith starts off with his perambulator entirely ignorant of his extra charge, stops at a saloon, slips in and meets several of his friends who all insist in treating Smith in turn. Smith comes out of the saloon, and discovers Mrs. Bargainday's baby, thinks he sees double or else has overindulged. Satisfying himself that there are two kids instead of one, he goes on his way, until he reaches a very inviting door step, places Mrs. Bargainday's baby on it, rings the door bell and makes himself scarce.

The occupant of the house, Mrs. Greene, hears the bell, goes to the front door and discovers the baby, takes it to her room and tries to make it comfortable. Her husband, who soon comes home, sees the baby and will not listen to his wife's explanation and insists upon getting rid of it. She goes out on the street to look for the child's parents and meets a classy young man and his sweetheart, rushes up to them and thrusts the "kidlet" into the young man's arms and makes a "get away" before the young man can realize what it all means. To add to his predicament his girl thinks there is something suspicious about the whole matter and he certainly feels uncomfortable.

While all this is going on Mrs. Bargainday has come out of the store with her purchases, looks for Jones and the baby, learns the direction Jones has taken and starts in pursuit until she comes up with him. He tells her he gave the child to Smith, and then, with Jones, starts after Smith. They are informed Smith was seen in the saloon, where they are told the course he has taken; and again, with others joining in the chase, they take up the trail and reach Greene's house where the little one was left by Smith, and are informed by Mrs. Greene that she gave it to a young fellow down the street. Eagerly the race begins again until they reach the young man who is foolishly holding the baby. He gladly returns it to its mother who, overjoyed, clasps it to her bosom exclaiming, "My child, my child," greatly to the relief of all hands who have been drawn into the general mixup with Mrs. Bargainday's baby.

EDUCATOR UPHOLDS PICTURES OF BOXING.

Well it is gratifying to know there is one woman in all America, who approves of the American boy learning the art of self-defense, as well as cultivating ping-pong and other such strenuous games to develop mind and muscle. That woman is Mrs. Ella Flagg Young, superintendent of the public schools of Chicago.

Mrs. Young firmly believes that boxing is a healthy exercise and one that all boys should know something about, and for that reason boys should receive the proper instruction. She also cites that boxing has been one of the chief pastimes of ex-President Roosevelt and helped that well known personage to keep vigorous and healthy during his long reign in the White House.

As far as the pictures of the Johnson-Jeffries contest are concerned, Mrs. Young claims that so long as there is nothing brutal to be shown in the bout, she sees no harm in allowing the pictures to be exhibited. If one is going to see pictures of this character, why not witness the best.

PICTURES WITH CHURCH MUSIC

Rev. H. A. Jump, of New Britain, Conn., Will Use Them Sunday Evenings

(New Britain Record.)

Rev. Herbert A. Jump, pastor of Congregationalist Church, New Britain, Conn., returned, July 20, from a trip to New York City, where he made a thorough investigation of the moving picture problem for the purpose of ascertaining the advisability of introducing Sunday evening moving picture services at the South Church during the winter. Through the generosity of ex-Mayor George M. Landers, an up-to-date moving picture machine will be presented to the church. Mr. Jump, after his experience in New York this week, is now more firmly convinced than ever that the moving picture is a legitimate and forceful agent in bringing home the truths of religion.

While in New York, Rev. Mr. Jump was guided about on his tour of investigation by William Storey, secretary of the censorship committee, and through the kindness of Mr. Storey the local clergyman was permitted to sit with the committee on Monday morning and the greater part of Monday afternoon. The sessions of this committee are held in the executive office of the Motion Picture Patents Company.

Ninety per cent. of all the moving picture films which are produced in this country are controlled by the censorship committee which sits in New York. The committee is composed of representatives of the various philanthropic organizations in New York, and has in its membership several prominent charity specialists, men as well as women. In conversation with the members of the committee, Rev. Mr. Jump ascertained that they realize the significance of their position in that upon the basis of their judgment the character of amusement for millions upon millions of adults and children is determined.

The censorship committee evidenced a keen interest in the proposition of the South Church to inaugurate regular Sunday evening moving picture religious services. They felt that there was a great opportunity along this line for churches and schools to make valuable use of the moving picture. The pastor learned that several churches in New York City used moving pictures on special occasions, that a few Sunday school teachers used them in private for the benefit of their classes, that social settlement workers used them in connection with their club work, and that boards of health employed the pictures to teach sanitation.

There was no church near New York, however, where the pictures were used regularly every Sunday evening for distinctly religious purposes, as the South Church proposes to do this winter. Therefore the South Church will be a pioneer in devising a service of worship in which the moving picture will play a latergical part .

Through the courtesy of Mr. Storey, Mr. Jump enjoyed a visit to the producing studio of the Edison company. While Mr. Jump happened to be at the studio, a "house fire" scene was being enacted at one of the houses adjoining the Edison plant. Fully fifteen of the Edison actors were used to portray the usual scenes of excitement and terror which prevails at a fire. It was interesting to note that the players spoke their parts, because it is claimed that unless they use language it is difficult to make the scene seem true to life.

One of the most interesting things which Mr. Jump saw were several films which were being inspected by the manager of the Edison company. The manager invited Mr. Storey and Mr. Jump to witness a private performance of these new films. Every film which is produced is acted upon several times by the management of the company before it is submitted to the censorship committee for their inspection. A film of special interest was one which pointed out the dangers from an impure milk supply. Films of this nature not only have a story value, but also a great educational value in teaching the public how a milk supply should be kept wholesome. The manager of the Edison company informed Mr. Jump that there were a number of such films which had educational, sanitary, moral and religious value. There would be no difficulty in procuring films suitable for church services from which most impressive sermons might be preached.

Mr. Jump also got in touch with manufacturers of picture machines and the renters of films, and discovered that there would be no trouble whatever in securing for the South Church a moving picture equipment which would not only be of valuable use in the church during the winter, but which also could be placed at the general disposal of the community later on. It is the wish of Mr. Landers, the donor of the machine, that the gift may directly and indirectly reach as many of the people in this city as possible. In administering the gift, Mr. Jump will constantly bear in mind the wishes of the donor.

The moving picture service at the South Church will not be inaugurated until the last of October.

THE REAL RIP VAN WINKLE.

The late Joseph Jefferson had a country home at Buzzard's Bay, Mass., where he spent most of his summers. One hot afternoon the actor and a friend drove to a small town some distance away, where a moving picture show was being held in a large tent. Jefferson bought two admissions, and he and his friend entered the tent more for the purpose of getting a rest before starting on the homeward journey than to see the show, which was drawing very poorly, to judge by the handful of people in the seats.

After the actor and his friend had been seated about ten or fifteen minutes they noticed a decided increase in the audience, which they could not account for, as the hour was late in the afternoon and the show nearly over. In a short time, from a scattered audience of fifteen or twenty people, the house was now crowded to the doors, and Jefferson, somewhat mystified, was about to start for home when he met a neighbor of his coming down the aisle, who said: "Hello, Jefferson, I happened to be passing when I heard the barker shouting that the great Joseph Jefferson, the creator of Rip Van Winkle, would be seen inside for ten cents."

Jefferson, admiring the acute business genius of the proprietor, complimented him as he passed out.

AFTER NATURE PICTURES.

Charles W. Fitzgerald, naturalist and explorer, who believes that the story of the jaguar fishing with its tail is not a nature fake, sailed, July 23, by the Royal Mail liner "Atrato," for Trinidad to prove his faith by moving pictures and photographs. He has two motor boats painted green to corresponded in a measure with the jungles that he expects to go through on the tropical Orinoco. He will cover the smaller of these boats, a 16-footer of 5-horse-power, with brush and leaves and wait on the side of the stream where he knows the jaguar will appear. He is accompanied by two students, one from Boston and the other from this city, and they will help work the cameras.

Mr. Fitzgerald says he has seen a jaguar fish. It lets its tail drag in the water a bit and waits for a fish to appear. Then it wiggles the tail and the fish bites. The jaguar turns swiftly and harpoons the fish with a claw.

Mr. Fitzgerald says he will do no hunting with the rifle, but his party will be equipped with several rifles and will destroy life only for self-protection. He expects to get other good pictures of wild animal life on the Orinoco, including some of the marvellous snakes and alligators for which the river is famed in books. He would not be surprised if he got a snapshot or moving picture photographs of a combat between a 'gator and a boa constrictor, like the famous one celebrated in blank verse by an American poet.

MR. HOWARD BUILDS NEW THEATRE.

C. B. Howard, manager of the Elks' theatre, Jerome, Ariz., was in Prescott, a few days ago telling his friends about his new house. Manager Howard is getting ready to give the miners in his section of the state one of the best motion picture and vaudeville programs in that part of the great southwest.

If there is a class of people that enjoy pictures, claims Mr. Howard, it is the miners of Arizona. After a hard day's work they like nothing better than to assemble, with their families, to some good motion picture theatre, and enjoy the comic pictures. A hearty laugh from an old miner is as good as a chicken dinner for a negro.

In Mr. Howard's new theatre he will arrange it so, that his patrons can see from any part of the house. He is sparing no expense to put the house in first class condition.

COMEDY IN THE SOUTH.

Pathe and Edison comedy pictures at the New Lyric motion picture theatre, Chattanooga, Tenn., are attracting great crowds these hot, summer afternoons and evenings. It is also true the manager of the New Lyric is putting on excellent vaudeville but it does not take like the good, clean, refreshing comedy pictures.

As a rule the Southern patron is a great lover of romance; to be sure there are no people in the whole of the United States so chivalous and polite as the true Southern gentleman. Pictures of adventure and romance are always winners with them, but lately the comedy picture is taking the place of the romantic drama.

Since the great awakening in the commercial world, comedy has gradually crept in, and after a hard day's work, our Southern friends come to the picture houses to be amused rather than see the deeds of romance that were frequent in the days of their fathers.

FLY PICTURES SHOWN AT MONTREAL.

Flydom from start to end was shown in a series of motion pictures at the Nickel theatre, at the corner of Bleury and St. Catharine Streets, Montreal, Can., last week.

This morning Mr. U. H. Conover placed on view pictures which show the common house fly at his daily labors, carrying contagion on from the filth of the garbage pail to the food on the table, and to one who sees these pictures the terror of the house fly must become apparent. The pictures, in the space of a dozen moments, shows the fly from the egg stage till it has run its filthy career and died.

The exhibition of the pictures comes as part of the programme of a number of organizations in the United States who have as their aim the extermination of the house fly, which they regard as the dread carrier of disease germs of almost every sort.

Chicago Film Brevities.

Mr. and Mrs. Phil Gleichman, of the National Vaudette Film Co., of Detroit, left for a midsummer tour of Eastern water resorts Tuesday, July 26. Mr. Gleichman's close attention to business for a long stretch, without intermission, will make the vacation especially enjoyable.

Frank McCarrahan, at one time Chicago manager of the Billboard and a faithful and efficient worker, has been appointed by George Kleine to an important position in the accounting department of the Chicago branch of the Kleine Optical Co. His circle of staunch friends congratulate him heartily, and will expectantly look for the development of the ability that is in him.

Mr. and Mrs. J. B. Clark and Mr. and Mrs. R. A. Rowland, of the Pittsburgh Calcium Light & Film Co. of Pittsburgh, motored to Cleveland on their way to the F. S. A. convention at Detroit. At the latter city the party was joined by Mr. and Mrs. E. Mandelbaum, of the Lake Shore Film & Supply Co., and two guests, and the journey to Toledo was made. There the machines were loaded on the steamer for Detroit, which took the party to their destination. The sights around the Michigan metropolis, it is needless to state, were thoroughly explored by the Pittsburg and Cleveland visitors.

DeWitt C. Wheeler of New York, of slide fame, was in Chicago on a flying trip the early part of last week. He left the same day for Buffalo, on his way back to the home city. Mr. Wheeler has been making a series of tours this summer, having visited all the larger cities in the Middle West and East. Unlike the customary knight of the road, Mr. Wheeler drops in on his numerous customers in the trade and pays a social call. He is not out to solicit business, for everybody in his line knows his goods and patronizes his firm, because everyone knows that they must, in order to get the best service. While here, he was Wm. N. Selig's guest and radiated the smile that is second only to President Taft's.

Charles C. Vance, owner and manager of the Dreamland theatre, Streator, Ills., was a visitor at the Film Index office last week. The Dreamland is an up-to-date, handsome little house with a capacity of about 300. Its ventilation is so perfect that business has been extra good all through the hot weather, the best citizens in Streator being his patrons. Mr. Vance has been running the Dreamland for over a year and finds licensed pictures strong enough by themselves to entertain his patrons without any admixture of cheap vaudeville. Since dropping the latter, his business has fairly soared and the better element have shown their appreciation by attending in large numbers. Mr. Vance wants it distinctly understood that he backs up his pictures with good music, and that he employs union musicians and pays the union scale.

BIG PICTURE COMING.

Kalem players are just now making preparations for a big historical Indian picture. It will be a most elaborate production dealing with an important event in the history of the United States; one familiar to every school boy and girl of to-day, and not entirely forgotten by the school boys and girls of other days.

As this is just a hint of what is coming the title and incident will be held for another story. There is a small army of workmen out at the Kalem Farm building forts, stockades and blockhouses for this production in which there will be plenty of action.

SCHNEIDER BRANCHES OUT

Will Move to Larger Quarters and Increase Facilities

It will soon be moving day at the offices of the German American Cinematograph and Film Co., 109 East 12th Street, New York City. Eberhard Schneider, the owner, has purchased the famous Pensacola Clubhouse, a Tammany Club, at 219 Second Avenue, near 14th Street, New York, where, in the early part of August, he will remove the manufacturing plant of Mirror Vitae products.

The present plant on 12th Street has long been inadequate for Mr. Schneider's growing business. He has been so cramped for room that orders on hand could not be shipped on time. To overcome this state of affairs he postponed an important mission to Germany and for the past three months has spent his time house-seeking.

The new place is an ideal one for Mr. Schneider's purposes. It is a five-story brown stone building on a plot, 26 x 112 feet, which will be completely altered to fit the needs of the various departments he intends to install. First of all it will be his home as well as his place of business. The two top stories are being redecorated for this purpose and a roof garden is being built to be used as a playground for Mr. Schneider s five children.

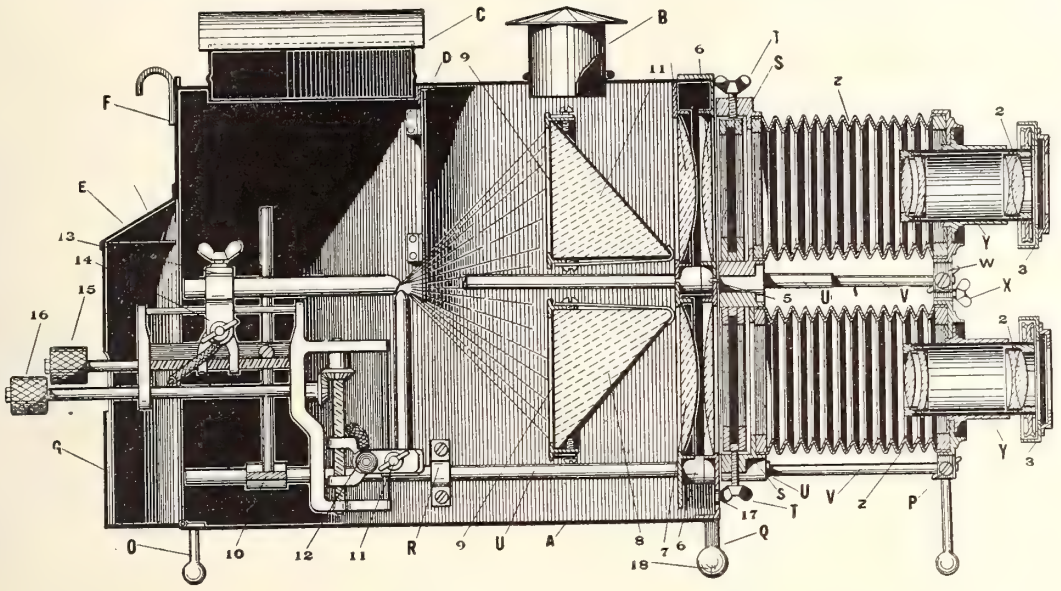
The basement floor of the new building will be the workshop. Here will be installed all the machinery and a complete nickel plating plant. The electric power for the entire building will also be generated there.

The second will be occupied by three departments: The retail photo supply department, the electrical supply department and the moving picture supply department. In the rear of these departments will be located Mr. Schneider's private office.

The second floor will be devoted entirely to the manufacturing of motion pictures. Mr. Schneider is the American representative of R. Glombeck & Co., Berlin, which concern will send to this country one negative a week which Mr. Schneider will reproduce and sell independently of either combinations.

The third floor will be a well equipped lens grinding and optical works and will contain a demonstrating room for Mr. Schneider's machines and supplies.

The branch of the business that Mr. Schneider will devote most of his time to is the manufacture of the new "Single Illuminant Double Dissolving Stereopticon and Moving Picture Machine Combined." The details of the stereopticon were printed in these columns sometime from a single source of light by the use of ago. The accompanying engraving illustrates how two distinct projections can be effected prisms. The machine combined with the stereopticon is Mr. Schneider's "Mirror Vitae" machine. Both the machine and stereopticon will be well exploited when the new plant starts operations.



SCHNEIDER'S NEW SINGLE ILLUMINANT DOUBLE DISSOLVING STEREOPTICON.

Mr. Schneider's new building cost him $40,000 and before alterations are completed the expenses entailed will be $50,000. He will go into the new place about August 15.

Eberhardt Schneider has been chosen by the German Navy Society of America to represent them and present to Gross Admiral Von Koester, of the German Navy, an honorary member of the American society, a diploma. Mr. Schneider will sail on the Kronprincesse Cecilie the latter part of August and will meet the Admiral formally at the German Imperial Court. While in Germany he will tend to many of his own business affairs.

UNDERWRITERS' NEW RULES

7. Smoking.—To be prohibited in any room containing films, and signs posted to that effect.

8. Motion Picture Machines and Booths.—(See National Electrical Code, Paragraph 65-A).

9. Protection.—Each room to be equipped with at least two approved three gallon hand fire extinguishers. At least one pail of water and one pail of sand to be provided for each vault in use.

A PROTEST FROM AUSTRALIA.

tralia, with the middle class of people; the Biograph films are in great demand especially in the suburbs where you find the patrons are the higher class of people.

It is peculiar to see the way pictures are applauded in Australia, and quite often the house is in a perfect up-roar, and the public here appreciate the pictures as the Chicago newsboy does the Nick Carter library.

Thanking you very much for your valuable space which I hope you will give to this letter, and with kind regards to my many friends in the moving picture business.

EDUCATIONAL SUBJECTS SHOWN.

Audience of Boston Physicians and Clergymen See Fine Program at Theatre Voyons.

A special motion picture performance, given at the Theatre Voyons in Central street, Lowell, Mass., between 5 and 6 o'clock, July 20, attracted about 25 physicians, several clergymen and a number of newspaper reporters. The performance was most unusual, several films being shown which have been duplicated in the east only in Boston.

Quite the most attractive, from the viewpoint of the physicians present, was the film entitled "Surgical Operations," in which two views taken in Paris hospitals were shown. One showed a very trying and delicate operation for hip trouble, and the other the removal of a tumor from a patient's throat. This last was quite dramatic in spots. The maker of these films is not known, although they were doubtless the work of some scientifically inclined man who wished to show the possibilities of motion pictures in the realm of science.

"The Fly Pest" had considerable of educational value to it. The growth of a fly from the eggs to the maturest stage was carefully traced and the harm that may be done through the medium of flies in going from carrion to food was pretty conclusively demonstrated. This film has been shown here before.

"The Sleeping Sickness"—Micro-cinematography—was also a purely scientific problem demonstrated by means of the films. A healthy rat is inoculated with the germs of the disease and dies five days afterwards. The course of the wrigglers through the blood and their effect upon the healthy corpuscles is traced during the days after the rodent's inoculation.

"Familiar Reptiles," while different from the preceding picture in its appeal, was nevertheless interesting. Many lizards were shown, together with black snakes and puff adders. The extraction of venom from the fangs of the adders was minutely pictured. "Microscopic Curiosities" was the title of another interesting film.

The performance was given by the management of the Theatre Voyons with the assistance of the General Films Company of Boston.

Synopsis of Production Issued by the Leading Song and Novelty Slide Makers.

DE WITT C. WHEELER.

"WHAT IS THE WORLD WITHOUT YOU."—Words and music by J. Hayden Clarendon; published by J. H. Remick & Co. A semi-high class love ballad, which is written in a popular vein and is sure to please any class of audience. The illustrations are a well thought out series of poses, which, executed with the well known skill of De Witt Wheeler, form a very pleasing set of slides. Scenic effects, rich in nature, are also present in numbers.

"ONLY A CHAIN OF DAISIES."—Words by Fred. J. Barnes; music by Raymond White; published by Kominsky Music Co., Troy, N. Y. One of the annual daisy songs which always please. The lyrics are seasonable in nature and the music all that can be desired. Here's a set of slides in which some very cute children play an important part. Slides in which children appear always make a hit when the youngsters are posed correctly. The natural grace and charm of youth is proverbial. This set should be especially well adaptable to houses frequented largely by women and children.

"ON A SUNDAY EVENING IN THE SUMMERTIME."—By Edward O'Conner; published by Grinnel Bros., Detroit, Mich. As the title would imply, this is a typical summer love ballad, but treated in a novel manner, and is bound to be popular. There are very many different ways in which different people spend Sunday evenings. Wheeler has depicted in this set of slides the way a certain young couple spent theirs. Sometimes moonlight walks, boat rides, excursions, etc. All beautifully colored and all extremely interesting. Don't miss "On a Sunday Evening in the Summertime."

"LOVE SICK."—Words by Louis Weslyn; music by Herbert Spencer; published by M. Witmark & Sons. One of the mushy love ballads which, if good, are all to the good. This one fills the bill both in lyrics and melody. The slides do more than fill the bill. They fill the mind with wonder that it is possible to obtain such beautiful effects in a song slide. Perhaps never has Wheeler combined such grand scenery, such good looking models and such artistic coloring in one set. It is his best set. The novelties, of which there are many, are surprisingly clever and very taking.

"COME ALONG, MY MANDY."—American version by Nora Bayes and Jack Norworth, and sung by them all last winter at the Broadway Theatre in the "Jolly Bachelors." Published by I. B. Harms, New York. For slides with beautiful models this set can't be beat. The girl is pretty, the man handsome, and they pose in an excellently easy and graceful manner, so as to become at once favorites with audiences who view the slides.

"IN MY GARDEN."—Song by Clare Kummer; published by J. H. Remick & Co. Miss Kummer, the composer of "Dearie," can always be depended upon to produce a hit, and "In My Garden" is no exception. The slides are an excellent example of an artist's work, for only an artist could discover scenes such as reproduced so beautifully in this set. Not only are the scenes beautiful in themselves, but are colored so strikingly as to make them twice as impressive. A good song, with a splendid set of slides.

"SOMETIME IN AFTER YEARS."—Words by Francis Glen Brown; music by Walter Eben Miles; published by J. H. Remick & Co. A sentimental love song on the reminiscent order and of a higher class than the average ballad. A song really worth hearing. The slides are of the usual high order produced by the Wheeler house, and aptly illustrate the lyrics, with enticing models in beautiful surrounding scenes, which Wheeler scours the country to obtain.

"OH, YOU SPEARMINT KIDDO WITH THE WRIGLEY EYES."—Guess that's going some. It takes William Jerome to write the clever lyrics. When it comes to "Tutti Frutti beauty" and "peptonized kisses," he's right there with the sticky stuff, Jean Schwartz is there with the right music dope, too. Published by Jerome H. Remick. You all know what Wheeler does when he gets hold of a funny song like the "Spearmint Kiddo." He does it up right and makes a set of slides that make a hit. This one will.

"TO-NIGHT, SWEETHEART, TO-NIGHT."—Lyric and music by Evelyn Bloom; published by Jerome H. Remick, New York. A sentimental love ballad, set to waltz music. Illustrations by Wheeler show that the improvement in song slides still continues. Each slide contains, besides good posing, a picked background of remarkable distinction. This gives the slide a scenic value, as well as illustrative. The set is a good one from every standpoint.

SCOTT & VAN ALTENA.

"YUCATANA MAN."—By S. R. Henry, composer of "Peter Piper," "Down at the Huskin' Bee," "I've Got the Time, I've Got the Place," etc. Henry is well known among song writers, and his latest piece, "Yucatana," is bright, cheery and snappy. The slides are without doubt the best produced by Scott & Van Altena since their wonderful illustrations for the "Espanolia Prance." They are somewhat of the same nature—Southern scenes—and are full of the romance proverbial of warm climated countries. Besides the usual number of clever novelties the set contains many tropical scenes that will delight old and young alike.

"LUCY-ANNA-LOU."—Words by Edward Madden; music by Gus Edwards, the writers of "By the Light of the Silvery Moon." This, their latest song, has also to do with the moon, which fact may cause many to go "luny" over it as they did over the former. The slides are one fine set of moonlight scenes posed by two as graceful young persons as we have ever had the pleasure to look at. They seem to "get right in" to the thing and make the set full of human interest. The soft but rich coloring of the set, too, makes it a very attractive one.

"PLANNING."—Another of Gus Edwards' charming melodies set in waltz style to the lyrics of Will D. Cobb. Published by Gus Edwards. Here's one of those all-novelty sets that Scott & Van Altena know so well how to produce. Each slide a novelty, each novelty a winner. The models, too, are winners. When planning, plan "Planning" or your program will not be complete.

"IT'S THE SAME OLD ME."—Words by Arthur Gillespie; music by Terry Sherman; published by Chas. K. Harris, New York. It's awfully easy to do a thing when you know how. It seems to be the easiest thing in the world for Scott & Van Altena to illustrate love songs in spite of the fact that most lyrics in love songs are similar. Of all this class of illustrations made by this firm, no two are alike, except in quality. This latest one is very interesting and in a class all by itself.

"WHEN YOU DREAM OF THE GIRL YOU LOVE."—A pretty love ballad with words by Louis Klein; music by Leo Edwards; published by Victor Kremer Co. The story is of a young man desperately in love who sees beautiful visions of his darling at night. These visions are beautifully portrayed in the illustrations with handsome models, good posing and vivid coloring. In true Scott & Van Altena style.

"HIDE FROM THE LIGHT OF THE MOON."—Words by Dave Clark; music by Sally Ginsberg; published by Ted Snyder Co. A song with a pretty tune and dealing with a pair of lovers, the Park and the romantic moon. The illustrations show beautiful moonlight views, with models full of life and expression. Novel effects abound, and the set, on the whole, is an attractive one.

"SOME DAY WE'LL BE HAPPY."—Words by John Lyle; music by George E. Lyle; published by Consolidated Music Supply Co., Chicago. A sentimental ballad, with illustrations representing beautiful rural scenes. In the first half of the song the couple are school children, while in the second part they meet again after a number of years. The views in this set are exceptionally fine, with artistic coloring, beautiful floral and novel effects, and should appeal to those who admire the rustic in nature.

"HONEY, I WILL LONG FOR YOU."—Words by Arthur Longbrake; music by Ed. Edwards; published by Joseph Morris Co. An exceptionally good song, with a Southern atmosphere, and beautifully illustrated in true Scott & Van Altena style. A pleasing variety of scenes delight the eye, and charming coloring make the set a very attractive one. "Quality," the keynote of this firm, is ever present in all their work.

"MY MORNING ROSE."—Words by Arthur Longbrake; music by Ed. Edwards; published by the Joseph Morris Co., New York. An Indian song of great merit, for which Scott & Van Altena have made illustrations posed for in rich native Indian costume. The costumes, camp fires, etc., give an excellent opportunity for fine coloring that has not been lost to the manufacturers. The woods, where Indians live, play a great part in this set, as to also many novelties—clever ideas by Scott & Van Altena.

"YIDDLE ON YOUR FIDDLE, PLAY SOME RAGTIME."—There is hardly a person who has not heard this great ragtime song hit of Irving Berlin's; published by Ted Snyder Co., New York. Its popularity, like a gale of wind, has traveled from one end of the continent to the other, casting its currents in every direction. Its contagious rythm affects everyone, creating a hilarious feeling. This feeling is portrayed humorously in a set of illustrations which contain what we are all glad to see when appropriate—a little "rough house."

ALFRED L. SIMPSON.

"ARRAH, COME IN OUT OF THE RAIN, BARNEY McSHANE."—By the author of "Colleen Bawn," "Tipperary," "Bit o' Blarney," etc.; published by J. Fred. Helf. An Irish song full of humor and true Irish wit. This is a good set of pictures. Simpson has outdone himself in depicting the jolly Irish widow and her Barney. The photography is unusually excellent and the surroundings quite out of the ordinary. The coloring is very fine.

"BABY FACE."—By the author of "The Yankiana Rag," "Oh, You Kid," the ever-popular Melville J. Gideon; published by Chas. I. Davis, Cleveland. The announcement of a new song by this composer is always welcome news to his many admirers. Simpson has chosen an exquisitely beautiful girl as his model; posed in pictorial surroundings of great beauty. He predicts a big hit for this dainty little ballad.

"AIN'T ALABAMA GOOD ENOUGH FOR YOU, SUE."—By the author of "Ain't You Coming Back to Old New Hampshire, Molly;" published by J. Fred. Helf. Another one of those "Home" songs which this composer so well knows how to write. The slides depicting the lover and sweetheart, the dear old mother and the City Stranger who tries to lure away the dainty country maiden, are indeed gems of artistic merit, posed in Southern scenery, and quite worthy of the standard of excellence which Simpson always requires.

"BANDY LEGS."—By John B. Lowitz, author of "Ta Ta, Au Revoir, I'se Goin' to Go;" published by Trebuhs Pub. Co. The dainty English comedienne, Miss Alice Lloyd, is making a big hit with this song, which tells the troubles of a little girl who is unfortunate enough to have "Bandy Legs." The slides Simpson has made are very funny, and get a big hand from appreciative audiences who are tired of the usual love ballad and longing for novelty.

"IN BAMBOO LAND."—Words by Earle C. Jones; music by May C. Aufderheide; published by J. H. Aufderheide, Indianapolis, Ind. This is a great set of novelty slides. Just at this time when everyone is appreciative of jungle stories and pictures it is bound to make a great hit with everyone. The slides are artistic as well as humorous. Some of the tropical effects are Simpson's best class of work.

"YOU LOOK JUST LIKE A GIRL I USED TO KNOW."—Another beautiful love ballad written and composed by the celebrated author, Don Ramsay, author of "Some Day When Dreams Come True." Published by Walter Jacobs, of Boston. This is a great song and is making a great hit. Slides for same are very beautiful and in the usual loving style.

"NOW YOU CAN HAVE YOUR O. U. KID, BUT IT IS A LOVIN' WIFE FOR MINE."—Words and music by Herbert Ingraham; published by Shapiro. This is a very novel and comic song and shows how the devotion of a good husband will overcome any desire for the pleasures of the wine table, etc. Slides for this song are very funny.

"SADIE BRADY."—Everyone has seen Nora Bayes and Jack Norworth in the "Jolly Bachelors." This is their song and is published by the Norworth Publishing Co., New York City. The slides are really remarkable for their beauty. The slides for this song are Simpson's best and carry out in perfect detail the story.

LEVI & CO.

"VALLEY FLOWER."—Words and music by Kerry Mills; published by F. A. Mills, New York. The greatest Indian song heard in years, a phenomenal hit; the publishers alone purchasing over 200 sets of slides of this song. The posing and general characters of these slides are wonderful for their technique and detail; a real work of art. Some of the best novelty Indian slides ever made. Send for them at once and you'll get a chance to see something new.

"A LITTLE GAME OF LOVE."—Words by E. Soloman; music by B. Osias. A sure fire coming hit. This song was demonstrated in one of the largest N. Y. department stores, and they sold over 1,600 ccpies in two hours. The slides are charming, and you certainly ought to have a set.

"WHEN EVERYTHING WAS SUNSHINE."—Words and music by Will Wood. Published by Will Wood, New York. A song that conveys just what the title reads, a very bright and pleasing love song, and the slides are beautifully executed and finished with the skill of Levi. You will miss something if you fail to get a set of them.

"IN DEAR OLD TENNESSEE."—By Olive L. Fields; music by Harry L. Newman; published by M. Shapiro. This is the big song hit for which Shapiro paid $5,000 to the Sunlight Pub. Co., Chicago, and naturally this song is a big winner. The slides are excellent and fit the song perfectly. Novelties are absolutely original and will make as big a hit as the song itself. No one appreciating a good song and an excellent set of slides should be without this number. The best set of slides ever put out by the Levi Company.

"I WONDER IF YOU LOVE ME."—By Mabel Hite and Tom Kelly; published by M. Shapiro. Shapiro does not get out very many ballads, but when he does, it usually is a big hit. We predict for this new ballad a wonderful success. This song is Mabel Hite's big hit in her act, and that is sufficient in itself to show the value of the song. The slides are most remarkable for their beauty and artistic coloring. An excellent number.

"JUST FOR A GIRL."—Published by M. Witmark & Sons. This song is the biggest number that the Witmark concern has put out in some time and is an absolute hit. Slides are first class in every particular and are beautiful. The demand will be heavy owing to the extreme popularity of the song, and you should place your order immediately.

"IF THE MOON TOLD ALL HE KNEW."—Published by M. Witmark & Sons; words and music by Fleta Jan Brown. Novelty song, and the slides contain twelve novelties, each and every one of which are absolutely original. If you haven't a set of these on hand, it is to your interest to order them.

"IN THE VALLEY OF OLD ST. JOE."—Words and music by Dennis Mackin; published by M. Witmark & Sons. This is one of those sentimental ballads for which M. Witmark & Sons are noted. Posing is excellent, slides are artistically colored.

NOVELTY PUZZLETTES.

CITIES OF THE UNITED STATES.—Clever puzzle pictures, representing in puzzle form cities in this country. Beautifully colored and well illustrated. Entertaining, amusing and of a highly educational character.

STATES OF THE UNITED STATES.—Representing in puzzle form the states of the United States. Second set of series of puzzle slides designed to increase box-office receipts.

POPULAR FLOWERS.—Puzzlettes of the best known flowers. Beautifully colored. Six puzzle slides, as usual, and explanatory slides and answer slides.

STAGE HANDS BURY HATCHET.

Differences Between Branches of I. A. T. S. E. Patched Up at Washington.

After a hard week's work, in which three nights were taken up, two hundred delegates from the International Alliance of Theatrical Stage Employes of the United States and Canada returned home from Washington, D. C., where the annual convention was held. The convention, while a great success, was a scene of many a stormy session, owing to differences that had existed between the stage and operators' branches; but to the good will of all when the convention closed, both departments buried the hatchet and have at last agreed to work together.

One of the important features that interested the picture operators and other departments of electrical workers was increasing the wages of the road men from $30 to $35 per week. In New York City there will be an increase of 50 cents in the wages of stage hands and instead of receiving $1.50 per day it is expected that the coming theatrical season will pay $2. Also the operators of lamps are expected to receive for their labors $1.50 per day instead of $1.00.

During the convention there were a large number of addresses made by well-known members of the organization. Among the most important speakers were: Frank Morrison, secretary of the American Federation of Labor, and W. F. Spencer, secretary of the building trades department of the A. F. of L.

When the election of officers took place, a number of the delegates expected that a new set of officers would be elected, but after some thought on the part of the wise ones, John J. Barry was re-chosen president and Lee M. Hart general secretary and treasurer. The other officers are as follows:

First vice-president, John F. Kieley; second vice-president, Charles F. Schlegel; third vice-president, Charles Malloy; fourth vice-president-Charles Shay; fifth vice-president, Samuel Loughrey; sixth vice-president, Lewis Bullman; seventh vice-president, Merrill. Delegates, Lee M. Hart, P. T. Barry, and McHiggins declared elected.

It was decided that the next convention, which will be held next July, will be at Niagara Falls, N. Y.

While in Washington a number of the delegates went on a river trip to Mt. Vernon, to visit the tomb of Washington. The visitors had a great trip but claim the weather man never showed more vengeance on any party of tourists than on them, and more than one wished for Coney Island or some other seaside resort.

The delegates left Washington, July 17, and the New York contingent arrived home Monday, the following day.

BIJOU THEATRE OPEN WITH PICTURES.

Popular Jacksonville Theatre is Now Under Management of J. C. Gray.

The Bijou theatre, Jacksonville, Fla., was opened Sunday night, July 31st, as a motion picture and vaudeville house. The house, which is under the management of J. C. Gray, is in the hands of one of the most capable and up-to-date managers in the south and it is expected that the program he will put on will be of the best, especially the pictures.

For a long time Mr. Gray has been interested in motion pictures in his section of the south and he finds in order to get the best results one must give the southerner the best there is in that line. How many reels he will use at each performance has not been decided upon, as it is the winter business that theatres in that section of the country thrive.

Since the fire, a few years ago, Jacksonville has been on the boom. A great many northerners and westerners have settled in and around the city during the past few years and have given the Florida metropolis a most hustling atmosphere, so in order to keep up with the times, the theatrical business has been making great strides. Theatres of all kinds have been started, but the slowest to progress have been the picture shows.

It is the intention of Mr. Gray of giving the best there is in the way of pictures that are on the market. During the winter season, when the state is filled with visitors, Jacksonville has a great floating population that needs to be amused and in order to add to the reputation of the city, the theatres must be of the best, especially the motion picture houses.

OGDEN TO HAVE NEW HOUSE.

C.W.Lippincott Will Build Theatre to Seat 750. Will Run Pictures and Vaudeville.

C. W. Lippincott, one of the best known motion picture managers in Utah, stated a few weeks ago, that it was his intention of building a new motion picture and vaudeville theatre for J. R. Nuckels, present proprietor of the Lyceum theatre, Odgen. The house, when completed, will be one of the most modern in that section of the country.

The seating capacity of the house will be 750, of which 500 will be on the main floor, the other 250 will find seating room in the balcony. The stage will be so arranged, that in case a big production wants to come to the city, the management will be able to accommodate such productions. A ladies' parlor and retiring room will occupy one side of the manager's office and the ticket booth will occupy the other.

The removal of the old Lyceum will mark the disappearance of one of the oldest landmarks of amusement in Ogden. The old theatre has been the amusement place of thousands of citizens, cowboys and visitors. The building was first erected for a Normal school and many of the oldest inhabitants received their education there.

The house has been used for a theatre for the past ten years, during which time it was one of the best money makers in that section of the state. During that time a number of new houses have been erected but none seemed to faze the old Lyceum from a standpoint of box office receipts.

WICHITA Y. M. C. A. BUYS MACHINE.

A motion picture machine has been purchased by the Y. M. C. A. of Wichita, Kan., at a cost of $500. The machine will be used on the roof of the Y. M. C. A. building at entertainments which will be given each Friday evening throughout the summer. The first program will be given tomorrow night. The Linwood Park Band will furnish music. About 1,000 seats have been installed on the roof and the Y. M. C. A. plan to make a more attractive roof garden than they had last summer.

4. Accessibility in threading film.
5. Made of heavy cold rolled steel.
6. No springs to bend, break or lose.
7. Slot for film end always at center of square opening.
8. Will outwear half a dozen reels of other styles.

Furnished in 10 inch or 11 inch sizes at 75 cents each

Special prices in large quantities quoted on application

Here's What One Exhibitor Thinks Of These Reels:

"I want the reels with the square holes in flanges. These appear to me to be a decided improvement over anything I have seen. They have a metal hub; the unreliable spring for holding the end of the film is eliminated, and the sides seem to be secured so that there is no possible way for them to become detached."

The Lady and the Burglar

A rather more than middle aged professor absorbed in his work, a beautiful young wife genuinely in love with her husband, a young gallant whose attentions to the wife are unwelcome but who fears to tell her husband of them, a burglar whose little girl the young wife has befriended; these are the elements which make up an absorbing story with a thrilling and unexpected denouement.

Approximate Length, 950 feet.

The Attack on the Mill

Adapted from the Story by Emile Zola.

An episode of the Franco-Prussian War and is in all respects a magnificent production. The situations are dramatic in the extreme and the scenery beautiful.

Presented with the usual Edison attention to detail the subject is sure to be in great demand.

Approximate Length, 1000 feet.

CASUAL COMMENT

PATRONS of good motion picture theatres must have remarked the excellence of the pictures that are being offered these days. We speak, of course, of the licensed productions since, in our opinion, these are the only productions which merit serious consideration. How nearly the facts that sweeping statement is may be proved by any unbiased person who will take the pains to visit different houses offering licensed and unlicensed pictures.

To begin with it will be observed of the licensed pictures that they are uniformly good photographically; that they are steady and well acted; that there is a logical story which is intelligibly told and, finally, that there is a noticeable absence of scenes of violence, enactments of crime, and similar distressing scenes.

The unlicensed product, on the other hand, seems just now to fairly reek with crime and violence, or is insufferably silly, inane, pointless in plot; mere hodge-podge, not to mention poor photography, jumpy pictures and general technical debility. An occasional foreign subject offered by the "independents" possesses merit when it is not based on crime and violence, which is seldom.

Few subjects of home make from "independent" studios have good reason to be beyond the necessity of the makers to offer something to enable them to pay salaries.

Any exhibitor or other reader who doubts these observations has but to investigate the subject to verify the truth thereof.

IT seems almost like a waste of good space to continue to refer to the controversy over the Johnson-Jeffries boxing contest, but we wish to reproduce an editorial on the subject printed in The Titusville (Pa.) Herald. We do this that our readers may have something particularly good to hand to some of their reformer friends should occasion require:

There are lots of people working in an effort to prohibit motion pictures who might be engaged in reforms of a more worthy type. There are three and one-half million children in the sweatshops of the country, grinding their little lives out beside the wheels of industry in order that the nation may be great. There are some scores of thousands of babies who die needlessly in the great cities of America each summer because they live in uncleanly surroundings and the supply of milk is not pure and sufficient. There are greater wrongs that may be done a man than to show him a picture of a prize fight. Let the woman he loves and the children for whose life he is responsible meet suffering because of the merciless trend of the powers that are and there will come into his heart a bitterness and into his life a sullenness of greater menace to this nation than all the pictures of a brutal black man extending from the origin of the first protoplasm to the last cycle of eternity. We are not defending the exhibition of the Jeffries-Johnson motion pictures; we are deploring the importance which the world is attaching to them. There are postcards and pictures sold in the cigar stores of every town infinitely more harmful to the boys and girls who see and read them. But we had not observed that the Exalted Organization for the Suppression of Viciousness has made an attack upon the evil. The fight pictures are only relatively bad. We walk calmly past a boy who is inhaling poison at the fool end of a cigarette, sold unlawfully, and attach our signature to a petition for the suppression of a motion picture. In the main we are creatures of our emotions, rather than our brains. We have such inconsistency that we resemble children, rather than men. We are all the time banging away at effects and ignoring the causes. We are fighting the smoke instead of the fire. We say a lot of words, but we don't get much sense into them.

Rather neatly said, is it not?

WHEN the crusade against the "fight" pictures started The Index intimated that it was a newspaper "strike" caused by the fact that the picture makers were not using newspaper advertising space. Here in New York reputable newspapers did not lend themselves to the "strike" campaign. That was left for the Hearst publications and considerable effort was made by the New York American and Journal to prove its case against the pictures. The same policy was pursued by Hearst papers everywhere.

Now comes the surprising development: During the past few days a representative of one of Hearst's yellows has been calling upon the licensed picture makers of New York and pointing out to them how it is possible for his particular paper to popularize their pictures in the particular locality in which his paper is published.

You see the connection: Hearst's papers have, or think they have, given the picture industry an object lesson on what they can do if they take up the cudgels against pictures and now they are sending out their hired man to extend the olive branch of peace—at a price, for the ambassador of Hearst's hold-up has made it plain that a little some thing in the way of advertising will be in order.

It is our personal belief that a few thousand dollars judiciously distributed in legitimate advertising would have sealed the lips of any editor who has lifted his voice against the Johnson-Jeffries pictures—meaning the Hearst editors, since they are practically the only ones who have said an antagonistic word. But, if that omission was a mistake, it would be a greater one to use Hearst papers now to boost pictures of any sort.

We have not heard that any New York picture maker fell for the Hearst emissary's plan.

FOR once, at least, the picture critic of the Dramatic Mirror has been caught napping. In the issue of that paper of August 6, he said of a notable subject:

> —If it were not known for a fact that the productions are made in this country, it would be difficult to convince the average picture spectator that the beautiful outdoor scenic backgrounds of this film, showing feudal castles, turrets, walls, gates and grounds, were not pictured in Europe.

Here is a picture that was taken in Jersey, in part, and while the Mirror man kindly refrains in this instance from casting his customary Jersey jibe, he admits that if it were not known for a fact "that the picture was made in this country it would be difficult to convince anyone that it was not made in Europe."

We suspect also, that if the Mirror man did not "know for a fact" it would be equally impossible for him to pick out Jersey scenery, with which he claims to be on familiar terms, from other pictures.

Further, it is pleasing to observe that, in the Mirror man's opinion, something good has come out of Jersey. In a spirit of charity we take this admission as an indication that he has experienced a change of heart and that, hereafter, a meritorious production may not suffer his displeasure because of its Jersey affiliations.

THANKS

"Dear Sirs:—I beg to express my appreciation to you of The Film Index. Can not see how any exhibitor can afford to do without it. I have used licensed pictures ever since the organization of the M. P. P. Co., and in the meantime have kept a close watch on the DOINGS of the Independents, and so far am satisfied to continue the use of the BEST, LICENSED SERVICE.

"I am located in the same city, with Thos. A. Edison's winter home, and during his annual visits here, he is among our valued patrons. Oftimes he and his wife, bring large parties to our little playhouse, and seem to enjoy the show as well as children of twelve.

"We are now building our new theatre to seat 400—same to be ready by Nov. 1st, and to have all modern conveniences, and appliances.

"With best wishes, to you and The Index, I beg to remain, most truly,

"REFLECTIONS"

By William Marion Reedy.

Query: I wonder how much of the nasty-nice agitation for the suppression of the moving-pictures of the prize-fight is simply the result of newspaper suggestion, due to the grievous fact that the film monopoly has a big business game and has not been doing any advertising. Baseball is another big business that doesn't advertise even though the sport pages boost it. Maybe there will be a cleverly worked-up crusade against baseball soon. The press people are most terrific reformers when there's a big game on in any line, and they don't get their's. Will the film monopoly cough? Here's your clue, gentle reader, to the secret of the great moral movement inaugurated by pin-heads instigated by newspapers.

POLITICIAN ENTERS MOTION PICTURE FIELD

William June, ex-City Collector of Newburgh, N. Y., has now become a motion picture manager and had his first experience taking tickets at the New Palatime Theatre, July 4. Mr. June has been interested in the business for quite some time and recently purchased the interests of Mr. Van Cordon. It is the purpose of Mr. June to give the patrons of the new enterprise only the best motion pictures. The vaudeville will also be good.

TROUBLES OF A POLICEMAN

Pathe Farce Comedy by American Company
Great Fun—A Fine Western Subject

IN a laughable farce comedy, called "The Troubles of a Policeman," Pathe's American Company has produced a subject that will reach the heart of every boy and cause him to fairly howl with unholy glee.

The picture opens upon a juvenile game of "craps." The bones are rolling lively, and you can almost hear the snap of the kid's fingers. As the game reaches its height an officious policeman nabs the unsuspecting kids and gives them a good drubbing, whereupon they collectively plot revenge.

Take it from us the merry time those boys give that poor "cop" is a-plenty. After chasing the little rascals until exhausted, the poor "cop" falls asleep. The boys ever on the watch, place empty whiskey bottles in his hands and then call the captain, who hales the derelict copper up for drunkenness. He declares his innocence and wants a chance to arrest the little miscreants. He is permitted to make the attempt, and brings two little darlings of the Lord Fountleroy type, whose irate mother appears on the scene and fairly shakes the buttons off his uniform.

The copper gets off with a reprimand, and when he gets on his beat again finds the same gang busy with the bones. Devoted to duty, his first impulse is to "pinch" them. But the recollection of what happened to him before reminds him that discretion is the better part of valor, and with one of those "never-again" signs, he backs out and lets the boys alone.

Even with the few improbabilities, the picture is great fun, and is one of the best American comedy productions Pathe Freres has yet put out.

PATHE COMEDY SUBJECT: "TROUBLES OF A POLICEMAN."

THE RED GIRL AND THE CHILD.

While some critics express a preference for pictures of the kind represented by Pathe's "Cheyenne Brave," which is a splendid example of a straight "Indian" picture. There is another type of picture as shown in the Pathe coming release entitled "The Red Girl and the Child," which impresses the writer as more interesting. This is merely a matter of individual preference, but the story and the action in the latter subject appeals to us more favorably.

In the latter subject two bad men attempt to misuse a young Indian squaw who is protected by a cowboy. In revenge the bad men rocates by regaining the child and bringing it kidnap the cowboy's child. The squaw recipback through much toil and danger to its parents.

We confess that we do not know just where the Pathe producers took this picture, but we have never seen any better example of rolling western prairie country than is pictured in this subject. The action from the beginning is rapid and natural, and the bit of heart interest that centers about the child is sure to arouse a sympathetic interest.

The subject deserves to be catalogued as one of the best efforts of the American Pathe company.

PATHE WESTERN SUBJECT: "THE RED GIRL AND THE CHILD."

GRAND THEATRE OPENS.

Lebanon's New House Opens With Large Audiences.—Bill Changes Three Times a Week.

The Grand Theatre, the finest motion picture theatre in Lebanon, Pa., was opened to the public July 27. The theatre, which is at the corner of Ninth and Willow streets, is right in the heart of the business section of the city and should prove a treat to the women shoppers.

John A. Jackson, who conducts the Theatorium on North Eighth street, has been made manager. His long experience in catering to the wishes and amusement of the public, should assure the patrons of the house that they will get the best there is on the market in the way of pictures.

Without doubt, the new house is the finest in Lebanon, and ranks with any in the state, in the way of modern safety appliances.

The theatre will open at 10 a. m., and will run three sets of pictures each week. These will be different from those shown at the Theatorium, so that persons who visit both places will not see the same program.

To keep up with the standard set by picture houses in the larger cities, Mr. Jackson will give his patrons music that is worth hearing. During the day all musical selections will be played by a high-class pianist and violinist. It is expected, in the near future, Mr. Jackson will install two modern electric pianos.

Miss Maude Oliver, of Lebanon, has been engaged as pianist, and Charles E. Krueger will sing the illustrated songs.

TROUBLES OF A SONG SLIDE MODEL

Scott & Van Altena Put One Over on the Index Man—Stick-in-the-Mud-Poses

Ever sit in a picture show and view a set of song slides that you considered particularly good, particularly bad or any other way? Ever say to yourself: "Gee whiz, what a slide. Why I could pose better than that myself. Couldn't you, Clara?"

Them, readers, were exactly my sentiments a short time ago. Compiling regularly the page of "Recent Slide Releases" that appears weekly in The Film Index, I had begun to criticize the work of the models in many instances until one day Mr. John D. Scott, of the firm of Scott & Van Altena, invited me along on one of his illustrating tours. The tour over, let me say if you have dreams of becoming a song slide model, dream on, don't make up; they have troubles of their own.

The morning when we set out was a beautiful one—clear, though warm, and giving every indication of an ideal day for pictures. Into the big Premier car we jumped, Mr. Scott at the wheel, and whizzed to the home of the girl model, where by pre-arangement she was ready, not with bells on, but with two suit cases and an immense cardboard box.

"Off to Europe?" I ventured.

"No," she replied, "just an extra dress and hat for a change of costume."

The young lady was Miss Emily Sweeney, who plays the part of "Maud" in the Broadway success "Girlies"—one of those who are advertised by Frederick Thompson as "None of them twenty, and none of them married." She was small of statue with small but distinct features, light complexion and blond hair. Her jocular manner and happy expression bespoke but little acquaintance with care or trouble. Her coming duties as model occupied but a small part of her thoughts. The main trouble was that she had missed breakfast. That state of affairs remedied, we were off once more in the big car.

The city's boundaries were passed and I had lighted a big cigar, settled back and was thinking what an easy day I was to have as guest, when suddenly there sprung to my mind the fact that no male model was present.

"How about this Mr. Scott," I asked, "haven't you forgotten a model?"

"Well" said he, "I want to tell you: the model I had made arrangements to bring was unable to come because of an awful case of sunburn. knowing that you would be along, the idea came to me that perhaps you would—er—like to—er—try a hand at posing."

Down went the cigar amidst laughter from Mr. Scott and Miss Sweeney. He had put one over on the Index Man. They even tried to "kid" me into believing that it was a "pipe," and that I was built for the job. But as I said before, Never Again! The troubles were too many. But I didn't know that till after.

The first stop was about ten miles above New York in a thickly wooded place with a beautiful winding road and a pretty lake. Mr. Scott looked around to find a suitable background and I looked around to discover plenty of mosquitos while the "Girlie" was too busy changing costume to discover anything. The song, by the way, was "I'll Build a Castle in Loveland" by Arthur W. Lange. The first pose was against a rustic fence—the girl and I. I stood in what I thought was an appropriate position, but nix.

TROUBLES OF A SONG SLIDE MODEL—"STUNG."

TROUBLES OF A SONG SLIDE MODEL—"PUNCTURED"

The song slide man tabood it and showed me how one makes love for song illustrations. It makes no difference how much natural experience one has had; artistic wooing and ordinary every-day wooing are two different things. One has to learn all over again for the camera. Its no cinch, either. For instance, my body had to have just such a slant even though it were very uncomfortable; hands had to be placed so as to be visible, very often with nothing to support them. The pose had to be held until the camera was focused, a plate put in, and then until the wind subsided. This very often meant a wait of five or eight minutes which seems an eternity when one is uncomfortable. Then if there is any movement of models or foliage, the pose must be retaken.

Our next pose was by the lake.
"Why sit alone, dearie, yearning
When I've something to say to you."

Not only was it a tough job scrambling down a steep hillside to reach the lake, but when there it was somewhat of a mud-hole and a favorite abode of ravenous mosquitos. It is just such places that lend the most beautiful, rugged backgrounds. The lake, too, was extremely odoriferous; but what's that to a song slide model. Well, upon a rock she sat and I on another gazing up into her eyes. Everything was ready for the bulb to be squeezed. All was quiet save for the faint sound of a breeze. Mr. Scott had said "Now ready. Steady" when suddenly something jumped from in front of the rock into the water with a terrible splash. "Girlie" was up and panting with fright before the camera could do its work. She imagined snakes and all other horrible creatures. It was only a bull frog. Once again we settled down ready for the pose, when along flew a huge dragon fly. We had to chase and kill it before going on with the pictures.

After a few more poses in this spot we took to the automobile and made for the nearest restaurant. We found a hotel in some small village where, sure enough, they had a large dining room, but we seemed to be the only hungry ones in the town that day. Once we did think someone else was going to share the eats in that big room, but the two old ladies that entered only sat down to figure something out.

After luncheon we hit for up New York state where Mr. Scott knew of a waterfall. We were all enjoying the breeze this ride afforded when all at once we felt the jolting of a flat tire—a puncture. Then it was all hands turn mechanic and give a lift. Was it hot work fixing that tire? No, the perspiration dripping from our brow was caused merely by the warmth of joy.

We thought at first that the waterfall had run dry. We had to leave the auto on a lonely road and go look for it. It was a beautiful spot—quiet and secluded, but it was impossible to keep still very long. A mosquito would find his way to some tender spot and leave his sting. Its some job to remain in one position and look happy when you're stung.

THERE ARE ENVIABLE MOMENTS.

The last scenes were taken near a chicken yard. Ah, these were the sentimental poses. But the inquisitive little birds were about us all the time and by their clucks and cackles spoiled more than one good pose. To be sentimental among the chickens is a thing one seldom reads about.

These and many others are the troubles that befell an amateur song slide model. He's going to sit tight now and stick to his own job. And you, who have "kidded" yourself into believing that you are some song slide posers, try it.

A ROMMANY BRIDE

A Kalem Gypsy Story

A KALEM production, scheduled for early release, that is just a little different, is entitled "A Rommany Bride." The bride is a beautiful gypsy girl, who has caught the fancy of a young fellow in one of the towns near which the nomadic band, of which she is one, has encamped. The young man wins the heart of the gypsy maid and marries her.

The pair manage to get along nicely till the husband loses his job, and then there is trouble.

SCENE FROM KALEM SUBJECT, "A ROMMANY BRIDE."

Never accustomed to much in the way of comforts, yet the gypsy wife rebels against actual poverty and domestic toil, and, after a slight family jar, she dons her old Rommany costume, picks up her baby and starts off to find her people, while the husband is out looking for work.

Hubby comes home and discovers a note which tells him what has become of his wife and child, and he hastens out to find them.

The girl succeeds in rejoining her folk, and is received with open arms. There is also a gypsy lover who is glad to welcome her upon the return and who renews his suit.

The final scene finds the girl and the gypsy lover seated among the trees, apparently happy, when the husband, who has been hot on the trail, comes upon them. A fight between the two young men ensues, in which the husband is knocked out, the gypsy lover seeming to win both the battle and the girl.

But the husband, pulling himself together, notes the wilingness of the wife to go over to his rival, and decides to bid her good-by and good luck. But when he turns to go, the girl calls him back and makes her final decision in his favor, much to the astonishment of the gypsy lover.

Into this simple story of human life the Kalem players have succeeded in working some excellent dramatic effects, which, coupled with good photography and well-chosen natural scenes, makes an entertaining picture.

OPERATORS FAIL TO PASS.

Examinations too Much for Many Picture Operators—Men Claim They Are Not Electricians.

According to a statement made by William D. Lang, business representative of the Calcium and Electric Light Operators and Motion Picture Operators, of New York city, the new license law, pertaining to the requirements of motion picture operators, has played havoc in the ranks of that class of workmen. So strict and rigid, claims Mr. Lang, are these requirements, that about two hundred operators have been forced to give in their 1910 license cards, thus preventing them from working.

It is said that the examination given covers a general experience with electricity and does not give men who know how to operate picture machines a fair chance. This, Mr. Lang says, is an injustice to picture machine operators who are not expert electricians.

Many of the men who have been affected by the requirements of the new law have been operating picture machines for the past five years and are conceded to rank among the best operators in the city, that is, they understand getting the best results out of the films. On account of this, the operators are under the impression, that long experience should be taken into consideration.

The effect has been to make it difficult for some picture theatres to give performances regularly.

LEADER TAKES OVER LAMBERT HALL.

D. D. Leader, manager of the Rumford opera house, Phillips, Me., has leased Lambert Hall for a motion picture theatre. He has engaged Napoleon Laudey as manager.

During the time Mr. Leader was manager of a house in Rumford, he was very successful, and he intends running only the best and most up-to-date pictures. Besides pictures Mr. Leader will use illustrated songs.

CHARACTER STUDY FROM DICKENS

Edison Players Produce Pleasing Effects In "Love And The Law"—A Corking Comedy In "The Valet's Vindication"

LOVERS of Dickens, and those who have read "David Copperfield," will be agreeably surprised if it is their good fortune to see the forthcoming Edison production, "Love and the Law." This picture is an adaptation of that part of the story of "David Copperfield" relating to his experiences in the law office of Mr. Wickfield, which position had been secured for him by Miss Trotwood, his benefactress.

Here David comes into close association with Mr. Wilkens Micawber, Uriah Heep and Agnes Wickfield. By a clever abridgement of the incidents following David's introduction to the Wickfield family to his marriage to Agnes, the Edison producers have constructed a remarkable character picture. There is the fine old English barrister, Mr. Wickfield, portrayed with simplicity by Mr. William R. West. Wilkins Micawber, the carefree, but impecunious, fellow, always waiting for something to turn up, is well managed by Mr. W. A. Bechtel. Mr. Edwin August is the serious, but impulsive, David. Agnes becomes every bit the lovely maiden of the story in Miss Frances Wright's hands.

The big character part, Uriah Heep, is revealed in all his satanic humility by Charles Brabin, a character actor of wide reputation. In his hands Uriah appears in his true colors: malignant, designing, hypocritical, subservient, debased; anything and everything that he may attain his ends.

The picture story tells briefly of the plans of Uriah to involve Mr. Wickfield in financial ruin, so that he may succeed him in business and gain Agnes for his wife. To accomplish this, Uriah induces Wickfield to appropriate to his own uses the securities of Miss Trotwood. This done, Uriah feels certain of his prey.

It is Wilkins Micawber himself seeking a temporary loan who discovers what Wickfield has done, and communicates it to David. Satisfying himself that Uriah is using his knowledge of Wickfield's act to force Agnes to marry him to save her father's honor, David redeems the securities with his little savings and replaces them in time to produce them upon Miss Trotwood's demand, thus saving Wickfield, defeating the plans of Uriah and winning the love of Agnes.

The picture tells the story clearly and directly, and affords to the Edison players the best possible opportunity to prove their ability as portrayers of character.

SCENE FROM EDISON SUBJECT: "LOVE AND THE LAW," ADAPTED FROM DICKENS.

A SPLENDID COMEDY.

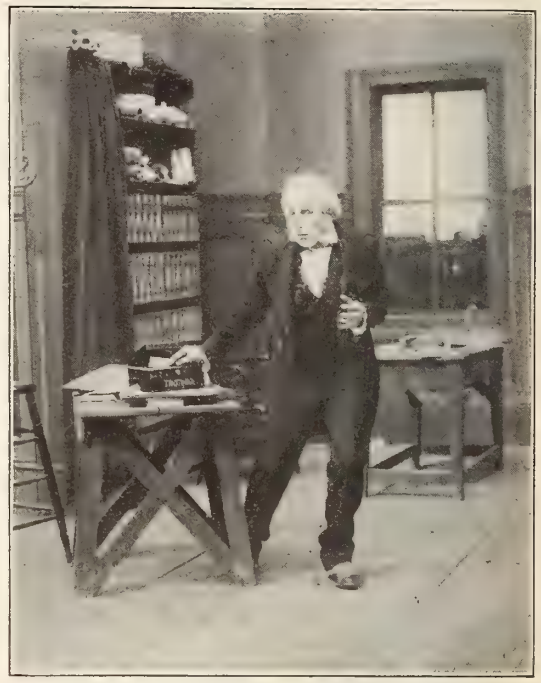
Edward Townsend wrote a story, "The Valet's Vindication," which has never seemed so funny as it does in its picture version. The story is that the master and owner of sumptuous bachelor apartments goes away for a month, leaving his valet in charge. The valet is a sport, and soon goes broke playing poker with his friends, and is at a loss to "raise the wind" until he discovers an advertisement of a gentleman with his wife and daughter who want an apartment for four weeks.

With an eye to business, this valet soon makes connections, and, closing the deal, leaving the new tenants in charge, goes to spend his rent money.

The new tenants have just got nicely settled when the owner of the apartment, cutting his journey short, returns ahead of time. At first he is taken for a burglar, but finally explanations are made, and a peep at the daughter induces the young man to request his tenants to remain.

Of course, the young folks fall in love and get married. Then the valet returns, unaware of what has transpired. Though greatly surprised, he recovers quickly and succeeds in convincing his employer that credit is really due him for bringing about the happy marriage. Whether the master believes it or not, he accepts that version as a complete vindication of the valet.

Every man who has sat in a poker game will get a hearty laugh out of that scene. But that is not the only humorous situation in the pictures; indeed, there is a laugh to almost every foot.



EDISON SUBJECT: "LOVE AND THE LAW."—CHARACTER STUDY OF MR. WICKFIELD.

Another thing: please observe the photographic quality of this picture. It is one of those close views, and it is stereoptic almost throughout.

As a straight comedy, it is one of the best that has appeared in some time.

CRYSTAL THEATRE ANNIVERSARY.

Hugh Mosiman Takes Employees Out for a Picnic at Lake Maxinkukee.

In spite of the predictions made by friends that the old Crystal Theatre, Elwood, Indiana, spelled "failure," Hugh Mosiman, the proprietor, has just celebrated his first anniversary as a manager. Mr. Mosiman saw that by cutting out cheap vaudeville and running straight pictures there was a chance to do an excellent business.

During the past year business has been better than was anticipated. There was something of a slack in the first part of the season, but as the place became more known, business increased, and since the holidays the house has been crowded at nearly every performance. This shows what can be done by sticking to a business when friends predict all sorts of failures.

Early this spring, Mr. Mosiman had the house redecorated, both inside and out. He also put in a new picture machine and built a new fireproof booth. This all added to the patronage of the house and assured its patrons the management was looking out for their safety, as well as their comfort.

In order to show that business had been successful, on July 24 Mr. Mosiman took all his faithful employees on a picnic to Lake Maxinkukee. This was how the first anniversary of Crystal Theatre, Elwood, Indiana, was celebrated. And no one was broke or went home hungry.

Yale Film Exchange Company

THE ONLY LICENSED EXCHANGE IN ST. LOUIS

(Opened for Business July 25th, 1910, with a complete New Stock)

All the Leading Moving Picture Theatres in St. Louis use the famous Yale Service! The reason is obvious—It is Perfect and means Success

We are buying from two to five prints of each and every release each week. Just think what this means to every live manager—an opportunity to select a magnificent program from the world's greatest output of motion pictures.

We also have in addition to all of the recent releases, 1,000 reels of reprints of carefully selected feature films which we have put in our commercial service. This means much to the exhibitor who uses commercial service, as it enables him to run film that is scratchless, patchless and matchless.

BEING JOBBERS we buy in large lots, all makes of standard machines, repairs, gas-making outfits, current saving devices, condensers, carbons, tickets, opera chairs and everything used by a modern moving picture theatre. We SELL MACHINES AND SUPPLIES TO OTHER EXCHANGES AND DEALERS!

No theatre is too large or too small for the Yale Film Exchange to serve.

THE YALE FILM EXCHANGE WAS BUILT AND FOUNDED ON TRUTH AND ITS HONEST AND DEPENDABLE BUSINESS METHODS HAVE PLACED IT IN THE FRONT RANKS.

ITS POSITION IN THE FILM FIELD IS AS STRONG AND AS IMPREGNABLE AS THE ROCK OF GIBRALTAR.

THE CONCEPTION OF THE YALE EXCHANGE WAS LEGITIMATE.

The days of the film pirates are numbered, many of the old time film buccaneers have passed from memory and the few still remaining are tottering on the brink. We cannot help but mourn for those already departed and for the few old piratical commanders still alive we have nothing but sympathy.

We regret that some of the former Film Exchange Captains were so unfortunate as to build their GLASS HOUSES on the treacherous quicksands of misrepresentation, yet as their very inception was illegitimate their final sad ending is really justified.

The day for misrepresentation in the film business is over!

As a word of caution we ask you not to be deceived by the senseless and idiotic advertising stunts of certain unreliable film concerns. Some of their mutterings resemble very closely the dying wail of expiring and fast declining so called film exchanges.

The Yale record is clear, the Yale service is supreme, and our references unquestioned.

If you haven't time to call, drop us a card and we will be pleased to write or have our representative call upon you and explain more fully the merits of the famous Yale service.

CHICAGO LETTER

By James S. McQuade

AARON J. JONES and George K. Spoor filed a mandamus suit in the Superior Court, Friday, to compel Mayor Busse and Chief of Police Steward to issue a permit for showing the Jeffries-Johnson pictures.

The complainants began suit in the name of the people of Illinois. They declare that the prize fight "attracted great public interest," which interest is "transient and ephemeral in character," and that exhibitions must be given without delay in order that they may be profitable. If much time is allowed to elapse there will be a waning of interest, it is declared.

Ordinance and Pictures of the Past.

The petition contains a copy of the ordinance passed by the City Council, November 4, 1907, and entitled "An ordinance prohibiting the exhibition of obscene and immoral pictures and regulating the exhibition of pictures of the classes and kinds commonly shown in mutoscopes, kinetoscopes, cinematographs and penny arcades."

On the basis of this ordinance, of statements from the chief of police, and of the fact that permits have been given heretofore for showing prize fight pictures, Jones and Spoor represent that they bought the right and license to show the pictures. Following are the prize fights called to the attention of the court for exhibition of moving pictures for which permits were given:

Battling Nelson and Joe Gans—the latter winner.

Summers and Britt.

John Arthur Johnson and Stanley Ketchel—the former winner.

John Arthur Johnson and Tommy Burns—the former winner.

James J. Jeffries and Thomas Sharkey.

Negroes Won All Their Fights.

Special attention is called in the petition that in each of the above fights, in which a negro was a contestant, the negro won. A list of theatres in which moving pictures of each fight were shown is given in the petition.

Chief Steward, recites the petition, gave out an interview to newspapers on July 10, saying he saw no reason for withholding a permit; but after they had been inspected, the chief and the Mayor both refused to issue a permit, although the official censor, Sergeant Charles O'Donnell, pronounced them neither obscene nor immoral.

The case was set for Tuesday morning, August 2, at 10 o'clock, before Judge Dupuy, when it is probable the hearing will take place in chambers. The law firm representing the complainants is Felsenthal, Foreman & Beckwith.

Confiscate Ketchel-Johnson Films.

Detectives of Assistant Chief of Police Schuettler's office stopped exhibition of motion pictures of the Ketchel-Johnson prize fight in a theatre in San Souci Park, Friday night, July 30, and confiscated 4,000 feet of films, which were taken to the Central police station.

The theatre is owned by Harold E. Leopold, and the assistant chief instructed Sergeant O'Donnell, picture censor of the Police Department, to start suit against Leopold in the Municipal Court.

Does Live Advertising Pay?

A. Powell, owner and manager of the Ideal Theatre, Kokomo, Ind., is a live wire in newspaper advertising of the straight moving pictures presented at his handsome house during the summer months. Manager Powell is one of the enterprising exhibitors who possesses the knack of making business when others lie supine and cry, "What's the use?"

A bunch of newspaper clippings from the Kokomo hustler is before me as I write, every one of them spicy and to the point. Here is how he treats the Biograph subjects, "As the Bells Rang Out," and "Serious Sixteen":

Here you are, you young ladies who've been asking the manager every time you meet or see him directly or indirectly. Here you are—Biographs just released yesterday—here to-day. Now come and see them. "As the Bells Rang Out" deals with the daughter of a juggler of high finance—the rest of the story the picture will tell you. "Serious Sixteen" is a delightful comedy. Now, come; we want to see all your smiling happy faces at the Ideal.

Come ye all in bunches rare,
Your approbation to declare;
Come ye all with golden hair,
Or other color, we don't care,
Just so you come.
We'll greet you smilingly at the door;
Then escort you way down the floor,
We'll happy feel clear to the core
And render thanks for evermore—
Just for coming.

Another snappy press item brings "Twa Hieland Lads," a Vitagraph release, into the limelight. Here it is:

A novelty, indeed, full of rich humor, entirely after the Scotch. The two lads are immensely funny characters. The Vitagraph's immense studio is a hot place but they always take it cool and never get excited down there. That is the reason they are turning out some hot pictures. Just at present they are handing out "Twa Hieland Lads." They are a breezy pair and make you forget all about the weather and every other troubleism.

Still another treats of one of George Kleine's releases, an educational, micro-cinematographic subject:

A number of microscopic observations of the blood of an animal previously inoculated with germs of sleeping sickness, the dire disease so common in Africa. Highly educational.

And then comes the booming of Selig's great film, "Mazeppa," in which reference is made to the part borne by a Kokomo boy in the production:

A SELIG MASTERPIECE.

Will Santsche, the Kokomo Boy, in a Powerful Part. "Mazeppa," or the Wild Horse of Tartary, after the poem of Lord Byron. See this great picture—nothing like it ever shown. Mazeppa, the son of the great Tartar chief, bound bare on the back of a wild and desperate horse, flying through the forests and rivers, attacked by the wolves, drenched by rain, scorched by the sun, longing for death. It surely will keep you sitting up and watching every foot of this film. Great! Great!! Great!!!. That's all we can say.

These clippings are illustrations of good, effective press matter, short and to the point, and are offered so that other exhibitors may profit by Manager Powell's up-to-date methods of publicity. He has display advertisements also in these papers, of course, and he makes a point of giving all pictures a good poster-and-sign showing in front of his theatre. He has been doing fine business all through the hot weather. Isn't that proof that live advertising creates business, despite the weather?

A New "West" House in Australia.

In a recent issue of the "Kinematograph and Lantern Weekly," I see that our friend, T. J. West, whose operations as an exhibitor ramify the United Kingdom, Australia and New Zealand, is still adding to the list of splendid houses on his Australian circuit.

His latest is the New Olympia, in Brisbane, which brings the number of his picture houses in Australia alone up to 27. On the opening night of the New Olympia, 2,200 people were crowded in, and hundreds were turned away. All the principal people of the city were present, and the Mayor of Brisbane presided at the opening ceremony.

The interior of the Olympia is described as ornate, and the fitting and furniture are in keeping with it. A crystal fountain, a lounge room and fernery are some of the agreeable sights and conveniences with which the theatre is provided. "Interesting, enjoyable and instructive" were some of the complimentary words used by the Mayor of Brisbane when referring to the entertainments furnished in the "West" picture theatres.

It certainly appears that Australia is teaching the world the value and importance of moving pictures. No tawdry, cheap nickel theatre for the Antipodeans! Picture theatre goers there pay 15, 25 and 50 cents admissions, and the exhibition lasts from two to two and a half hours. And the pictures are housed in veritable temples, some of them seating from 4,000 to 5,000 people.

A Great Selig Special.

Exhibitors will do well not to overlook that thrilling Selig special, "Ranch Life in the Great Southwest," to be released Tuesday, August 9. Much has been written about the pictured realism of this film, in the production of which the greatest experts in cowboy daring and exploits took a part. All through the 1,000 feet of absorbing action and dare-devil feats there breathes the very breath of the plains, and at the close one cannot forbear the exclamation, "We shall not see its like again."

Those who wish to learn the names and careers of the cowboy celebrities who appeared in the production are referred to pages 9 and 10 of the Film Index, of June 25. There, too, they can learn that no other pictured story of cowboy life was ever produced amid such natural surroundings and that "Ranch Life in the Great Southwest" will always stand as the Ultima Thule of its type.

Mandamus Hearing Postponed.

The hearing of the mandamus suit brought by Messrs. Jones and Spoor, against the city of Chicago, in the matter of the Jeffries-Johnson pictures, which was set for Tuesday morning, at 10 o'clock, before Judge Dupuy, was postponed until Thursday morning, August 4. It appears that other court business prevented Judge Dupuy from taking up the case, and it will be heard on Thursday before Judge Brentano in the Superior court.

A Big Essanay Laughmaker.

The latest "Essanay Guide" has on its front cover a scene from "Take me out to the Ball Game," an Essanay comedy feature to be released August 24. This is considered by Mr. Anderson, Essanay's western producer, to be the finest comedy yet posed by him, and everyone interested in the great national game is bound to recognize in it a realistic and humorous base ball story. The scene just referred to affords an interesting study in facial expressions, as the spectators watch the progress of the game.

Chicago Film Brevities.

"THE VOW"

A Photographic Masterpiece

By James S. McQuade

I RECALL that John Ruskin, in one of his lectures touching on the important part played by woman in the history of the race, showed that the world's greatest poets, novelists and painters had portrayed her character in nobler colors than that of man. And as all great genius in letters or art is great only in the sense that it successfully aims at revealing truth, Ruskin effectively clinched his argument in woman's favor.

Turning from the so-called "profane" writings to the "sacred," or Scriptures, we find that there, too, woman furnishes the noblest examples of lofty ideals—of courage, devotion, virtue and sublime resignation.

In "The Vow, or Jephtha's Daughter," another aesthetic film by Gaumont, soon to be released by George Kleine, the producer has seized a subject that has furnished many themes for the poet and artist. It belongs to the stormy years of Jewish history covered by the book of Judges.

BEFORE THE TEMPLE OF SACRIFICE.

Whoever wrote it, whether intentionally or not, he has invested the story with a pathos that never fails in its heart grip of the reader. And that pathos is ever intensified by the namelessness of the heroine. Just Jephtha's daughter; that is all! And this omission is sufficient internal evidence to show that prowess in arms at that time, as in our later chivalric ages, overshadowed even the most lofty and noble acts of sacrifice and devotion. Jephtha, the despised, illegitimate son, who had been cast out by his Jewish brethren, and who had risen to be the brave and valorous leader of a brigand host, and afterwards to the position of Judge of Israel, his name was ever to be associated with an act of womanly resignation and fortitude unmatched in history, profane or sacred, and not that of the fearless, loving child who could bravely say, "Do to me according to that which proceeded out of thy mouth." Of one thing we can be certain: had Jephtha written the story the name of his only child would have been traced in letters of purest gold.

Story of the Vow.

Having accepted the call of his people to lead them against the invading Ammonites, who had overrun the land, and havng been appointed their chief by a solemn assembly, Jephtha, before leaving for the field of battle, vowed a vow unto the Lord, and said: "If thou wilt without fail deliver the children of Ammon into my hands, then it shall be that whatsoever cometh out of my door to meet me, when I return, shall be the Lord's, and I will offer it as a whole offering unto the Lord."

The vow was recorded, and a great victory was won. Then the biblical record continues: "And Jephtha came to Mispeh, unto his house, and behold, his daughter came out to meet him with timbrels. She was his only child, and beside her he had neither son nor daughter. And it came to pass, when he saw her, that he rent his clothes, and said: 'Alas! my daughter, thou hast brought me very low; for I have opened my mouth to the Lord and cannot go back.'"

Jephtha's daughter, after uttering the words quoted previously in this article, added: "Let this thing be done for me: Let me alone two months, that I may go up and down upon the mountains to bewail my virginity, I and my fellows."

The popular version is that Jephtha killed his daughter and offered her a burnt sacrifice. Even Josephus, the Jewish historian, interprets that "Jephtha offered such an oblation as was neither conformable to the law nor acceptable to God, not weighing with himself what opinion the hearers would have of such a practice."

But, as is shown in Harriet Beecher Stowe's "Woman in Sacred History," a large and learned body of commentators, among Jews ancient and modern, denies this interpretation for the best of reasons. Jephtha was a Jew, and human sacrifice was abhorrent to Jewish law and national feeling, and at the time of Jephtha this was held and observed. The Jewish law expressly stated that when a human being came into the position of a whole offering to God, the life of that human being was not to be taken, a process of substitution and redemption being pointed out. The first born of all animals and the first born of all oxen were alike commanded to be made whole offerings to the Lord; the animals were slain and burnt, but the human being was redeemed.

Jephtha's daughter was simply taken from the ordinary life of woman and made an offering to the Lord. She could be no man's wife; therefore the bewailing of her virginity on the mountains for two months with her companions. For her, in the flush of a young womanhood, the happiness of wife and mother was denied, and life's fair spring turned to the bleak barrenness of winter. And in that other passage, in the biblical context, "She knew not a man," we see the end of the house of Jephtha.

The Pictured Subject.

In the costuming and environing of the characters in a moving picture, while it is not to be expected that the same accuracy and fidelity observed in master paintings can be followed, yet it is essential that such care should be bestowed as will distinctly convey to the spectator the customs, manners, costumes and surroundings of the story in the age in which it is set. Otherwise we have an anachronism in art.

JEPHTHA'S DAUGHTER. JEPHTHA.

In "The Vow" the Gaumont people—knowing that it would be almost impossible to depict faithfully the scenery and the architecture of the land of Tob, in the far-away stormy days in which Jephtha lived—have given us Grecian architecture and glimpses of scenery that serve fairly well as settings for the Jewish story, viewed from the artistic standpoint. Viewed from the standpoint of pleasing visual effect only, the settings in "The Vow" are admirable and hold the eye in delightful spell throughout the 900 feet of film. The costumes of the men are of Oriental—some of them of barbaric—splendor, while those of the heroine of the story and her girl companions are graceful, flowing garments of Grecian type and beauty.

The pictured story opens with a beautiful colored scene, showing Jephtha in the rich Oriental garb of a Judge of Israel. This is followed immediately by a tinted picture of Jephtha's daughter, the impersonator being a beautiful girl,, with a delicate, sensitive face, through which shines every emotion that stirs a tender and lofty soul.

THE VOW.

Next we see Jephtha, accompanied by one of his leading soldiers, approaching his fortressed home on one of the hills of Tob. His daughter is then on the parapet, eagerly awaiting his approach. The notes awakened from the ancient harp by the touch of her fingers fall on his and his companion's ears, and we see him touch his friend in arms and point with a father's pride and love to the graceful figure above them.

But the scene awaiting the soldier chief is too sacred even for the eyes of the man who has stood at his right hand in many a hard-fought contest, and he is dismissed. And here we have illustrated a delicate touch of the producer's knowledge of his art, for the Oriental custom of secluding the women of the household from all but blood relations was followed strictly, even in Jephtha's days.

And how tender is that reunion in its idealistic portrayal of paternal and filial love! Here we have the whole story of Jephtha's love for his daughter and of her love for him epitomized. They pass around the parapet to the pillared portico of their home, his strong arm encircling her happy shoulders, while her head nestles close to his breast. Now she trips gaily up the steps, and, securing a vessel, she pours out wine and offers it to him ere he enters. And then these two, apart from all the world, sit at the marble table and exchange thoughts that make the soldier's stern face tender and the child's countenance radiant. This scene is done in delicate sepia tints.

But the happy hour of home life is soon disturbed. A deputation from the Elders of Israel arrives and make the request that Jephtha should become their leader against the Ammonites. An imposing colored scene, strong in its massing of picturesque figures, tells the story of the meeting.

Jephtha's departure is next shown in colors, and its chief point of interest is the leave-taking of his daughter. Immediately there follows the scene, also in fine color effects, showing his meeting with his followers and the making of his vow before setting out on the march to meet the enemy.

Jephtha's victory is next told in a thrilling picture that fairly embodies action and color. The enemy is seen flyng in fear and panic, with the Gileadite and his men pressing them close. And then the prisoners are brought in. This scene is truly worthy of a great painter's brush.

And now the glad tidings have reached the home on the hill at Mizpeh, Jephtha's daughter and her girl friends are seen on the steps bearing garlands and spraying blossoms. Soon they trip forth, bearing the emblems of victory and beating their timbrels as they go out to meet the conquerors. Still far off, the returning host is espied by the quick eye of the loving daughter, and she outstrips all her companions in the race to meet her father. He also rushes to embrace his only one. Folding her to his breast, he forgets the awful vow. Then the recollection comes to him with lightning shock, and he staggers away from her. She kneels at his feet, clasping his hand in both of her's, and offers herself a willing sacrifice.

Soon we witness the sad pilgrimage to the mountains, to the heights and dells and forests visited often before in the unclouded days of young girlhood. At the foot of a majestic tree we catch a glimpse of her all alone, for even her loved companions may not witness the agony of that scene.

And last, we view the front of the Temple of Sacrifice. The sorrow-stricken people are there in overcrowding numbers before the victim of her desolate father arrives. He appears first, gaunt and woebegone. She arrives later, preceded by her weeping companions. They have not seen each other for two months. She steps bravely to his despairing, long embrace.

Then the priest appears on the threshold of the Temple. Father and child mutually release each other, and she walks bravely towards the entrance steps—alone. She reaches the lower, when she turns suddenly, and Jephtha, seized at the same instant by the same impulse, has rushed after her. One last farewell, and they separate. On the upper step she is received by the priest, who hides her figure from the kneeling throng with part of his flowing robe. It is fitting to this noble film that the producer followed intelligent criticism by ignoring the popular and brutal belief that the pure-souled heroine was slain by the priest and offered up as a burnt offering.

JEPHTHA'S FAVORITE.

DUTCH LIKE FIGHT PICTURES.

The Rev. Dr. Schubertus von den Berg of Hesswyk, Holland, Abbot of Bern and Knight of the Order of Orange and Nassau, with his assistant, the Rev. Dr. G. van den Elfen, arrived July 27, on the liner Noordam on their way to the Eucharistic Congress to be held at Montreal. They will make a short tour of the United States before going to Canada. When asked what he thought about the exhibition of the Jeffries-Johnson fight pictures, the Abbot smiled.

"I am told that there is some controversy in this country as to whether the pictures are proper to be shown in public," he said. "I am sure that there will be no such opposition to the pictures in Holland. We were greatly interested in that prize-fight and regarded it as a historic struggle. There is no reason that I know of why the record of it in pictures should not be kept and shown."

SOLD FAKE FILMS—CAUGHT

Woman Extorted Much Money From Managers in Many Western Cities.

A woman who gave the name of Mrs. R. L. Proctor of Denver, although admitting that it was but one of many aliases, has been arrested in Pittsburg, Pa., on charges of swindling motion picture proprietors, film agents and others in Colorado and various parts of the country out of large sums of money.

When letters were found in her possession exposing her recent operations she made a confession and said that her real name is Mrs. Don L. Seymour.

From the description of the prisoner and her method of operations, Denver moving picture people are inclined to believe that she is the same woman who operated in Denver and other Colorado towns a year ago under various names, the most generally used being Mrs. Harrison Seymour.

She interested a number of Denver people in her schemes and then visited smaller towns of the state, reaping, it is said, a rich harvest.

In Cripple Creek the police tried to arrest her, but she escaped.

Papers found in Mrs. Proctor's—or Mrs. Seymour's—room showed that she had recently operated with much profit in Los Angeles, San Francisco, St. Louis, Chicago, Cincinnati, Philadelphia and New York. From only half a dozen Chicago people she obtained over $800. The indications are that her returns were much larger in most places. Her career was cut short in the Windy City by film dealers who had received warnings from other cities.

She had many ways of operating and changed her methods so often that it was difficult for the picture people to be on guard against her. Her most common scheme was to call upon the proprietor of a theatre or upon a film agent and state that she was placing a new film of uncommon merit. She would describe the picture sufficiently to arouse a desire to use it. Then she would produce contracts for the film, sign these on behalf of the firm supposed to have made the picture, and collect a deposit. That was the last the manager would hear of either woman or film.

Mrs. "Harrison Seymour" first appeared in Denver toward the close of July a year ago. She went to H. H. Buckwalter, the picture agent, and tried to sell him the rights to some of her "exclusive films." Mr. Buckwalter declined to negotiate. Then she went to James A. Harris, an attorney in the Empire building, who at that time was representing two picture theatres, the Denver and the Omega. She sought to purchase these places. The proposition she made was to pay down $500 cash for each of the houses, and a weekly sum after that, but she was to take possession at once. Harris declined this offer.

But in a few days a number of people, principally young men, visited Harris and inquired about "Mrs. Seymour." They all told very nearly the same story. They had been approached by the woman, who said she owned the picture theatres, and had bought from her an interest in the places. Some of them had also accepted contracts to operate the theatres, for which they were to receive good salaries in addition to their profits as part owners. Mr. Harris informed his callers that "Mrs. Seymour" had never an interest in the theatres, and the Denverites said they were out nearly $1,400

AUSTRALIAN NEWS BUDGET

Dr. W. H. H. Lane Writes An Interesting Story On Antipodean Picture Affairs

THE motion pictures on this side of the water have been reaping a big harvest of the "Golden Goodies" from the King's funeral pictures, and although it is now ancient history, the attendance still keeps at high water mark.

It is simply marvelous how these shows have caught on with the people of Australia, and new theatres are being erected all the time. At the present time we have no less than four new theatres in the course of construction, and three of these are to be larger than any of the present ones.

Mr. C. Spencer I see has paid a visit to The Film Index, and I must say that the way he loaded you up with "hot air" has caused a good deal of funny remarks on his sayings. Especially when he speaks of the American machines not standing the work in this country, for to the writer's certain knowledge, the machines that are getting the hardest usage are machines made by the Edison Company, and these are run by Americans that have had many years' more experience in this line than Mr. Spencer ever has had, and they certainly give as good, steady pictures as are shown at any theatre or motion picture show in this part of the world.

There is a saying that "fools rush in where angels fear to tread," and this can be applied to those remarks that were made as regards the products of America, and where the motion picture is seen to as good advantage as in any other part of the world.

Mr. J. D. Williams, of The New Colonial Theatre, Limited, was the first to give to the Australian public the continuous show, and he has succeeded beyond the most optimistic predictions; so much so, that there is now being built just a few doors from this theatre another one that is going to be run on the same plan.

Mr. Williams has started the International Film Exchange, and also the Great Western Film Exchange, and he has besides that many other irons in the fire, all of which have brought heavy grist to his mill, and he has made a success where even your scribe predicted rank failure. There is, of course, much jealousy at his success, but he pursues the even tenor of his way, and has made good in all the things that he has done so far. I am firmly convinced that he will continue to do so as long as he continues in business.

Mr. Williams has floated his theatre into a limited liability company, and with a paid up capital of £10,000, which, to put it roughly into American money, is $50,000. Then he could have had thirty thousand pounds as easily as he had ten, for the investing public of this city is not slow to watch that which succeeds, and the old saying, "nothing succeeds like success" has been amply justified in this case.

I am informed that the applications for shares were three times the sum asked, but that all the stock is held by the American boys who are with him at his place of business. Mr. Charles Williams is manager of Film Exchanges, and Mr. Leon Phillips, treasurer.

Mr. Williams has introduced another American novelty in the theatre work, that of the ticket cancelling machine, and it will not be long before we will see these inventions in use at some of the larger places, and eventually in all of the places of amusement. The Australians are very slow to take on anything new, but when it has been tried and proved, then they go for the same with a rush. There are more Americans over here as a rule than there are English, and Australians are beginning to take more kindly to all things American than they used to.

Mr. Williams opens his Colonial theatre to the public at 11 daily, and runs a continuous show up to 11 at night, and charges but three prices for admission, 3d, 6d and 1|-, English money, which corresponds to 6, 12 and 24 cents American coin. The highest price mentioned being for seats in the private boxes. Mr. Williams has spent about $12,000 during his occupancy of this theatre in fitting up and altering the interior construction of the place, putting in a new dress circle, fitted up with the finest brussels carpets, folding leather covered opera chairs, and every seat commands a good view of the screen, and with exits aplenty, so that in case of fire the house could be emptied inside of two minues by the watch. He has also added a new orchestra pit and has, during the evenings, a full orchestra, and during the day a good pianist for the music. On Sundays a grand sacred concert is given, the programme having to be put before the governmental authorities for their approval before permission is granted for him to show, but no admission fee can be charged at any theatre on Sunday, Good Friday or Christmas Day, these days being observed in all English countries with more fidelity than Sunday when it comes to religious observance.

The admission is fixed at a silver coin, and, as the 3d. bit is the smallest, he gets as good prices as he would on weekdays, being sent to those portions of the house according to the sum contributed. This city, and, in fact, all of the places of English rule on this side of the water, are far too much under the dominion of the priestcraft and long-faced "Wowsers," who think that if a man smiles on the Lord's day that he is going straight to the bottomless pit.

The police say that these moving picture shows are a good thing on Sundays, as they take the people off the streets and that they have far less work to do when they are open than when everything but the churches are closed, and if they had the making of the regulations I think that they would like to see every place of amusement open on the Sabbath day.

If you sell a penny's worth of peanuts or candy on Sunday and are caught in the act, you will be called before the court and fined from $2.50 to $50, all according to how the liver of the beak is working at the time. Yet, at the quay, where all the buildings are owned by the government, these shops, which, by the way, are all in the hands of the dagos, are allowed to keep open as long as they like; so you see that there is one law for the people and one for the government.

FLASH LIGHT VIEW OF SPENCER'S LYCEUM PICTURE THEATRE AT SYDNEY, N. S. W.

West's Pictures Limited, which is without doubt the largest motion picture concern in the world, has returned for the winter season only to the Palace theatre, and is showing to full houses nightly, in fact, turning money away nightly, and is also running from noon to 5 o'clock, showing the King's funeral pictures, and the business done is phenomenal. West has no less than fifteen permanent places in Australia and New Zealand, and employs over four hundred hands. The head offices are located in this city, on Pitt street, in Ingliss Chambers, where all firms that manufacture or provide for this class of trade should send their catalogs, price lists, etc. Mr. T. J. West, who was only a short time back in the United States, is the managing director of all of these great enterprises, with his office in London, where he sends out all of the pick of the world's productions.

The great feature of all of the West productions is the music and effects that accompany the pictures, and that alone is worth the price of admission to any of their shows. Mr. Louis de Groen, who supplies all the music to Vice-Royalty, both Federal and State functions, is the director of all productions. If this is read by any of the manufacturers in his line, his address is the same as to West's pictures Limited.

There is great rivalry in the production of films here and to show how far it is carried, a rival firm advertised sole rights to the Kalem film, "A Girl Spy," when this film was shown at another theatre and had been replaced by others, and to my certain knowledge was being shown in at least half a dozen other theatres at the same time. West's had it on at the time, and they are still featuring this film. J. D. Williams was the first to show the picture in Sydney.

There are on at the time of writing at the Palace theatre, besides the films mentioned, "The Turn," a comedy on the Paris floods; "Taming a Grandfather," and one of the best is "Gallagher," from Richard Harding Davis's newspaper story. Then we are treated to "The Village Inventor," "The Microbes of Recurrent Fever" and several very high class ones and comics, as well as the whole of the late "King's Funeral," with the finest music in Australia to accompany these.

The shows are all run on different lines than in the States, the performance lasting about two and a half hours and about 8,000 feet of film is shown. Yet in the face of all this, I do not see that the attendants at the theatres and music halls have any cause to complain in the least, for they are all playing to capacity, and what more can they expect? Messrs. West also own and control the Bijou theatre in this city, that was opened the day of the arrival of the American fleet, and has since that time seen three different managements, but now is in West's hands. It will be a very long time before it will shift again.

Mr. C. Spencer, who is building on George street a new theatre to be called The Lyric, which will cost for the building about $125,000, is making very rapid strides now with the construction of the same. This has caused the demolition of four comparatively large new buildings and three smaller ones. No doubt the main reason that has prompted Mr. Spencer to build here is the close proximity to the Central Railway station, the ease of reaching it, and the too severe censorship that is put on his productions at the Lyceum, of which he is the lessee. This building is owned by the Methodist Church, having been left to them by Mr. E. Vickery, just before his death, and they have to have it for two weeks each year to hold their annual "pow wow," and that makes a break that hurts the show, and all films have to be submitted to their committee, and no fight films or any that do not come up to their narrow-minded ideas of propriety. So, to be where he is more free, he has decided to build.

From the plans submitted and the architect's sketch of the front, this will be a very imposing structure, into which Australian marble will be a leading and pretty feature. Then, again, Mr. Spencer cannot show his films on Sunday, as the Methodists want the theatre for their roundups of the derelicts on that night, so there is none who will blame him for wanting a place of his own.

No doubt Mr. Spencer will continue to hold onto the Lyceum as well, but I am rather inclined to think that when his lease is up the owners will call for tenders as to the lease of the theatre, for the purpose of showing pictures. They will never let it for the production of dramatic works, as they have nearly obliterated the stage, and on it have placed a large pipe organ.

There is no doubt that Mr. Spencer has made a lot of money out of the M. P. business, but I consider that it has much more by sheer good luck than by the management, for he certainly does not manage a theatre as I would do. But I am not going to try to teach him his business, for he has men to do that.

There are certain things that I could and will suggest to him in this letter, and one is, that he shows the announcements of films on printed cards, for it is with the greatest difficulty that you can hear the announcement made in the circle, and the writer hears more complaints on that score than any other. Another thing he does not do, and that is to make out his programme in the sequence with which they are shown, but the first picture on the programme may be the last picture shown at that performance. Why he does so none but himself can tell. But I can assure him that either of the things mentioned does not meet with the approval of his clients.

I do not want him to think that I have written these lines from any ill or splenetic feelings, but it may contain some good advice that will hit others who run their shows on the same lines, and perhaps they will take kindly to the suggestions thrown out, and fall in line.

Now I am going to throw out a few hints to all and sundry as regards the stage effects, and I want here to ask those who are responsible for them to go out on the green sward and trot their horse over the grass and see if they can hear a sound that will sound anything like a lot of horses trotting over stone paved or wood blocked streets, and yet you hear it nightly when these pictures are thrown on, sounding as if there were a regiment of cavalry trotting up some of the stone blocked streets of New York at full gallop. Who ever heard an electric street car or train in traveling give off the sound of the starting of a locomotive with its puff, puff?

Now for some gentle hints to the American film makers, and one that it will pay them to consider, especially when they are showing a long letter or telegram in their films. The time allowed is all too short for the masses, and I myself who, as you well know am no novice at the game, cannot get even one quarter of the matter through my brain, and I think I can read as fast as the fastest. Now, I am an old hand at the game, not only as an operator, lecturer, but can take, develop and print, and know all the requirements for the success of a film; and what is more, I can say that I have been connected with the business from the days of the old, but forerunner of the M. P. business, the Kinetoscope.

I am very lothe to give advice to those who are successful in the game, but let them take the place of the audience, and see if, when a long letter or other document is placed before them, try and read one half of it, before it is flashed off the screen. Then how much more necessary is it for those who do not know the plot and desire to follow the story. The American makers are the worst offenders of all in this respect, for all of the English, French and Continental makers do allow sufficient time for an educated person to read them.

Now, I am an American, and my life's aim has been to see the American products take the lead, and some of them are so near the top of the ladder now that it will not be long for them to be able to say that they are the best.

The American Biograph Company's films are to-day looked on as equal to any productions that are screened, and if they make as rapid progress for the next twelve months as they have in the past, they will rank as far and away the best.

There is no doubt to the writer's mind that some of the French and Italian films have as much to give them favor with the public as anything, from the fact that they are natural-born pantomimists, and that carries great weight in the art of film making.

One other object of wonderment to me is the apathy with which educational films that bring the world at large to the very doors of millions, who will never get a thousand miles from where they are born, are received. Take films that take us to the Holy Land and to Athens, up the Nile, showing the ruins of forgotten ages, and with what cold apathetic indifferncе they are received compared with some nonsensical film that has neither the bounds of possibility or probability to recommend them, and what do we find. The one the cold stolid reception; the other applause that makes the very walls tremble. You will say, that is what the masses want, but one reason is the absence of any lectures on this side of the world. Mr. Spencer states that they prepare the lecture and effects, but in all my visits I have never heard an explanation of a picture given in Australia, with the one exception, and that was at the old Coliseum where the Glasiarium now stands.

Since then I have never heard the sound of anything that pertains to a bit of instruction on the picture screened. I often wonder did the masses ever take a thought of the risks ran and the trouble taken to get some of these scenic and educational pictures? I heard several remark that the picture of "Recurrent Fever" was not a fit picture to show to the masses, but to a company of medical students it was all right. With this I disagree, for the motion picture has and will continue to educate the masses, and has preached many and many a more get-there sermon than many a preacher ever did. Take the one film "Laddie" for an example. I have seen that film at the very least a dozen times, but never that it did not flood my eyes with tears and bring home the lessons taught to me by my sainted mother in the little Connecticut village where I was born and was educated for the first twelve years of my life, and I have thought of the pleasure it would have given me to have had my dear mother to have looked after, in her old age, but my mother was taken from me at the age mentioned.

Take the Pathe film "Sister Angelo." Never was a film shown in this city to my knowledge that drew so many people to see it as that, and what a sermon of love and devotion to duty and vows did that preach. Yes, the moving picture has come to stay, and for years and years to come it will fill the bill.

I wish to say right here that if my letters draw forth inquiries, I must ask that the postage be fully prepaid, and at least 12 cents in United States one or two-cent postage stamps be enclosed, as my time is fully occupied with press work and other matters, and last year I had an average of 11 cents to pay on each letter received from the States. WANTS PICTURES IN SCHOOLS

The Kinematograph of London Advocates Motion Pictures—Say Follow Germany and United States.

The Kinematograph and Lantern Weekly that well known motion picture journal, of London, Eng., has now come forward with an excellent article, advocating the use of motion pictures in the public schools as are now done in Germany and the United States.

While the Kinematograph has always been in favor of this method of education, it has, like so many of the other publications, left such matters to the board of education, thinking that these educational factors would be wise enough to see the value of such modern inventions and advocate them without public clamor.

In the article, the Kinematograph, evidently points with pride at the stands taken by Germany and the United States, in this matter, and says of the "Mother Country": 'England is far more backward in this respect, and indeed, has failed to realize in even the remotest degree the power of the motion picture as an educator."

To show the earnestness taken in the matter by the Kinematograph, we print the article for perusal by our readers.

"The articles which have appeared of late in the columns of the daily press on the kinematograph as an aid to education, whilst they should serve to direct the attention of the manufacturer to the immense field which should be open to his efforts, should also have the effect of drawing public attention to the vast opportunities afforded by the moving pictures to so revolutionize the teaching of the young idea as to make study a pleasure and facilities for learning so great and so interesting that school life should no longer be looked upon as drudgery but as a pleasure. There is no doubt that what has kept the kinematograph out of the schools has been on the one hand an utter lack of knowledge on the part of those in authority of the many uses to which the moving picture can be put, and on the other hand the idea that the kinematograph ought to be looked upon as a species of infernal machine liable to go off at any moment and cause dire disaster to all those within reasonable distance of it. Happily, owing to the great extension of the moving picture industry in recent years, those who occupy positions of power have had daily opportunities afforded them of making themselves conversant with kinematography and all that appertains to it. The rarity with which catastrophes, the blame for which could be even remotely laid at the door of the industry, have occurred, and the fact that even the few that have been recorded in this country have been due either to panic or carelessness, has also done much to remove the stigma which formerly attached to the kinematograph of being an engine of destruction as evil in its effects as the most deadly projectile of warfare. Civilized humanity has come to look upon the kinematograph as part and parcel of its daily life, and there is no reason why, that being so, it should not form part of the great educational curriculum of this country, as it already does in Germany and America.

"It is somewhat of a reproach that whereas other countries which are generally considered not to have progressed so far in regard to civilization as our own more favored land, have been quick to appreciate the educational properties possessed by the kinematograph, England is far more backward in this respect, and indeed, has failed to realize in even the remotest degree the power of the moving picture as an educator. In America, for instance, such a high opinion of the moving picture show is entertained by some of the authorities that it is no new thing for the children to be taken en bloc to the electric theatre, where a free entertainment, consisting of little plays from old fairy stories, that carry a lesson easily grasped, scenes from foreign lands of interest to the children, and other subjects are depicted. It is strange that whilst it is universally admitted that the way to the heart of a man or a woman is through his or her stomach, it is far too little realized that the way to the child's mind is through the eye. It would undoubtedly prove a good and remunerative investment if the Board of Education were to select and pay for films suitable for children, and engage capable operators to work in circuits, and once a week, or if that be not possible, once a fortnight or once a month, give entertainments to its scholars, which could be made highly instructive as well as entertaining. But somehow or other we are still slow to apply up-to-date methods to our educational system, which appears to be a gigantic antiquated machine with which we are unwilling to interfere for fear of putting it out of gear, and thus necessitating an entire change in the mechanism. Still there is something to be thankful for in the fact that though the kinematograph has been tabooed in the schools in the past, it is impossible for it to be neglected much longer as a means of education. The County Councils spend a considerable sum yearly in placing pictures on the school walls showing the evil effects of strong drink, but how much more forcibly could the lesson it is intended to teach be shown upon the screen. The same with the study of science, geography and history. How much easier and more interesting would history be to the average student if taught by the aid of pictures of past times and events, accurately staged and acted. Japan has already realized this, and recently placed an order for eight projectors to be used for class purposes. All this points to one conclusion: that the moving picture will ere long be a valuable adjunct in teaching in the schools and colleges.

But prejudices die hard, and the conservative nature of the English race has much to do with the failure to follow the lead so nobly set by Brother Jonathan and the little Jap. But surely it is not too much to hope that with Government recognition of the industry by its friendly solicitude in framing an Act of Parliament to secure the safety of the public, tantamount in itself to an admission that with the exercise of reasonable precaution the public may witness a kinematograph display secure in the knowledge that their safety is assured, the educational authorities may overcome their prejudice, and recognizing the value of the kinematograph as an educator, may provide for the inclusion of its use in the daily routine of the school. Such a step would mean much to all branches of the industry. Whilst the rising generation would benefit enormously by having the lessons which they were desired to learn presented to them through that most powerful of all senses, the sense of seeing, those who in years to come will be the patrons of the picture theatre, if they are not so already, would be gradually cultivating a liking for the pictures which should stand showmen in good stead when the present generation of picture patrons has passed away. The equipping of the many thousands of county council schools throughout the United Kingdom would give a fillip to the kinematograph manufacturing trade which would be a veritable uplift. The inauguration of a system of peripatetic teachers would benefit the operators, and the film producers would reap a harvest from the demand that would be created for educational films. The Education Department have already been sounded on the matter and have given a sympathetic hearing to the arguments put forward. The leaders of the industry should now press the matter home and leave no stone unturned to secure for the kinematograph trade full recognition at the hands of the Education Department."

L. N. WOOD BUYS TWO HOUSES.

L. N. Wood, of Montpelier, Vt., has purchased John F. Dobb's interest in both motion picture theatres, the Savoy and the Palace, in which they have been successfully associated for some time. Mr. Wood opened both houses July 18, as five cent shows, running two reels and one song for a show, this being the show that was given before the change was made for a dime.

The Palace has been closed since spring and will be reopened.

The Savoy has been in operation all the time and as stated the price there will be reduced to five cents to meet the popular demand for such a show. Mr. Wood states that the same high grade pictures will be maintained.

"UP TO DATE SERVANTS."—In this story, which is one of the brightest and most beautiful of our recent comedy subjects, there is distinct thread of the plot of "Cinderella," with numerous corresponding incidents, brought up to date.

The Van Camps are out of town and the maid and chauffeur are in charge of the house. During the absence of the mistress, cards of invitation to a certain ball were left for her, and the maid, knowing that Mrs. Van Camp will not return in time to keep the engagement, resolves to masquerade as her mistress and attend the affair herself. She tells Bob, the chauffeur, but he refuses at first to be a party in the reception and shows the maid a letter just received from Mrs. Van Camp, stating that she will be at home at 12 o'clock and for Bob to meet her at the railroad station with the car.

Marie, however, insists that she will go and urges Bob to find a dress suit among the master's wardrobe, while she, in the meantime, will array herself in one of Mrs. Van Camp's evening dresses.

An hour later they are ready for the ball and sweep gallantly out of the drawing room with as much grace as even the fashionable Mr. and Mrs. Van Camp might have done.

In the ball room Marie makes a decided hit and arouses the admiration of a princely young fellow, to whom she gives every dance. The evening flies away and as the hour of twelve approaches, Bob endeavors to find Marie, but she is nowhere to be found. Fearing discharge if he fails to meet his employer he hurries out, jumps into the car and speeds to the station.

In the meantime Marie is busily engaged with her young prince when the clock strikes twelve. However, before the last stroke of the hour she is seen flying down the stairs and so great is her alarm and apprehension that she loses a slipper and does not stop to pick it up, but hurries on. When the handsome young companion of the evening finds her gone he also rushes down the stair but finds nothing of her, except the silken slipper.

The next morning the young man's mind is in a whirl as he thinks of the events of the night before. The slipper is in his pocket and occasionally it is removed and pressed to his lips. At the breakfast table there is an altercation with the cook, who immediately throws up her job and stalks out. Here is a pretty state of affairs for Jack's mother, who, that evening, was to give a party in honor of the young man's birthday. However, the father promises to visit an employment bureau on his way downtown and find a new cook. Here he meets Maria, who had been summarily discharged by Mrs. Van Camp, after she had learned the full details of the shocking incident. Jack's father employs the girl and she is given the name and address of her new mistress and told to see her immediately.

That evening Jack is in the dumps, despite the jollity of the others and finally he is forced to confess to the merry-makers the real reason for his gloom. He is looking for Cinderella or the lady who can wear this tiny slipper. Then there is the fun of trying on the slipper but not one of the girls present is able to squeeze into it. Jack is in despair when his mother announces that the refreshments are served and Marie, laden down with good things, comes into the room. She sees Jack and crash goes the cake tray. But Jack drags her forward and tells her to try on the slipper. She has no opportunity to demur and a moment later her tiny foot is encased in the slipper. With a glad cry and a toast, Jack announces the finding of his Cinderella.

"FEEDING SEALS AT CATALINA ISLAND."—This short educational subject was made on the beach at Catalina Island, off the coast of Southern California, and shows a party of tourists feeding the pet seals, famed to all tourists. These animals are very intelligent and absolutely fearless. Our picture shows Jupiter and Neptune, two of the largest of the herd, posing before the camera.

"THE GIRL ON TRIPLE X."—Apart from the excellent story of this film there are other features which should prove of keen interest to film fans and will top it off as one of the best of our recent Western dramatic releases. The remarkable horsemanship displayed by the members of our Western troupe, has been highly complimented by many exhibitors, and in this film there are certain exhibitions of skill and dexterity, which is little short of wonderful and will undoubtedly call for a rousing ovation when your audiences see it. The story of the film follows:

Jack Hartley, the foreman of the Triple X ranch, is engaged to Nellie Monroe, the ranchowner's daughter. A quarrel starts between Jack and "Red" Williams, a cow-puncher, when the latter first makes advances to Nellie, and second, when Williams abuses a faithful Indian ranch hand. On this latter occasion Jack is unable to restrain his temper and the result is a short fist-fight in which Williams is defeated.

Smarting under the punishment, Williams seeks revenge. For some time the miscreant cow-puncher has been in league with a bunch of cattle rustlers, whose several attempts at raid on the Triple X cattle, however, have brought them nothing, and due entirely to the alertness of Hartley, the foreman. They have sufficient cause to hate the manly young fellow and when Williams, after having been put out by the foreman, stalks into their camp, begging them to join him in obtaining his revenge, all are willing.

That they must be cautious, however, is plain to them when another of the band joins them, bringing in tow Indian Pete, whom he had found spying about the shack. When Williams sees the Indian he is in favor of killing the Indian but the others restrain him.

Having settled upon a plan of revenge, Williams is dispatched with a slip of paper, bearing a few words scrawled in lead pencil which is to be the undoing of Hartley, providing, of course the game works right. The others ride off leisurely to the Triple X horse corral and make away with a dozen or more ponies, while Williams is to work his end of the game with Hartley.

He finds Hartley at another part of the ranch and succeeds in establishing a reconcilation, after confessing his wrong and pleading forgiveness. Hartley gives him his hand and brings out his cigarette papers and tobacco when Williams asks for "the makin's." When Hartley is not looking Williams slips the bit of paper in among the rice wrappings, then bids Hartley goodby and leaves to put the finishing touches to his nefarious scheme.

A few minutes later he rides excitedly up to the ranch house and calls loudly for Monroe. When the old ranchman appears, Williams tells him of the stealing of the ponies, and adds further: "And, I know who's at the back of this dirty trick. It's Hartley. If you don't believe it I can prove it."

The alarm is given and Hartley, unsuspicious of the conspiracy, comes running on the scene. A little crowd has gathered when Williams makes his accusation: "I saw him with a bunch of greasers this morning, and I saw him get a note from them fifteen minutes ago, and that note is in the pocket of his shirt. Search him." The astonished and enraged Hartley is seized and searched. The note is found and reads:

> Jack Hartley: Got the horses all O. K. and will divide with you tonight. Meet us at the usual place. The Bunch.

Hartley is given no attempt to defend himself, despite Nellie's desperate pleadings. He is ordered to mount his horse and leads the procession on the way to execution.

In the meantime, Indian Pete, left with a drunken cowboy makes his get-away and, with his hands still behind him, mounts a horse and rides desperately back to the ranch. There is no one there but the heart-broken girl. He tells her everything as she releases him and the two mount and ride at top speed to the scene of the execution.

They are just in time. The Indian proves Hartley innocent and Williams is seized and stood in Hartley's place. The film ends here, with the embrace of the lovers.

"THE WATER CURE."—Many will remember "A Seat in the Balcony," as a decided comedy hit. All who used that laugh getter will want this, which is equally as strong.

Francois Beauchamp is troubled with a serious illness which drives him to a physician. His case is found to be serious and a cold-water shower treatment is recommended.

The medical light states that he ought really to take a cold shower hourly for eighteen years. Francois immediately hires an attendant to carry a spraying apparatus and see that he gets his treatment with proper regularity. He does, no matter where he is nor how many people are discommoded.

"ENTOMBED ALIVE."—A thoroughly interesting and perfectly developed drama of intense tone. Wonderful natural scenery for the stage.

Among the crags of the Balkan mountains dwell a tribe of woodsmen who have for years been oppressed by the ruler of their country. At the opening of our story they are planning to capture the royal prince, both for revenge and to obtain a ransom for his return.

Next, we see their attack upon him in a defile of the hills. He is taken prisoner and carried to their camp beside a rushing mountain torrent where he is bound to a tree and left in charge of one of their number while the others go to their rest. Soon the sentry falls asleep.

During the night a young slave girl, who has been moved by the prince's sufferings, sets him free. The sentry awakes, but too late. The bandits pursue the refugee but are outwitted and fail to recapture him.

Meanwhile, the slave who had set him at liberty, is arrested, and condemned to answer for it with her life. She is entombed in a cavern and left by the band.

The prince, who has escaped, arrives at the king's castle at the same time as the emissary sent to ask 100,000 florins for his ransom. The messenger is arrested and soldiers are immediately sent against the tribe which is subdued.

The prince arrives in time to save the girl who had rescued him. He takes her to his father's palace where she soon becomes his wife.

"DRIFTS OF SNOW IN CHAMONIX VALE."—Especially photographed during the long winter to alleviate the sufferers from August heat in our theatres.

High mountains, deep valleys, dense forests, open fields, all covered with so deep a spread of white as would sound ridiculous in a story.

In the streets of the village your audience will see snow which reaches to the cornices of the buildings.

"PICTURESQUE WATERS OF ITALY."—The Film Index under date of July, 1910, printed a full page article by James S. McQuade, their Western Representative, regarding this film, which we wish to commend to the attention of every showman.

As descriptive of the film we are printing a portion only of Mr. McQuade's article.

"A NOBLE SCENIC."

* * * "The travel or scenic film will fail in its true mission—To Educate—unless those who view it can view it intelligently.

But now to view the "Italian Lakes" film intelligently.

We are aboard a small steamer, on the blue waters of Maggiore, as it approaches the small village of Baveno, on the central western shore of the lake. The boat is crowded with tourists and sightseers, and all are looking at the pretty hamlet nestling at the foot of the mountains.

Baveno is a favorite resort by reason of the commanding view it gives of the Borromean Islands. It boasts of the Villa Clara, a handsome structure built in early English style, in which the late Queen Victoria resided for several weeks in the spring of '79, and also the Crown Prince Frederick of Germany, in '87.

As one takes the steamer trip from Baveno to get a general view of the Borromean Islands, he passes in succession Isola dei Pescatori (Island of Fishermen), Isola Bella (Island Beautiful), and Isola Madra. This far off view, as shown in the Gaumont film is simply superb, vista after vista passing before the eye with reawakening splendor.

Fisherman's Island, the first of the Borromean Islands to be touched by the steamer is the home of 300 souls, chiefly fishermen and their families. Along the shore, in the picture, fishing boats are seen with netting stretched, getting ready for the morrow. The shore of the island affords numerous picturesque glimpses.

But the piece de resistance of the film is centered in Isola Bella, which is beautiful from whatever angle viewed. This island was at one time a barren rock, on which might be seen a few scattered dwellings and a church. Count Vitaliano Borromeo changed the forbidding, sun-scorched rock into a beauty spot, a very fairyland. From 1650-1671, the building of the noble chateau that now crowns the island and the laying out of the garden which has become noted as one of the finest specimens of the old Italian style, occupied the time and taxed the resources of the Count. This garden rises in ten terraces from the waters of the lake, the highest being 100 feet above. It is stocked with lemon trees, orange trees, cedars, magnolias, eucalypti, laurels, cord trees, camphor trees and magnificent oleanders, besides numerous other luxuriant products of the South. Shell grottos, arbors, and statues meet the eye at every point.

The huge chateau, the north wing of which was never finished, contains a series of handsome reception rooms, a famous gallery hung with 17th century tapestries, and many other art treasures. As viewed from the lake in the Gaumont pictures, this grand old structure and the spacious garden are clearly seen, the spectacle being impressively noble.

Lake Mergozzo, a small lake on the highway westward along the north shore of the central bay, to the west of Lake Maggiore, is next visited. The pictures of this body of water are remarkable for the water reflections shown. These are so perfect that the picture could be inverted without marring the distinctness of outline or detail. The sublimity and grandeur of the mountain scenery here hold one with the force of a great epic.

The film closes with a tinted scene showing sunset as viewed from the waters of the Maggiore. This inspiring view will linger long in the minds of all who see it and is a fitting finale to a noble scenic film.

self steals some valuables in the paralytic's home, the invalid being a powerless spectator of the robbery.

The stolen jewels are then placed by the robber in the pocket of his happy rival, and thus the innocent young man is accused of the theft, and particularly charged by the one who himself was guilty of the robbery. The accusation is made in the presence of the old paralytic. His emotion upon hearing this lie is so great as to cause him to regain his speech and the use of his limbs.

The old man convicts the real culprit, and while the criminal is taken into custody, to the innocent he gives the hand of his granddaughter. One month later the wedding takes place and the dance is opened by the old man, now quite cured from his ancient illness.

The rural scenes have been carefully chosen with attention to their artistic values.

"THE HEART OF A SIOUX."—Paul Hester, a young college graduate, is assigned to teach an Indian school on one of the Government reservations and takes his sister with him to make him a home. On their arrival at the mining camp some of the men decide to test his mettle, and one of them contemptuously kicks at his valise. Paul is quick with his fists, but the other more adept with his gun, and the sight of the blued steel checks Paul. But Fawn Heart, the daughter of the chief, is quicker yet and her own gun compels the bully to drop his Colt's. Paul quickly falls in love with Grace, the daughter of the Government agent and finds his affection reciprocated. Meantime Fawn Heart also falls in love with her teacher and mistakes his kindly interest in her studies for a deeper feeling. Fawn Heart is an expert with bow and arrow, and Paul has instituted an archery contest as a part of the holiday games. Fawn Heart wins the prize and later puts her skill to good use when Lone Wolf, a member of the tribe, seeks to rob Paul of the money left in his charge by the agent, who is called away on a trip. Paul hears a noise in the school house and enters to engage Lone Wolf in a desperate struggle, which is terminated by Fawn Heart, whose arrow pierces the Indian's wrist. Bravely she learns of the forthcoming marriage of Paul and Grace, but when the merry wedding party has passed from sight she shows that hearts are pretty much the same the world over by sobbing out her sorrow on her father's breast an effective final tableau to a story of unusual interest.

"A CHANGE OF HEARTS."—Stubbs was a gallant old sport, one of the boys, and all else that is connected with the gay life about town. Mrs. Stubbs takes delight in the societies for the prevention of something, and Stubbs is constantly telling her that he wishes that she was more like himself. Mrs. Stubbs stung by his frankness of speech, comes to realize that perhaps she is as dowdy as he says she is, and she leaves home writing Stubbs that he will not see her again until she has made herself over into the sort of woman he prefers. Stubbs is delighted and starts out to celebrate. Mrs. Stubbs, meanwhile, has been shopping. To see her you would swear that she was hopeless, but a transformation is effected before your very eyes, and from the chrysalis of the dowd emerges a radiant and dashing young woman who soon learns to like champagne and rake in the chips at poker. She gains what Stubbs calls "class" with amazing rapidity, and takes delight in the thought of how pleased her husband will be. But meanwhile the Salvation Army has claimed Stubbs for its own, and his earnestness soon gains him promotion to a captaincy. In this capacity he goes to a fashionable restaurant to sell his War Crys, and comes face to face with his missing spouse. It is a trying moment, and both fall fainting into the arms of their friends. It's a novel idea most cleverly played.

"THE RETURN OF TA-WA-WA."—After graduating from an Indian school where he has acquired an education and schooling in the ways of the white man, Ta-wa-wa, a young Indian, returns to his native territory, and far Western home. On the way to the tribe's encampment he stops at Vail's ranch, meets Kawista, his boyhood sweetheart, who greets him cordially and with a frank admiration for his gentlemanly appearance.

While they are exchanging greetings the postman enters and hands a letter to Mr. Vail from Col. Leigh, an Englishman, stating that he will visit the ranch with Lord Wyndam, an English lord who expresses a desire to see a real Indian powwow. He hopes Mr. Vail can arrange to have one "pulled off" for his especial benefit.

Ta-wa-wa promises to help matters along and when he reaches the Indian encampment of his tribe he arrays himself in an Indian blanket and returns to the ranch with Kawista to meet Col. Leigh and his English friend Lord Wyndam.

Col. Leigh with his niece Rose Leigh and Lord Wyndam arrive. As Kawista passes by Lord Wyndam is very much attracted by her; Ta-wa-wa is attracted to Rose Leigh and she seems to reciprocate his feelings. Kawista notes their glances, is suspicious and keeps her eyes open for developments, which appear when Ta-wa-wa is teaching Rose Leigh to ride and when Rose gives him her photograph which he carries in the bosom of his shirt.

Kawista tries to dispel Ta-wa-wa's infatuation for Rose but her efforts are fruitless. Col. Leigh receives a letter which calls him back to England and Rose goes with him. Ta-wa-wa decides to follow her and after he has gone Kawista, with the help of Nellie Vail, the ranchman's daughter, follows Ta-wa-wa to England. Ta-wa-wa reaches England to find Rose and Lord Wyndam just leaving the church where they have been married. He is spell bound and his mind gives way under the shock and disappointment.

He is seized by an officer who is about to take him to the police station when Kawista puts in an appearance and begs his release, promising to look after him.

She takes him back to America and to his home where she restores his reason and wins back the love of their childhood days and the true love that never dies.

PATHE FRERES.

"THE TROUBLES OF A FLIRT."—Rose, the daughter of a gamekeeper, is engaged to marry a country yokel, Peter. The vintage season arrives and all are working in the vineyards when an Italian balladmonger finds his way to the spot. Rose is attracted by his looks and cannot forbear throwing a saucy glance at him, despite Peter's sour looks, and later in the evening when he plays music for the dancing, continues to flirt with him. However, Rose is only a flirt, and when he sends her a note asking her to meet him she promptly refuses. Peter, however, fully believes that she has thrown him over for the handsome Italian, and enraged at being jilted, would harm her, but the gamekeeper intervenes, and with tactful management puts matters straight between the lovers.

"JEWISH TYPES IN RUSSIA."—An educational film of great interest, showing briefly different types of this much persecuted race.

"THE 'IBIS.'"—The Ibis is a training ship supported by the Crown Prince of Belgium for the sons of fishermen who have lost their lives at sea, thus enabling the lads to following in the footsteps of their fathers and be in a position to support their widowed mothers. The training they receive on the ship is destined to make them not only good fishermen, but fine, robust sailors as well.

"HER PHOTOGRAPH."—The trouble began owing to Mr. Gayman's infatuation for a vaudeville star, who, in the due course of events, presented him with a photograph of herself in a part that required her to wear a dress that began low above and finished high below. What was more natural than that Mrs. Gayman, in the course of her wifely duties of going through his pockets, should discover it and throw it out the window and substitute the photo of a demure salvation lass. How could the theme of this film be accomplished if little Willie and his big brother playing leapfrog outside had not found it and naturally took it home with them, where their papa quickly confiscated it. To describe the various adventures of this fascinating photo in detail would spoil the fun that even the most hardened exhibitor is sure to get out of the picture. But we will tell you that in the course of the story the photo passed through the hands of four men, two boys, one idiot, a negress, a clergyman, and two policemen, and is discovered and thrown away by three wives and one fiance. It eventually fell into the hands of a Bronx policeman.

He of course being an honest man took it to the station house, where the original soon appeared to explain it. But the desk sergeant was the happiest man, for he was the one who kept it for all time nailed above his desk.

"THE RED GIRL AND THE CHILD."—Dick Sutton, a cowboy, leaving his wife and little tot of a daughter at his cabin, rides off to a jollification that is taking place at the store that in those regions fills the part of saloon, postoffice and grocery. On arrival he is just in time to stop Bill Duggins, a cattle rustler, from bullying an Indian squaw. Bill, sore, swears he will be revenged and on his way to his camp meets Dick's little girl going to the spring to obtain some water. Seizing her in his arms he quietly approaches Dick's cabin and fastens on the door a note to the effect that he had taken the child away in return for Dick's smartness to him at the saloon. The wife shortly after finds the note and rides post haste to inform her husband. Accompanied by the grateful Indian woman and all others present, Dick starts in pursuit of the renegade, and they are rapidly closing on Bill and the little girl, when they come across the child's skirt on which has been scratched with blood "follow and I will kill the kid." Frightened for the child's safety they stop to consider, and finally the Indian girl disguises as a lad and starts off to try to get back Dick's daughter. She crawls quietly in the dark of the night up to Bill's camp, and taking the "OLIVER TWIST."—Oliver Twist, an orphan apprenticed in London to a master who ill treats him, runs away and is found wandering, famished and penniless by Bill Sykes and The Artful Dodger, two of London's holigans of that period. They take him to Fagin, the old Jew receiver of stolen property, who having provided him with a good meal, wants him to turn pickpocket and work for him. He is forced to start out with Sykes and the Dodger as instructors, and as a first lesson an old gentleman, Mr. Brownlow, is easily robbed of his watch by the Artful Dodger. Oliver had all the time objected to the crime but he is the one captured by Brownlow and arrested. A storekeeper, however, overhears the truth when the two culprits are conversing outside his store and hastens to court in time to free Oliver, who is adopted by Mr. Brownlow on hearing his sad story. Some months after, when sent on an errand by his benefactor, he is shot by Sykes for refusing to aid him and his companions in a robbery. Fagin and his gang are, however, soon after this captured and imprisoned, and on his recovery Oliver visits Fagin in jail and forgives him for the wrongs he tried to do him.

"FORGIVEN."—James Bartlett, pastor of the Vine Hill Church, meets and falls in love with Helen Mason, one of the parishers—oblivious of the early history of the Mason family. He is happy in the interest of his work—a devoted wife and a home made cheerful by an angel child who proves the tie that binds. The pastor's spinster sister, whose home is with him, finds ample time to offer suggestions and advice through her evident dislike to Helen.

In the early 80's John Mason was convicted of a crime and for ten years had languished behind prison bars, when one day he made his escape and found his way to the home of the minister for protection. Helen, fearful that her husband would become aware of the blight hanging over the family, gives him money, which was church funds, left in her keeping. Her only impulse was to save her good name and help her brother to safety.

The husband sees their parting and forms a hasty conclusion—turns her from his door. With a breaking heart and a guarded secret in her bosom, she turns toward the cruel world, guided by the all-seeing power and her womanly instinct for the good and pure. During all this time she is persecuted by Jim Wilson, under threat of exposure, until life almost becomes a burden. In fleeing his unwelcome attention, she seeks refuge in the church, only to be pursued—her flight to the belfry and miraculous escape by the bell rope. She sees one evening through the lighted window her husband and little girl sitting in the pastor's study. She is so unnerved and broken-hearted that she faints and her fall attracts the spinster sister, who had just entered the room. She at once goes to her assistance and carries her within the house, bringing her face to face with all that was once life and happiness. The Sister of Charity arrives with a death-bed confession from the brother that he alone was to blame—that he had forced his sister to give him the money and to keep his secret. A new light comes to the home. Mother father and daughter, in one fond embrace, begin life anew and only sunshine and happiness shrouds the little Vine Hill church.

"LOST IN THE SOUDAN."—Selig unhesitatingly announces "Lost in the Soudan," as one of the most thrilling and inspiring stories ever told in a thousand-foot picture film. Captain Iris and Lieutenant Payne—brother officers in the British army—are commanded to report for duty in the Soudan. Hasty preparations are made and the two young soldiers, with their escort, begin their weary march across the hot desert sands. They finally reach an oasis, where a halt is made and the long line of soldiers with their camels and horses are given an opportunity for a brief rest. A quarrel ensues between the two officers and the Lieutenant is struck down suddenly. Through the treachery of their Arab guide the camp is attacked, their horses and camels stolen and the soldiers are massacred by a hundred murderous savages of the desert. Believing the Captain to be the only survivor, the Arabs take him captive to their stronghold in the hills.

Years elapse. A caravan is seen slowly winding its way across the desert. It is part of Kitchener's victorious army passing over the Soudan. A strange creature is seen in the immediate foreground, a snake is crawling along the sands, the being raises his cudgel and is about to kill the snake when he espies the caravan coming towards him and immediately bounds away in fright. He is pursued by the soldiers, who bring him to bay in his cave on the hillside.

After a desperate fight the soldiers bring him out into the sunlight and find that he is a white man—one of their own race, but stark, raving mad. Hanging to the tattered rags upon his back is a button of the British Army. Was the poor, wild raving creature once a British officer? The flag is fetched and placed before him. He sees it and pauses in his wild fear. Wildly he clutches the banner. The soldiers stand in breathless expectancy. Slowly he looks from one to the other. Something from the hazy past comes to him. Gradually he remembers—he was once one of them. The soldiers at last reach their home post. The desert has been robbed of its prey. The lost comrade has been brought back to life and love and civilization—but who is he? The denouement is happy and startling and brings to a finish one of the best pictures ever made under the "Diamond S" trademark.

"THE DEATH OF MICHAEL GRADY."—Wurra! Wurra! says Mike, as he places his hands to his stomach to accentuate the intense pain he is suffering in that part of his anotomy as he pursues his way homeward, explaining to his neighbors, whom he meets, "he feels that sick he could die." Poor man!" say the neighbors. "The saints be praised! It's a doctor you should see, and not be thinking of an undertaker."

Reaching his home, Mrs. Grady hustles Mike into bed, gives him a good horn of whisky and goes about her affairs, keeping a close eye and ear on her husband to keep tabs on his condition. The neighbors, glad to gossip and not slow to exaggerate, tell of Grady's sickness and how he was that bad that he felt the chill of death creeping over him. "A fine man is Mike, and Mrs. Mike too young to be a widdy, while Mike had such a good paying job." Mike lies moaning and groaning in his bed, underneath the window. His lamentations can be plainly heard by his sympathetic friends who chance to be passing the house, and when they are met by other friends who tell them about Grady's sickness they immediately add their acquired knowledge to the severity of the case until there is little hope in their minds for Mike's sojourn among them.

Mrs. Grady in the course of her household duties is arranging an Irish stew and sets about peeling some onions, which make her eyes water, and she is obliged to relieve them occasionally by wiping her eyes with her apron, and when she is through with the onions she stands up and again applies her apron with renewed vigor to her suffering orbs. Two of her neighbors, who are appointed a delegation to inquire about Mike's condition, are just about entering the house, and getting a glimpse of Mrs. Grady weeping onion tears and wiping her eyes, immediately come to the conclusion that Mike is dead, and they must lose no time in attending to the obsequies. They hurry to the undertaker, florist and monument builder, and make all the necessary arrangements for the funeral.

Mike, relieved of his pain, is now sleeping a sound sleep. His wife, feeling satisfied that he is all right, goes out to do a little shopping. She no sooner leaves the house when the undertaker places a crepe on the door, and the mourning friends enter the house to "wake" the dead, taking possession of the parlor and asking themselves "Why did he die?" A different scene is witnessed on the outside of the house when

Mrs. Grady returns and sees the sign of mourning on the door. She falls in a heap and thinks her Mike has taken a sudden turn and succumbed to the inevitable.

Recovering herself sufficiently to enter the house, she is ushered into the parlor and surrounded by the assembled wailers. Their noise and wails awakes Mike, and he sits up in bed, listens, jumps to the floor and makes his way, in his long nightgown, into the parlor before the assembled friends, who mistake him for a ghost and hurriedly run pell-mell from the room.

Mrs. Grady looks up between her sobs, and when she satisfies herself that Mike still lives she throws herself into his outstretched arms, and together they shed tears of joy. The too-previous friends regain their senses, and one by one they re-enter the room and congratulate Grady that he is not a corpse and Mrs. Grady that she isn't a "widdy."

"MRS. BARRINGTON'S HOUSE PARTY."—All the world loves a lover, and never gets tired of a good love story; and this is a very good one, with a strange complication of affairs, which is happily set right at the proper time with a very happy ending. A young man and woman (they are necessary, of course), are in love with each other (quite natural). The young man asks the young lady's father for his daughter. The father refuses to listen to his request, and even turns a deaf ear to her pleadings for his consent.

The young folks, with the assistance of a friend, elope, get married, and keep their wedding a secret until the lady is invited to spend a "week end" at Mrs. Barrington's to participate in the house party she is giving. The young wife manages to get Mrs. Barrington to invite her husband. Mrs. Barington is fond of lionizing and always pleased to distinguish herself in match-making.

She readily sends the young man an invitation, and when he arrives she gives him a room next to and connecting with his wife's room. Everything is arranged just to their liking, and whenever they meet in the hall they act in the usual way with newly married couples—very affectionately. One evening they meet on the balcony of the house and lovingly converse and embrace. An old busybody who is sitting at one of the windows observes them, and, ever ready to create gossip and scandal, tells Mrs. Barrington, who decides to approach her guest and ask her what it all means.

While dressing for dinner the young woman finds it impossible to properly place a pin in the back of her dress and calls on her husband in the next room, through the connecting door, and just as he has finished the pinning Mrs. Barrington knocks at the outer door of the room. The wife hurriedly pushes her husband through the intervening door and, as she closes it, her dress is caught. Mrs. Barrington enters, and as the young woman advances to greet her hostess she finds her dress held by the door. Mrs. Barrington sees her predicament and accuses her of abusing the hospitality of her home and violating common decency.

At this point the husband comes from his room and explains that they are man and wife, shows Mrs. Barrington their wedding ring and places it on his wife's finger. Mrs. Barrington is delighted, and agrees to go to the young lady's father and intercede for his recognition and blessing. They all go to the father's home and win his entire approval, and at the same time Mrs. Barrington wins the father's heart and hand.

"THE TURN OF THE BALANCE."—Hotel life is always punctuated with new and interesting arrivals. In this instance there is a man in the case as well as a woman. They are both young and have a mutual love. The young girl is stopping at a fashionable hotel with her father when the young man appears as one of the guests. After becoming acquainted the young people pass much of their time together, and, strange to say, they do not become acquainted in the usual way.

This is the way: The young lady is playing golf and the young fellow is walking across the links when she drives a ball straight ahead, which lands with considerable force on the eye of the young man. She becomes alarmed and runs to his assistance, bathing his eye by dipping her handkerchief into the lake and applying it to his injured optic.

They walk home together and she introduces him to her father, and the young man intimates to the old gentleman a desire to pay court to his daughter. The father objects on general principles or disposition, but his distemper doesn't seem to interfere with the getting together of the young folks.

On one of their strolls around the lake they see the girl's father boyishly paddling a canoe, and at a second glance see the canoe upset and the occupant fall into the water. The young man plunges into the water and saves the girl's father, who, when he recognizes his daughter's beau, expresses his gratitude and his desire to renew their acquaintance, and at the same time gives him permission to call on his daughter.

The young man, who is a stock broker, is suddenly called to the city by the fluctuating market, and finds when he reaches his business that it has gone from bad to worse until ruin seems to be the end. In a hopeless state of mind he is contemplating suicide, places a revolver at his head, and is only prevented from destroying himself by the ringing of the telephone bell.

He receives a message from the young girl whom he met at the hotel asking him to call and see her. He goes, and she tells him she will consent to marry him. He tells her of his failure in business and that he is in no financial position to marry her. She tells him that love will find a way to secure a livelihood, but riches can never purchase true love. The young man is filled with new life and ambition, declares that while he has lost wealth he is made rich indeed by her love.

BIOGRAPH CO.

"THE HOUSE WITH CLOSED SHUTTERS."—What a contemptible type of human animal is the coward. He is totally devoid of all the elements that go to make up a man. Charles Randolph was one such as this, bombastic and haughty, but with no real courage, and what was worse, a heavy drinker. He, his sister Agnes and mother were the only survivors of an old and distinguished fighting family. Agnes is high-spirited and lovable, and at the beginning of the Civil War Charles is carried away by the enthusiasm, and urged by Agnes, procures a commission in the Confederate service and is assigned to General Lee's staff. Members of the same regiment are Lieutenants Wheeler and Carter, both good natured rivals for the hand of Agnes. The story opens with the departure of the boys with their regiment for General Lee's headquarters, taking with them a large Confederate flag which Agnes had just completed. In Lee's tent Charles is given sealed dispatches and launched on a most important mission. It is a perilous undertaking and during the course of the journey he becomes panic-stricken with fear, and drinks heavily hoping to revive his waning courage. Completely overcome, he dashes madly toward his own house, where he seeks to hide himself. Here he becomes very drunk, and Agnes and the mother are horrified at the awful disgrace that threatens the family name. With sudden impulse Agnes decides to don Charles' uniform and proceed on the mission in his stead, to return in time that he, when sober, may go back to report to General Lee the result. She makes the perilous journey and delivers the dispatch, but on the return she is caught in the battle's maelstrom with her horse shot down. She becomes imbued with the spirit of the conflict and rushing into the very vortex fights as Charles never could have. In the retreat the flag is in danger of capture and Agnes (leaping over the breastworks, seizes it only to be shot down by a shell. No one has suspected that the gallant soldier was other than Charles, and news is sent to the Randolph homestead of his death. At the reception of this information, Charles realizes what a contemptible dog he is, and the mother, fully appreciating the awful disgrace the exposition of it would be, commands that Charles remain forever where he is for the good of the family name, that the world may not know his sister died protecting a coward. The shutters are closed and barred and all is mysterious and gloomy. At the close of the war the young suitors return, but are told that Agnes is not to be seen, being crazed from grief over her brother's death. Year and year it continues the same, the constant suitors, growing old, leave their floral tribute at the door. Inside the darkened rooms Charles goes through the bitter years from youth to old age paying the price of his cowardice until death mercifully releases him.

"A SALUTARY LESSON."—God's greatest gift to the home is the child, and how often is it scantily appreciated. In this Biograph story is shown the result of this lack of attention toward the child which almost reached a fatal culmination. Mrs. Randall is strongly addicted to the reading of cheap novels, so much so that she has little time for anything in the nature of domestic duties. The care of her ten year old little girl is especially odious. Living in their seashore cottage, the little one begs her mamma to take her to the beach, but mamma petulantly tells the child not to bother her. The father enters at this moment and more to shame the mother than anything else, takes the child for a stroll on the beach. They have hardly departed when the minister calls and Mrs. Randall sets about to do her utmost to entertain him. While on the beach, Mr. Randall meets a very fascinating and flirtatious young lady, and in a spirit of daring reciprocates her attention. The poor child is now left to its own devices to amuse itself. So, neglected, she wanders across the strand to a distant quiet bay. This portion of the resort is entirely deserted and the child mounts a rock far inland on which she sits to rest. The journey has fatigued her, and overcome by drowsiness she dozes off to sleep. Meanwhile her careless indifferent parents are pursuing the bent of their own inclinations unmindful of what danger their child may be in. Some time has elapsed and the tide turning, we find the rock on which the child sleeps completely surrounded by water which is still rising until it reaches her, waking her up. There she is marooned on the rock, with no help in sight. Her protracted absence arouses alarm and a search is started, but in vain, until a life-saver strolling this distant beach hears a feeble cry. Looking in the direction from whence it came he espies a small dark object far out from land. This proves to be the child's head which now alone remains above the surface. He swims to her rescue, and carries her to her distracted parents, who have by this time been taught a bitter lesson as to what their careless indifference resulted in.

"THE LADY AND THE BURGLAR."—Professor Blackburn is an eminent lecturer, a man well past middle age. He has married a beautiful and charming young woman of whom he is deeply enamored. No clouds mar the Professor's marital happiness. The young wife is very fond of the Professor, but he is so engrossed in his studies and the preparation of lectures on Egyptian hieroglyphics that he does not respond sufficiently to the ardent devotion of his wife. Mrs. Blackburn is constantly importuned by a previous suitor whom she had rejected and though she declines at all times to listen to the handsome Lothario, she refrains from telling her husband anything about his advances.

An automobile accident happens one day which has a great effect upon the domestic affairs of the Blackburns. A little girl is badly injured in the accident and Mrs. Blackburn picks her up and carries her to the child's home. There she meets the father of the child, a man of poor circumstances, whose appearance would indicate that he is of the lower strata of life. Mrs. Blackburn places the child upon the little cot in her room and sends one of the neighbors for a doctor and a nurse. When they arrive she makes arrangements with them for the care of the child, and instructs them to leave nothing undone for the comfort and welfare of the little one. For this she receives the gratitude of the father, who is deeply impressed by the kind act of this beautiful "Lady Bountiful."

We now go back to the Blackburns. One day Mrs. Blackburn is waiting in the park for her husband to come along, when Ainsley, the rejected suitor, passes, sees her and accosts her. The Professor coming to the place of meeting, sees his wife in conversation with a handsome stranger, and for the first time in their married life jealous finds a place in his heart. Mrs. Blackburn does not tell the Professor who the handsome stranger, is fearing to arouse the very sentiment which has, unknown to her, begun to tear the Professor's heart. The suspicions of the Professor are deepened when on entering the parlor one day he finds Mrs. Blackburn hastily concealing between the pages of a book a letter which she has just received. He asks her what is in the letter and she hesitatingly says that it is from a friend. As a matter of fact, the letter is from Ainsley, announcing that he will take the first opportunity of calling when the Professor is not at home. Mrs. Blackburn is angered at the reception of this letter, but does does not tell the Professor anything about it.

While the Professor's mind is tossed between varied emotions of love and jealousy he receives a call to deliver a lecture out of town. Hastily gathering some data and books, he bids Mrs. Blackburn goodbye. It is evening and as the Professor leaves his beautiful home we see a rough-looking character, none other than the man whose child was befriended by Mrs. Blackburn, watch him as he walks away. The man's attitude indicates that he intends to burglarize the house, and such proves to be the case. He steals around the back way and enters the rear window. While Dykes, the burglar, is filling his sack with the silverware in the dining room another visitor calls. The butler is presenting the caller's card to Mrs. Blackburn, when the latter, who proves to be Robert Ainsley, is seen to enter the room unannounced. He is clever at passing off the intrusion, and tries to make love to Mrs. Blackburn. She repels his advances and asks him to leave the house. He laughs at her, and refuses to go.

While this scene is going on the Professor, who has forgotten a couple of books which are necessary in the delivery of his lecture, returns to the house, enters the library and hears some discussion going on in the other room. His jealous mind immediately forms the conclusion that Mrs. Blackburn is untrue to him. While the Professor is trying to fathom the difficulty in the library we now watch Dykes, who is leaving the dining room and entering the parlor. He is on the scene when Mrs. Blackburn and Ainsley are in a heated discussion, and when he recognizes Mrs. Blackburn he tries to help her out of the dilemma. When the Professor drops a book in his excitement in the next room Mrs. Blackburn realizes that her husband is at home and tries to get Ainsley away. She is afraid of his stepping into the hallway for fear that he would meet the Professor, and she is afraid of telling the Professor of his presence for fear that he might be unjustifiably jealous.

She is in a quandary what to do, when Dykes, the burglar, steps forward, places his gun to the breast of the undesirable Ainsley and tells him to leave the house in the manner that he (Dykes) entered. This Ainsley does. Telling Mrs. Blackburn to trust him, Dykes places his pistol on a chair and pretends to take the necklace from her throat. The Professor enters and is surprised at not finding what he expected. He quickly rushes to his wife's aid. Seizing the revolver he forces Dykes to throw up his hands. The Professor backs toward the telephone on the table. Mrs. Blackburn now realizes that the man who has saved her is going to be captured. Her quick wit saves the situation. By a clever ruse she effects the escape of Dykes. This is not a great worry to the Professor, for the fact that his jealousy was unfounded is the paramount consideration with him. A happy ending follows, the action of which is most convincing and splendidly characterized by those involved in the scene.

The story of this film is splendidly sustained from start to finish, and the picture is up to the usual high Edison standard.

"THE ATTACK ON THE MILL."—On the left bank of the Moselle River in France there once stood the old, picturesque mill of Merlier. It is just such a spot as this that painters rave over, to which poets love to lend their choicest fancies, which writers describe with rapture, and alas! around which fate often plays her saddest tragedies. War never marches its iron wheels across a lovely bit of landscape but what it leaves its mark of human suffering behind. The main issue is too great for the world to stop to note the little tragedies that strew the path of the marching legion. It is only when such master writers as Zola pause and mediate over the great little tragic events strewn beside the larger issue that the world gets a glimpse of the true horror and misery of war. It is just such an event that Emile Zola has made into a masterpiece of literature, and which the Edison Company has translated into black and white upon a field of canvas which fades now and then into the soft, pale blue of night revealing magnificent scenes of falling waters and moonlit rivers. Few pictures have had such gorgeous stage settings and such picturesque backgrounds as Edison's latest silent drama, "The Attack on the Mill."

First, the eye is introduced to the old mill itself, with a gay betrothal party in progress, and laughter and merriment on all sides. Suddenly the laughter is hushed by the martial tread of feet, and the smile of joy fades from the two young lovers' faces as the French soldiers march into the courtyard and prepare to defend the mill against the oncoming attack of the German army. The mild summer afternoon has but halfway run its course towards its western home when a wounded outpost comes staggering into the courtyard with the news of the advancing German army stamped upon his blood-stained forehead. Suddenly the courtyard is filled with the smoke of battle, and we know that the long-expected attack is on. In one of the rooms of the ancient mill old Merlier, his daughter and young Dominique her lover, are huddled close together in mute terror and humble submission, while behind the barricaded windows of the room kneel powdered and bloodstained French soldiers, sullenly resisting the leaden onslaught of the Germans from without. Neither old Merlier nor Dominique takes any interest in the conflict save that of terror, fear, wondering when it will all be over and dreading the result.

A leaden messenger of war has rudely kissed the brow of Dominique's sweetheart, and slowly the red blood trickles down her cheek. Dominique sees it, and a savage impulse of defense leaps into his brain. He hurls one of the soldiers aside and, seizing his gun, smashes the window frame and stands there loading and firing with the determination that each shot shall reach the heart of a German soldier and teach him to remember that the woman whom Dominique loves is more precious to him than a thousand other lives. At sunset the French decide that to defend the mill any longer would be useless, and a hasty retreat is ordered, but Dominique does not hear them. The red stream of blood on his sweetheart's forehead is all that he can think of, and so he continues to load and fire until suddenly he is confronted by the German Captain and his officers, and into his ears are read these words:

"Any citizen of France bearing arms against the German army, not clothed in French military uniform, will be treated as a spy and shot without court-martial."

He feels the warm, soft arms of his sweetheart around his neck, and then he is marched away to be locked in a room till the Germans have time to end his life in the morning. Upstairs in the room above him old Merlier's daughter stands listening. She is thinking and thinking of the coming dawn. Silently she goes to the window and opens the inner shutters. The soft moonlight steals into the room. She decides to crawl down the ivy-covered wall to her lover below. Unfastening the window of her room with an old knife, she crawls down to the window below and knocks. Soon the two lovers are in each other's arms. After much pleading Dominique agrees to try to escape for her sake. They steal to the window. On the opposite shore by the great water falls can be seen the German sentinel passing back and forth in the moonlight, with his rifle on his shoulder. Dominique is unarmed. Slowly the girl takes from her bosom the knife and finally stretches it towards him. The lovers look into each other's eyes and they understand one another. Dominique takes the knife and prepares to leave.

An hour later and the head of a man appears above the rocks on the bank of the opposite shore just behind the waiting sentinel. A stone falls into the river—a muttered cry and the two men are locked in each other's arms in a terrific struggle. A knife gleams in the moonlight, and slowly the sentinel sinks to the ground, while young Dominique stands staring down at him. The alarm of Domininque's escape is given in the morning, and the body of the dead sentinel is brought before the commanding officer, together with the knife that was found beside him. Old Merlier realizes by his daughter's looks of terror and cry of fear that she is guilty of young Dominique's escape, and he takes the blame upon himself to shield her from the guilt. The commanding officer is relentless in his determination to capture young Dominique, and gives Merlier the opportunity of finding him and bringing him back in order to save his own life. This, of course, the old man refuses to do, knowing what it would mean to two young lives. But his daughter learns the fact and seeks out Dominique in his hiding place. There she is forced to tell the man she loves that his life is the price of her father's.

The hour of execution has arrived, and old Merlier stands waiting for his doom, when young Dominique and his sweetheart return only to find that she has failed to save either one of their lives, as the Commander decides to make both pay the penalty of the crime. But the fate of war often changes with the passing moment, and it is thus that the ultimate close of the picture gives the audience a thrill of joy and surprise that were well to leave untold. The Edison Company has surrounded this picture with a lavish production, and the photographic quality, acting and costumes are all that could possibly be desired for such a masterpiece of literature as Emile Zola's "Attack on the Mill."

KALEM CO.

"THE CALL OF THE BLOOD."—"The Call of the Blood" is the title of the latest Kalem Indian production. It is characterized with the same attention to detail that has made the others of this series so successful, and the story in this production, as all other Kalem Indian films, is founded on an historic fact.

During an Indian tribe's warfare the little daughter of one of the chiefs who has fled in the panic with the other children becomes lost and strays into the path of a pioneer family. The pioneers have just buried their only little child at the side of the trail and their hearts go out to the miserable Indian girl, who timidly approaches them for protection. They take care of her and bring her up as their own, and the girl becomes in training and dress like one of her white sisters. There comes a time, however, when a young white man falls in love with her, and her foster parents consider it their duty to tell both the girl and the young man the story of her origin. The girl's first impulse is a desire to see something of her people, and her father and her lover reluctantly consent to accompany her in a search for the tribe from which she originated. Thinking that her long life among the whites will cause her to revolt when she sees the poverty and hardship of her own people, it turns out that "The Call of the Blood" is too strong, for when the tribe is finally located the young squaw completely forgets her foster father and her white lover, and takes up with a young buck, whose squaw she becomes in spite of the argument and protestations of her white friends.

The picture is a primitive problem play of the strongest type, and is a most important study in American ethnology.

KALEM SUBJECT: "CALL OF THE BLOOD."

"THE BORROWED BABY."—In order to better balance their line, the Kalem producers have been working of late on comedy ideas, and it is promised that good comedy subjects will from now on be a regular part of the Kalem product. The first of the new series is called "The Borrowed Baby," and is announced for Wednesday, Aug. 10. The theme is a variation of the popular "Lost Child" idea, and embodies many original and highly ludicrous situations.

The mixup all starts from the decision of the Bugleville Dramatic Society to produce an amateur play. The cast calls for a baby. They believing it necessary to have the real baby at rehearsal, one of the girls volunteers to go to the home of a friend and borrow one. The friend happens to be out at the time, but a note which is left on the table explaining the situation blows out of the window. There is first shown the experience of the baby in the hands of the amateur dramatic society, and then the sensation when the mother reaches home and discovers that the baby is gone. The village constable is called in and the house is ransacked without results. In the meantime, however, the rehearsal is ended and the company proceed to the baby's home. The leading man is detailed to take the baby in. Of course he falls into the hands of the constable, who thinks he is a kidnapper, and the picture ends in a scream of laughter, with every one trying to explain.

MEXICO WILL SEE FIGHT FILMS.

There is no fear of race rioting in Mexico City, over the Johnson-Jeffries contest pictures, and the Mexican sports will not be denied the pleasure and sport of seeing them. Every true Mexican, who can stand for a bull fight and not have his temper aroused can stand seeing so tame a sport as a boxing match.

Governor Landsay Escauden of the Federal District, says he will not interfere with an attempt to stop the fight films. "Happily," he said, "we have no negro question here."

GREAT INTEREST IN ESSANAY CONTEST.

Many Letters from Exhibitors Endorse the Plan—Hundreds of Answers Have Been Received.

The Essanay Company's "new name" contest, in which they offer a prize of $100 for a new name for "moving picture show," has aroused no little interest among the exhibitors and hundreds of answers are being received by the Essanay Contest Editor, who is confident that the contest will be a success. Letters to the Essanay Company from exhibitors all over the country voice a hearty endorsement of the Essanay's plan and suggest that the theatres should be permitted to advertise the terms of the contest to their patrons.

The Smith Brothers, Menomonie, Wis., write: "We understand you are running a contest for a new name for the picture houses, and we think it a fine plan.

"Is the contest open to picture patrons and would there be any objections if we advertised in the local papers to the effect: 'any patron of the Grand Theatre can enter the contest for the $100 word as given by the Essanay Film Mfg. Co. For further information call at the box office, etc.' In this way we would create an interest in the contest and it would make a fine ad. for us."

Another exhibitor in Jersey City, N. J., has offered $100 for a new name for moving picture show to the patrons of three Jersey City theatres. He proposes to advertise in all the local papers, to posterize his lobby, and to make announcements on his screen. He has requested the Essanay Company to be the judge of the contest.

Hundreds of names have been received by the Essanay Company up to date.

"We will certainly find a suitable name from the hundreds of really excellent suggestions we are receiving," said the Essanay Contest Editor. It is evident that the majority have caught the right idea and their contributions bear evidence of thoughtful study and earnest endeavor. Some of them define their words and show the reasons for their invention. One contributor submits the following: "Pantagraph: A definition name covering the musical and pictorial and dramatic features of the five-cent theatre. Pan, Greek God of pastoral music. Pan, Greek root word of pantomime, panorama, etc. Graph, already adopted by the film profession and understood by the public."

Here is another:

"Panoptican."

Etymologically correct. Of Greek origin, like the word "Hippodrome"—definition Century Dictionary and Cyclopedia.

"An exhibition room for novelties, etc."

There are many other words which are just as appropriate and which show just as much real study on the part of their contributors.

In the next issue of the Essanay Guide the Essanay Company will insert a poster for the lobbies of the theatres, with other press matter which should prove of interest to the patrons of the theatres. This Guide will reach the exhibitor about ten days before the close of the contest a long enough period to sustain the interest.

For those who are not informed of the terms of the contest here they are in brief:

One Hundred Dollars are offered for a new name for "moving picture show," "five-cent theatre," or "nickelodeon."

Write the name you choose on the back of envelope, enclose in the envelope your name and address and address it to the Essanay Contest Editor.

The contest is open to all and will close Sept. 1st, when the judges will examine the contributions and make their selections.

Contributions should be addressed to Contest Editor, Essanay Film Mfg. Co., 435 N. Clark street, Chicago.

PLAZA READY SEPTEMBER 1.

Springfield's New House Will Be a Model Theatre for Pictures and Vaudeville.

The Plaza, the newest motion picture theatre, to be erected in Springfield, Mass., is expected to be completed within the next few weeks. If all goes well the house will be dedicated to the public Sept. 1. The house is one of a chain owned and operated by the Goldstein Amusement Company, which has houses in Westfield, Holyoke, Exeter and other cities throughout New England.

The Plaza is in Taylor street, near Main street, right in the center of the city. The structure it occupies is practically being rebuilt. The main entrance will be about 20 feet wide, at one side being the box office and the other being the balcony entrance. Immediately inside, at either side of the grand entrance, are retiring rooms for the men and women. The seating capacity—boxes, orchestra and balcony—is 1,000 persons. The chairs are of solid metal framework, upholstered in green leather. The side walls as well as the metal ceiling will be painted and so finished as to blend with the green trimmings of the house. The operating room will be of the most improved style—being noiseless and fireproof in every respect. The room will also be large and airy, thus giving the operators plenty of room to get around in. The house will be thoroughly ventilated.

Only pictures of the latest subjects will be shown, while the vaudeville will be first class. The pictures will be changed every day and the vaudeville program twice a week.

NEW MANAGER FOR AIRDOME.

Wm. Drollinger, of Vincennes, Ind., who has been managing the Airdome for the past two months, has also been made manager of the new theatre.

Mr. Drollinger is well known in the theatrical profession and knows how to get prestige for a new house. While the new house will run a first-class stock, motion pictures will also be used between the acts.

NEW AIRDROME FOR PHOENIX.

John T. Vance, of Phoenix, Ariz., has rented two vacant lots in the heart of the city, and is now erecting an airdrome that will seat about 1,000 persons.

Mr. Vance came to Phoenix, from Mesa, where he has successfully carried on the same business. He expects to give his patrons the best there is in the picture line.

ANOTHER NEW ONE FOR BALTIMORE.

A new motion picture and vaudeville theatre will soon be erected at 1105 and 1107 North Broadway, Baltimore, Md. The plans of the architects have already been accepted by the owners who are greatly pleased with them.

The front of the building will be of ornamental metal, decorated with vari-colored electric lights, and the interior will have a large seating capacity. The structure will be one story and will cost about $8,000.

SOMETHING TO PRINT

Ask Your Local Editor to Give Space in His Paper to This Story.

"A great ado" is made over the prospective exhibition of moving pictures representing the fight between Jack Johnson and James Jeffries for the boxing championship of the world at Reno, Nevada, on the Fourth of July.

According to reports, the pictures of this fight are to be made the main pretext to injure an industry that promises far greater benefits than the fanatical agitators and jealous opponents who are instigating this clamor and persecution are capable of bringing about.

After nearly forty years, connection with the press, during which time I have had an abundance of proof that the great leaders in the newspaper field are sincere in their asservation that they offer "a fair field and no favor," I do not hesitate to ask for space enough to make a statement that will help fair-minded men to a rational conclusion as to the right of rabid reformers to cause trouble and immense loss without further warrant than bare assertion based on distorted and grossly exaggerated reports of evil-being, and further, to be wrought by the exhibition of a series of pictures that show what a man can do with the weapons nature gave him, instead of using the coward's knife or pistol.

During the past ten years the moving picture industry has developed from its crude experimental stage as a cheap amusement for the populace into a form of entertainment that appeals to the most intelligent classes of people in all civilized countries.

In its vast diversity of attractive features, the taste of a vast majority is fully satisfied and the bearer of the slender purse is able to enjoy himself on equal terms with the rich set.

Like every other great innovation that threatens to diminish the power and revenue of established institutions, the moving picture was bound to meet with violent opposition by jealous, greedy and fanatical opponents; but notwithstanding all the obstacles put in its way, the moving picture is firmly established as the dominant entertainment of the masses.

The cause for the rapid and tremendous expansion of the moving picture industry is obvious. A man can take his entire family to such an entertainment for the price of one seat in the gallery of a "regular" theatre. Thousands upon thousands of men who have spent their leisure hours and money in saloons and gambling houses, whom the reformers could not bring to a realization of their wrongdoing, now find it more profitable and agreeable to spend their spare time and money in the "picture houses" with their wives and children.

The usual program of pictures presented at all the moving picture theatres of the better class consists of three reels of one thousand feet of film each; one reel a "drama," the second a "scenic" or purely educational series of pictures, and the third a "comedy."

Whoever will take the trouble to investigate the moving picture theatre without prejudice, and talk with many of its most intelligent regular patrons, as I have done, for the purpose of ascertaining the truth as to its influence, will be greatly surprised at the indisputable good done by the viciously lampooned industry.

The dramatic part frequently is a religious subject, which is far more impressive and inspiring than the preponderance of sermons heard. Or it may be a historical production that gives a much better conception of a race of men, or of events and the customs of a period that is fixed in the mind by the forced cramming of any text. Or it may be scenes that arouse patriotism; a more chivalric spirit among men who have found no such emulation in their earlier environment. Other of these dramas depict social conditions, true to life, that impress one strongly that evildoing is an error that sooner or later leads to misery and a disastrous end, while good impulses and noble deeds bring happiness and other rewards.

The so-called "regular stage" at various times has claimed to exercise a salubrious moral influence; but in view of the long vogue of its devotion to adulterous filth, even its most partial supporters have not had temerity enough to continue that pretension.

More good, wholesome plays that teach the advantage of praiseworthy moral conduct have been shown on the traduced screen during the past two years than have been seen on the "regular" stage in half a century. Taking the "scenic," "industrial," and "educational" films as a group, there is no gainsaying the fact that they impart a general knowledge for a few nickels that would cost many dollars and many days of study to acquire, let alone such expenditure as would be entailed for personal observation. In this group we find marvels of nature, otherwise accessible only to the adventurer of unlimited means. We see achievements of men so stupendous that no description or ordinary picturing would avail to give even a faint conception therof. The famous show places of the world, that the very small minority alone have hitherto been privileged to admire, are brought before our eyes for a nickel or a dime, expanding our knowledge of the world and its strange inhabitants, both human and animal, as nothing else would enable us to grasp the reality of its vast and incomparably interesting diversities.

One incontestible advantage of the moving picture is that it is comprehensive to all races. No matter what the language of the spectator may be, if he possesses any intelligence whatever he is able to get a mental grasp of the subject portrayed.

But the moving picture means to millions of foreign-born citizens, who see scenes of their home land on the screen, can only be understood by those who speak many tongues; who hear parents tell their American-born children of the countries and the peoples from which they came; who see the deep emotion of the expatriated at sight of a familiar scene, of groups of men and women, among whom may be loved ones they will never see again.

Whoever will take the trouble, as I have, to listen to comments and to enter into conversation of enough patrons of a moving picture theatre to obtain a correct opinion, will retain no doubt as to the worth of these productions as a factor, a powerful factor, in improving the minds of men and women, of boys and girls, who have neither time and money to inform themselves otherwise; who find in the moving picture the only available models to fit them to become good citizens. Every such earnest student of social problems will agree that the benefit derived from the moving picture has been manifested beyond questioning.

Eminent educators and clergymen, in constantly increasing number, declare the moving picture to be a most valuable aid in their respective fields, and some of these are so convinced of its value that they strongly advocate the installation of projecting apparatus in the schools and churches, realizing that studies that can be entertainly illustrated are more fruitful in good results than instruction that is taken solely as a duty and is considered irksome and laborious.

To be cheeringly entertained is one of the absolute needs of the people. The "comedy" film provides that enjoyment and relaxation in proper measure at far less cost and risk than it is elsewhere obtainable.

In view of the indubitable aim of the leading producers of moving pictures to raise the standard of this industry with most commendable persistence—no less in the aspect of its art than in its utilitarian possibilities—and, moreover, in view of the undeniable fact that no class of business men have been so ready to conform to regulation by civic authorities, however unreasonable in some instances, it appears to many to be high time that the rightful claims of those engaged in this popular business be given as fair a hearing as the vilifications of its fanatical enemies.

ANOTHER "VITAGRAPH NIGHT"

Miss Turner Receives Ovation at Bay Ridge Airdome—Release Notes.

Another Vitagraph night at which the Vitagraph Girl appeared was given at the Bay Ridge, N. Y., Airdome, corner of 72d street and 3d avenue. As usual Miss Turner was given an overwhelming reception and the Vitagraph pictures were heartily appreciated and applauded. The illustrated song, "The Vitagraph Girl," was sung, encored and repeated. The attendance was a record breaker, thirteen hundred persons were comfortably accommodated in the grove and open air auditorium, which has an asbestos roof. A very delightful and novel feature of this place is the small tables which are located about the grove, at which are served ice cream and light refreshments within sight of the pictures.

The "Death of Michael Grady," announced for Aug. 9, is a live one, and will keep everybody in high dudgeon. It's the funniest thing that ever happened. Poor Mike has a pain and the neighbors try to bury him before he dies, but they can't keep a good man down, and he bobs up serenely at the last moment, frightening the mourners out of seven years' growth and the audience into uncontrollable fits of laughter. If you want to see a good ould Irish play on the order of "Hogan's Alley" and "Squatter's Sovereignty," the "Death of Michael Grady" will make them look like dead ones.

"The Three Cherry Pits" is an odd but not a very impressive name, perhaps; it is, however, a great picture, involving a great story of a Napoleonic veteran who has been struck by three cherry pits thrown by three young men, with whom he later fights duels, wounding them where the pits had struck him, teaching them a lesson they never forgot, very much to the satisfaction of the old soldier's honor and the young men's benefit.

"Mrs. Barrington" will follow "The Three Cherry Pits" on Friday, Aug. 12. This is a society drama wherein a suspicious "busybody" is foiled, by established facts, in furnishing gossips with a choice bit of scandal.

through the hot weather and will continue throughout the summer season. This is due to the perfect ventilating system installed, which includes large exhaust and intake fans as well as side wall oscillating fans. Mr. Sampson is confident that the service arranged for with the General Film Co. will carry his business to the highest notch yet reached.

E. J. Stanton, owner of the Vaudette theatre, Michigan City, Ind., played a joke on I. Van Ronkel and Joe Hopp as they passed through his home town, on the way to the F. S. A. convention at Detroit, the week before last. He boarded their train and presented each with an infant feeding bottle, provided with the necessary tube and nipple. Instead of lacteal juice, the bottles contained samples of fine old Amontillado; but finding that it was impossible to remove the corks and that they must extract the fluid in the infantile way, the film exchange men demurred, on the plea that it might "go to their heads." Manager Stanton, hearing this, left the train for a moment and returned with several "cold bottles" which he tendered them, expressing the hope that the contents would go to their "tummies." Mr. Stanton had not time to satisfy himself on the point however, as the train just then pulled out. However, "Van" and "Joe" arrived in Detroit "smiling."

A. R. Welch, one of the chief officials of the Welch Motor Co., of Pontiac, Mich., made a social call on F. C. Aiken last week. On his recent motor trip to Detroit, Mr. Aiken and his party called at the Welch factory at Pontiac, where they were delightfully entertained. It must be remembered too that "Fred" believes there is no other car on earth that can beat the Welch make.

C. Willard, owner and manager of the Boulevard theatre, 12th street and Ogden avenue, who has formerly been taking Independent service, arranged for licensed service, Monday, August 1st. He gives as a reason that, regardless of the quality of independent film, which is generally doubtful, the purchases of any independent exchange in Chicago are too small to prevent the repetition of a program. Experience has taught Mr. Willard that his patrons refuse to pay to see shows which they have already viewed before.

R. W. Powers, manager and owner of the Ashland theatre, 1556 West 12th street, has closed his house for extensive repairs, which will include the enlargement of the seating capacity. Mr. Powers is an enthusiast for straight moving pictures and will use no vaudeville in his new house when it opens.

Frank Thielen, the well-known owner of a circuit of ten theatres in Illinois, has transferred the lease of the Temple theatre, Elgin, Ills., to F. Vanston, who was formerly connected, in an executive capacity, with the Elgin Watch Co. Mr. Vanston has been thoroughly imbued by Mr. Thielen with the necessity of showing the best pictures, and he will make special trips to Chicago, four times weekly, for the selection of his program.

J. Finklestein, manager of the Star theatre, 1142 S. Halsted street, has reopened his theatre for the season. The Star has been closed for about a month on account of hot weather.

W. D. Maurice, owner and manager of the Family theatre, Lafayette, Ind., who has been giving a straight moving picture show for the last two months, has closed for the balance of the summer. He will open with vaudeville and licensed pictures August 29.

Pocket Bros., of the Electric theatre Watervliet, Mich., have been placed on the circuit which includes Benton Harbor, Berrien Springs and St. Joe, Mich. All films used by the three last mentioned towns will be used in rotation by the Electric.

Joseph Desberger, owner of the Star theatre, Paducah, Ky., and formerly a customer of the Western Film Exchange of St. Louis, is now booking his service with one of the leading licensed exchanges in Chicago.

Guy T. Alchon, of Osage, Ia., re-opened his theatre July 28 to good business. He uses moving pictures only, 9,000 feet weekly, with three changes. His house has been closed since July 1 on account of the hot weather.

C. H. Williams, of Seymour, Ind., has increased his film service from nine reels weekly to fifteen. Mr. Williams has taken vaudeville out of his program and finds the change beneficial to his business.

J. Natkin, manager of the Ideal theatre, 1228 Halsted street, city, is now using seven reels of first run weekly, 21 reels in all. This departure on the part of Mr. Natkin shows considerable enterprise and will, no doubt, prove most advantageous to his business as the locality in which his theatre is located is one of the best in Chicago.

Geo. W. Benson, manager of the Lyric theatre, Flora, Ind., has closed his theatre for extensive alterations. He expects to open in about three weeks, using moving pictures exclusively.

Wm. Neisen, who has been projecting an independent open-air exhibition in Gunther's Park, Chicago, for the past month, has ascertained that his patrons demand, and will have, licensed films. He recently closed a contract with the George K. Spoor Co. for the installation of a complete kinodrome service.

The Duluth, Minn., Orpheum, which has been in course of erection for the last six months and which is claimed to be one of the finest theatrical structures for the housing of high-class vaudeville in the country will open August 22. In accordance with the policy of the Orpheum Circuit, nothing but high-class licensed films will be used in this house. Arrangements have been made with the George K. Spoor Co. for Kinodrome service, which at present is used in the other sixteen houses on the Orpheum circuit.

The Grand theatre in Joliet has closed for the balance of the summer season and will open with vaudeville and licensed pictures Sept. 1.

Alamo Park, Cedar Rapids, Ia. (G. K. Barton, manager), one of the first parks in the United States to exhibit moving pictures during the summer months, has just reinstated the policy of featuring moving pictures, after an effort to eliminate them, as a matter of economy. The public want moving pictures of the licensed brand and must get them.

Many Victimized by Fake Reno Pictures.

The "independent" fake picture maker is getting in his best "dip" efforts on the pockets of promoters who are anxious to get films of the Reno contest at bargain prices. In Peoria, it seems, the would-be exhibitors were caught pretty badly, judging from the following excerpt from the Peoria "Herald" of July 18:

FIGHT PICTURES ARE FAKES—PROMOTERS MAKE DISCOVERY.

Peoria Men Who Buy Costly Films Discover That They Have Been Victimized.

A bunch of fight picture promoters in Peoria are calling on high heaven to witness their wrath and despair and, incidentally, the public has just escaped a severe bilking, for, yesterday, it was discovered that the films of the Jeffries-Johnson fight advertised to be shown in Peoria this week are clever fakes.

The promoters found it out themselves yesterday, and lost no time in announcing the fact. The films, it appears, were made from pictures of a pair of doubles who cleverly impersonated every blow struck in the ring at Reno in front of a moving picture camera in New York. Last night the promoters issued the following statement:

"To the Public: It has just come to our knowledge that the fight pictures advertised by us to be exhibited at the Second Street Turner Hall this week are not the actual photographs of the contest at Reno, July 4. It was discovered that the pictures—for which we paid a very large sum of money—are an excellent reproduction of the contest, but not actual photographs of the fighters themselves. Every blow struck during the fight is faithfully portrayed by the camera. But the photographs are not those of the fighters themselves, but 'doubles,' which, however, greatly resemble them.

"There is not the slightest disposition on the part of any one connected with this enterprise to deceive the public in any way. Hence the facts are frankly laid before you. The management is now making arrangements to secure pictures of both Johnson and Jeffries in training quarters. The public, therefore, will be shown actual photographs doing the various training 'stunts' preliminary to the fight itself.

"No one regrets more than the members of this company that announcement should have been made that the pictures were the actual ringside photographs of the fight. We were deceived more than any one else, and it was only by accident that the truth was discovered. We make haste to lay the facts before you, trusting that this explanation will be received with the credit due it."

Quite a number of other places have been heard from, though not in detail, showing that the rank impositions of a confidence game have been practiced in numerous instances. Does the "moving picture camera in New York," referred to in the foregoing article, belong to A. Kessel, Jr., of the Empire Film Company? Or is it right at our doors here, the property of A. W. McMillan?

IMPORTANCE OF THE ARC.

Bio Carbon People Establish Free Information Bureau.

Considering the important part that electrical apparatus plays in the production of motion pictures, it is remarkable that the development of the electrical equipment has by no means kept pace with the improvement in films, machines, etc. We are accustomed to thinking of electricity as the most progressive of all sciences and it has certainly performed wonders in the fields where it has been most thoroughly applied; but it is evident that heretofore the electrical interests have not regarded the motion picture field with the seriousness which it deserves.

The very main-spring of the motion picture is the electric arc. Without it, the present industry could not exist, yet for the past ten years this arc has been produced from the same carbons as are used for open arc street-lighting abroad. Little attention has been paid to the quality of the light, or its suitability for the purpose, beyond selecting carbons of a grade that would burn steadily and satisfactorily. As a matter of fact the ordinary open electric arc is a long way from being the ideal sort of light for projection purposes.

If you will note the unnatural manner in which streets are illuminated by the open arc lamp you will see our meaning. The ordinary open arc gives its light from a very small brilliant spot, making sharp edged shadows—exactly the opposite of natural lighting in which the shadows are merged gradually into each other. This is sometimes partly corrected by the use of opal globes—an expedient obviously impossible in picture projection.

The ideal light for picture projection is the calcium light, which gives a soft powerful light, making naturally graded shadows which cause the picture to "stand out" in a lifelike manner. Unfortunately, however, the calcium light is not strong enough to throw motion pictures the necessary distance, though it is frequently used in high-class motion picture houses for song and stereopticon slides on account of the advantages mentioned above.

It is evidently "up to" the electrical people to produce an electric arc of calcium quality, and in fact, the Charles L. Kiewert Co., of 41 Cortlandt street, New York, claim to have done so in their Bio Carbon. It is said that many of New York's best operators declare the Bio arc to be equal to calcium light in every respect, yet about a third stronger than the ordinary carbon will produce with the same current. If these claims are borne out in practice it will result in a great improvement in motion picture production.

Anything that will render the picture more lifelike will be of enormous benefit to the producer. The public has been educated to a high standard of excellence in motion picture plays, and is daily becoming more and more critical. Productions that were considered fine a few years ago would not pass muster anywhere today, and no doubt the pictures we are proud of today will a short time hence be regarded as "horrible examples." The improvement of electric carbons will surely play a large part in the future progress of the art. It is certain that no part of motion picture apparatus is less understood by the average operator and the subject is undoubtedly worthy of vastly more attention than it has received. In fact, the importance to the operator and manager of a thorough understanding of the theory of light production from the electric arc, cannot be underestimated. The Charles L. Kiewert Co., is taking a step in the right direction and one that will no doubt be attended by a general improvement in the production of motion pictures. They claim to be receiving a very gratifying support from the motion picture field and that much interest is being displayed in the Bio Carbon. They have inaugurated a free information department which will answer all questions, and give instructions regarding the correction of all troubles and difficulties pertaining to the production of motion pictures in so far as the light is concerned. This will assist in placing this subject upon a more scientific basis.

It is evident to any one who has studied motion picture production that the carbon will be responsible for a large portion of future development, and the progressive operator or manager, will, we are sure avail themselves of this service to the fullest extent.

GLEICHMAN IN TOWN.

Mr. and Mrs. Philip Gleichman, of Detroit, Mich., were at the Hotel Astor last week. Mr. Gleichman is a member of the National-Vaudette Film Exchange Co., of Detroit, and spent several days visiting the picture trade in New York.

SANTA ROSA HOUSE IMPROVED.

Many new improvements have taken place at the Nickelodeon, Santa Rosa, Cal., within the past week. The front of the house has been repainted, new sign boards have been placed in front of the house while the interior has been repainted and the floors oiled with a dustless substance. Soon as the new fireproof curtain comes and is placed, the house will be ready for the coming season. The same improvements have taken place at the Theatreette.

REPAIRING THE STANDARD.

The Standard theatre, Pekin, Ill., closed July 23, for repairs. The management will reopen the first week in September. Manager Dittmer is now in Chicago arranging for his vaudeville bookings for the season.

It is the intention of adding the best motion pictures in order to complete the desired program. Last year the house did an excellent business with prospects of a better one this season.

Synopsis of Production Issued by the Leading Song and Novelty Slide Makers.

SCOTT AND VAN ALTENA.

"I'LL BUILD A CASTLE IN LOVELAND."—Music by Arthur W. Lange; published by the Royal Music Publishing Co., New York. A very pretty ballad illustrated by very beautiful pictures. The novel and color effects are unique and characteristic of the Scott & Van Altena kind and seen in but few other slides. Who wouldn't build a castle in Loveland for a little girl like this one.

"YOU'RE MINE, ALL MINE."—Lyrics by Richard H. Buck; music by Theodore Morse; published by The Theodore Morse Publishing Co. A fine set of lyrics set to a catchy tune such as Theodore Morse usually writes. The slides are without doubt some of Scott & Van Altena's best. They contain beautiful moonlight effects, rare coloring, beautiful scenery and handsome models—all that could be desired in a set of slides. If the song lacked anything to make a success the slides themselves would certainly make it a hit.

"I'M BUGS ABOUT YOU."—Words by Victor Smalley and Jack Drislane; music by Geo. W. Meyer; published by Haviland Publishing Co. A novelty song, using a popular slang phrase as the title. A cute little girl and boy are the principals in the fine set of illustrations. Decidedly novel "bug effects" here and there make the set a very unique one. The slides ending each chorus are most cleverly carried out, and show what this firm can do in the novelty line.

"YUCATANA MAN."—By S. R. Henry, composer of "Peter Piper," "Down at the Huskin' Bee," "I've Got the Time, I've Got the Place," etc. Henry is well known among song writers, and his latest piece, "Yucatana," is bright, cheery and snappy. The slides are without doubt the best produced by Scott & Van Altena since their wonderful illustrations for the "Espanolia Prance." They are somewhat of the same nature—Southern scenes—and are full of the romance proverbial of warm climated countries. Besides the usual number of clever novelties the set contains many tropical scenes that will delight old and young alike.

"LUCY-ANNA-LOU."—Words by Edward Madden; music by Gus Edwards, the writers of "By the Light of the Silvery Moon." This, their latest song, has also to do with the moon, which fact may cause many to go "luny" over it as they did over the former. The slides are one fine set of moonlight scenes posed by two as graceful young persons as we have ever had the pleasure to look at. They seem to "get right in" to the thing and make the set full of human interest. The soft but rich coloring of the set, too, makes it a very attractive one.

"PLANNING."—Another of Gus Edwards' charming melodies set in waltz style to the lyrics of Will D. Cobb. Published by Gus Edwards. Here's one of those all-novelty sets that Scott & Van Altena know so well how to produce. Each slide a novelty, each novelty a winner. The models, too, are winners. When planning, plan "Planning" or your program will not be complete.

"IT'S THE SAME OLD ME."—Words by Arthur Gillespie; music by Terry Sherman; published by Chas. K. Harris, New York. It's awfully easy to do a thing when you know how. It seems to be the easiest thing in the world for Scott & Van Altena to illustrate love songs in spite of the fact that most lyrics in love songs are similar. Of all this class of illustrations made by this firm, no two are alike, except in quality. This latest one is very interesting and in a class all by itself.

"WHEN YOU DREAM OF THE GIRL YOU LOVE."—A pretty love ballad with words by Louis Klein; music by Leo Edwards; published by Victor Kremer Co. The story is of a young man desperately in love, who sees beautiful visions of his darling at night. These visions are beautifully portrayed in the illustrations with handsome models, good posing and vivid coloring. In true Scott & Van Altena style.

"HIDE FROM THE LIGHT OF THE MOON."—Words by Dave Clark; music by Sally Ginsberg; published by Ted Snyder Co. A song with a pretty tune and dealing with a pair of lovers, the park and the romantic moon. The illustrations show beautiful moonlight views, with models full of life and expression. Novel effects abound, and the set, on the whole, is an attractive one.

"SOME DAY WE'LL BE HAPPY."—Words by John Lyle; music by George E. Lyle; published by Consolidated Music Supply Co., Chicago. A sentimental ballad, with illustrations representing beautiful rural scenes. In the first half of the song the couple are school children, while in the second part they meet again after a number of years. The views in this set are exceptionally fine, with artistic coloring, beautiful floral and novel effects, and should appeal to those who admire the rustic in nature.

DE WITT C. WHEELER.

"WHEN THE SUMMER DAYS ARE GONE."—Words by Leo Curley; music by Geo. Christie; published by Witmark & Sons. While the summer days are not yet gone, this song may seem unseasonable, but it was so good the publishers couldn't wait, so published it ahead of time. The slides by Wheeler certainly do show some fine selections of scenery by him. It would seem that all the beauties of nature full bloom in the summertime are pent up in this little set. Seashore, mountains, rivers, lakes and woods are all here, beautifully colored and charming to look at.

"BAND, BAND, BAND."—Words by Seymour Brown; music by Nat D. Ayer; published by J. H. Remick & Co. As the name implies, this is a novelty song, written in a novel way to a novel idea, and shows progressive ideas in song writing. The slides are one of Wheeler's best comedy sets. He shows us a very beautiful girl leading a band around the streets. The costumes of the players are, of course, brilliant and dazzling. The coloring is exquisite, and there are plenty of novelties. But best of all is the model. It is worth getting the set to see her.

"I LOVE YOU, DEAR."—Words by Blair Leyton; composed and published by Sydney P. Harris, Detroit, N. Y. A beautiful set of lyrics in the true love strain, set to a fine melody. This is one of the love ballads that are so difficult to illustrate. But Wheeler makes the slides interesting no matter what the song is. This is an example.

"WHAT IS THE WORLD WITHOUT YOU."—Words and music by J. Hayden Clarendon; published by J. H. Remick & Co. A semi-high class love ballad, which is written in a popular vein and is sure to please any class of audience. The illustrations are a well thought out series of poses, which, executed with the well known skill of De Witt Wheeler form a very pleasing set of slides. Scenic effects, rich in nature, are also present in numbers.

"ONLY A CHAIN OF DAISIES."—Words by Fred. J. Barnes; music by Raymond White; published by Kominsky Music Co., Troy, N. Y. One of the annual daisy songs which always please. The lyrics are seasonable in nature and the music all that can be desired. Here's a set of slides in which some very cute children play an important part. Slides in which children appear always make a hit when the youngsters are posed correctly. The natural grace and charm of youth is proverbial. This set should be especially well adaptable to houses frequented largely by women and children.

"ON A SUNDAY EVENING IN THE SUMMERTIME."—By Edward O'Conner; published by Grinnel Bros., Detroit, Mich. As the title would imply, this is a typical summer love ballad, but treated in a novel manner, and is bound to be popular. There are very many different ways in which different people spend Sunday evenings. Wheeler has depicted in this set of slides the way a certain young couple spent theirs. Sometimes moonlight walks, boat rides, excursions, etc. All beautifully colored and all extremely interesting. Don't miss "On a Sunday Evening in the Summertime."

"LOVE SICK."—Words by Louis Weslyn; music by Herbert Spencer; published by M. Witmark & Sons. One of the mushy love ballads which, if good, are all to the good. This one fills the bill both in lyrics and melody. The slides do more than fill the bill. They fill the mind with wonder that it is possible to obtain such beautiful effects in a song slide. Perhaps never has Wheeler combined such grand scenery, such good looking models and such artistic coloring in one set. It is his best set. The novelties, of which there are many, are surprisingly clever and very taking.

"COME ALONG, MY MANDY."—American version by Nora Bayes and Jack Norworth, and sung by them all last winter at the Broadway Theatre in the "Jolly Bachelors." Published by I. B. Harms, New York. For slides with beautiful models this set can't be beat. The girl is pretty, the man handsome, and they pose in an excellently easy and graceful manner, so as to become at once favorites with audiences who view the slides.

"IN MY GARDEN."—Song by Clare Kummer; published by J. H. Remick & Co. Miss Kummer, the composer of "Dearie," can always be depended upon to produce a hit, and "In My Garden" is no exception. The slides are an excellent example of an artist's work, for only an artist could discover scenes such as reproduced so beautifully in this set. Not only are the scenes beautiful in themselves, but are colored so strikingly as to make them twice as impressive. A good song, with a splendid set of slides.

ALFRED L. SIMPSON.

"ONLY LOVE DREAMS."—By Edward Madden, author of "Starlight," etc; published by Shapiro. This is a beautiful love ballad with a melody fitting for such a tender theme. Simpson has done justice to this song with a wonderful set of slides remarkable for their beauty, clearness and natural coloring. The young lady who posed for this set of slides is a most beautiful model. The scenery is extremely artistic.

"ALL THAT I ASK OF YOU IS LOVE."—By Edgar Selden and Herbert H. Ingraham, authors of "Roses Bring Dreams of You," "You're the Ideal of My Dreams," "Let Me Waltz Home, Sweet Home, with You Just for Old Times Sake." Published by Shapiro. This is going to be the ballad hit of the year. After all, the heart interest is the thing, and no one can escape the touch of sentiment conveyed by this delightful song which Frank Morrell is singing at Hammerstein's Theatre this week. The slides Simpson has sent out for this song are beautiful. His models are well chosen and extremely good looking. Photography is good, and the coloring beyond criticism.

"HOOP LA (I'M HAVING THE TIME OF MY LIFE)."—By the writers of "Yip I Addy I Ay;" published by Shapiro. This is one of those catchy airs, together with clever humor, that is bound to appeal to every one. Simpson has made a very novel set of slides for this number, depicting the awkward country pumpkin in a series of funny poses that speak very well for his sense of humor. This set of slides will be a distinct addition to any programme.

"YOU AINT GOT THE GIRL TILL THE RING IS ON HER FINGER, AND EVEN THEN YOU NEVER CAN TELL."—By Al Bryan and Kendis and Paley. These clever writers are known the world over for the number of sensational hits they have produced. Simpson has illustrated the bashful youth and the worldly-wise father in bright snappy situations that are bound to create a laugh wherever shown; they are funny without being vulgar and yet artistic as are all of Simpson's slides, and illustrate the words of the story so well that the eye follows the action of the story without trouble and even a poor singer could not help but make good with these pictures. This catchy little number is published by Shapiro.

"ARRAH, COME IN OUT OF THE RAIN, BARNEY McSHANE."—By the author of "Colleen Bawn," "Tipperary," " Bit o' Blarney," etc.; published by J. Fred Helf. An Irish song full of humor and true Irish wit. This is a good set of pictures, Simpson has outdone himself in depicting the jolly Irish widow and her Barney. The photography is unusually excellent and the surroundings quite out of the ordinary. The coloring is very fine.

"BABY FACE."—By the author of "The Yankiana Rag," "Oh, You Kid," the ever-popular Melville J. Gideon; published by Chas. I. Davis, Cleveland. The announcement of a new song by this composer is always welcome news to his many admirers. Simpson has chosen an exquisitely beautiful girl as his model; posed in pictorial surroundings of great beauty. He predicts a big hit for this dainty little ballad.

LEVI CO.

"WHEN THE OLD OAKEN BUCKET WAS NEW."—Words by Geo. Moriarity; music by Joe Cooper, writers of the big song hit, "I Can't Miss That Ball Game." Published by Harry Cooper, of the Empire City Quartette. The melody is very sweet and worthy of a pronounced success. Slides in typical Levi style illustrate the lyrics in an interesting fashion.

"AS THE TRAIN ROLLED AWAY."—Words by Arthur A. Myers; music by Sidney T. Wilson. This song is above the average in many ways. Slides by Levi tell the story in a simple manner, and together with the novelties.

"VALLEY FLOWER."—Words and music by Kerry Mills; published by F. A. Mills, New York. An Indian song of merit, as are most of the songs exploited by these publishers. The posing is in typical Indian style and shows many new phases of Indian life. For those fond of Indian pictures this set should appeal.

"A LITTLE GAME OF LOVE."—Words by E. Soloman; music by B. Osias. This song when demonstrated in a large New York department store is said to have made a big hit. The slides are worthy of Levi.

"WHEN EVERYTHING WAS SUNSHINE."—Words and music by Will Wood. Published by Will Wood, New York. A song that conveys just what the title reads, a very bright and pleasing love song, and the slides are beautifully executed and finished with the skill of Levi.

"IN THE VALLEY OF OLD ST. JOE."—Words and music by Dennis Mackin; published by M. Witmark & Sons. This is one of those sentimental ballads for which M. Witmark & Sons are noted. Posing is good; slides are artistically colored.

"I WONDER IF YOU LOVE ME."—By Mabel Hite and Tom Kelly; published by M. Shapiro. Shapiro does not get out very many ballads, but when he does, it usually is a big hit. This song is Mabel Hite's big hit in her act, and that is sufficient in itself to show the value of the song.

"IN DEAR OLD TENNESSEE."—By Olive L. Fields; music by Harry S. Newman; published by M. Shapiro. It is the song for which Shapiro is said to have paid $5,000 to the Sunlight Publishing Co. Levi Company claims that this set of slides is the best ever put out by them.

WOMEN SEE FIGHT PICTURES

Colonial Theatre Well Represented by Fair Sex Who Enjoy Johnson-Jeffries Contest.

No doubt the many who have seen the pictures of the Johnson-Jeffries encounter, being exhibited at the Colonial theatre, on Broadway, New York City, have noticed the large number of ladies who accompany their husbands and escorts to see the pictures of the big battle.

In the audience last Saturday night, there were nearly as many ladies as men, and they seemed to enjoy the pictures. There was one young woman from California, who seemed especially interested in the battle and she talked freely with her husband and his friend on all points of the contest. When asked if ladies enjoyed seeing such pictures, she said: "Women from the west enjoy all kinds of athletics and they see no harm in a man understanding the art of self defense. So far as the pictures are concerned. I am under the impression some women enjoy them the same as men do."

Just before the pictures were put on a traveling man from the west came in and asked if ladies accompanied by their husbands were allowed to see the pictures. "Why?" asked one of the men in the box office. "Well, my wife wants to see them and if she is not admitted, I can't come." They were both admitted and said they enjoyed it immensely.

All during the exhibition Joe Humphries, the well known announcer explained the different points of the contest, which kept up the interest as well as the good humor. The house was quiet at all times and when the exhibition closed no one was heard to say they hadn't enjoyed the evening, and their morals were none the worse for the entertainment.

DOINGS AT LUBINVILLE

"Shorty at The Shore" a Seaside Comedy—Moving to New Studios.

The Lubin Manufacturing Company announces for release the third week in August "The District Attorney's Triumph" for the 15th, and "Shorty at the Shore" for the 18th. The latter is an Atlantic City comedy and brings forward a new comedian as companion to the Lubin Company's taller funny man. "The District Attorney's Triumph" is a strongly dramatic story of a girl who wants a romantic hero for a husband.

The new costume department of the Lubin Company is one of the busiest places on the new factory site. Two professional costumers have charge of a large staff of operators, who are kept busy turning out material for the pending pictures and overhauling the old costumes.

It is expected that the new Lubin factory will be occupied the coming week. When the employees leave the old Market street place in the evening they will take with them their personal belongings, and the next morning report at the new factory, where they will find a completely new equipment. In the matter of convenience, including light and ventilation, the factory building will be a model of its kind, while the system planned will permit the film to travel in a direct line from receiving to shipping department.

Some of the comedy stories planned for forthcoming Lubin production are unique in theme and treatment. "Lubin Comedy" has become a trade name in the picture business, standing for productions in which there is comedy action in every scene, combining the humor or idea with the humor of action..

Four policemen were required to hold back the boardwalk crowds while "Shorty at the Shore" was being made at Atlantic City, and the "gallery" at times numbered into the hundreds. The picture is an unusual one in many respects, showing in clear photography many of the most famous points and concluding with a chase in a wheeled chair that made even the director laugh. It is to be released Aug. 18.

CASUAL COMMENT

MAYOR GAYNOR of New York City was the victim of a deadly assault, on Tuesday, Aug. 9, made by a discharged city employee, just as he was about to embark on the steamship Kaiser Wilhelm der Grosse on a vacation tour.

At this writing the Mayor is steadily recovering from the first effects of the assault, and will recover unless other complications arise.

Let us hope that nothing will intervene to cut short the life and great public work of this distinguished citizen and servant of the people.

In common with all business men the picture men of New York have occasion to be thankful that Mayor Gaynor, in his official capacity, has had the backbone to stand between them and the clamor of crank reformers who would ruin a legitimate business if they could.

Mayor Gaynor's example of respect for the law and hatred for arbitrary action in disregard of the rights of others has already exerted a wide influence. It will be felt in every community of this great nation. All men, therefore, are concerned in his eventual recovery and restoration to health and duty.

Again, and always, let us hope.

WHY not picture revivals? This is a question that has been suggested to us by exhibitors who inquire, now and then, for some subject that has long since been retired and forgotten. In the past few years there have been a number of notable pictures immensely popular at the time of release, but which have been retired by the purely and automatically mechanical system now in vogue. Few if any of those pictures have gone the full rounds of the numerous picture theatres. Probably not fifty per cent. of the picture theatre patrons of the United States and Canada have seen them. If they could be revived and properly advertised there would undoubtedly be a strong demand for them.

The revival idea is as good for pictures as it is for legitimate dramatic productions. It has been observed by dramatic critics that the best offerings of the dramatic stage of recent date have been revivals of good old plays with competent casts of players. "Jim, the Penman" and "The Mikado" by all-star casts in New York theatres were eminently successful from both an artistic and a financial point of view. Undoubtedly there would be as great an interest among picture theatre patrons in revivals of some of the big feature pictures of other days.

A few suggestions from exhibitors and exchange men as to what pictures could, in their opinion be successfully revived. The manufacturers themselves may also have ideas on this point; working together a list of subjects could easily be arranged that would meet general approval.

Just to start the ball a rolling and to develop opinion on this subject The Film Index would be pleased to hear from exchange men and exhibitors. Send us a list of the pictures you would like to see again. Not necessarily all the good ones you can remember, but a few of the subjects that made the greatest impression upon your audiences and that are more than one year old.

SEVERAL amusement and picture journals recently published advertisements so worded as to lead their readers to believe that the advertisers had a splendid bargain in Johnson-Jeffries fight pictures for sale. Since then two of the journals in question have gone to some trouble to explain that the ads were deceptive and might have led their readers to believe the commodity offered was something different from what it really was. The Film Index refused the business in question because the copy was misleading, thus protecting its readers from what appeared to be an attempt to obtain money under false pretenses.

The Index has had occasion to refuse questionable advertising announcements before and will always endeavor to keep its advertising columns above suspicion. This policy is as necessary for the protection of reputable advertisers as for our readers. It will also relieve The Index from the necessity of "apologizing" and "explaining," to save its face.

THE Dramatic Mirror picture man grows peevish over our occasional reference to his antipathy for Jersey scenery, and accuses us of unduly "gnawing the Jersey bone." Singular, isn't it, that he should balk at taking a bit of the medicine he has ladled out so liberally and gratuitously to others.

However, now that he has discovered that there is merit in Jersey scenery, we feel sure that he will permanently drop his "Jersey josh."

MAKERS of motion pictures and others engaged in the business of distributing and exhibiting them, should not become nervous or panicky because now and then a detracting item is published in a newspaper. Neither should they fancy that the appearance of such items is due to a failure to patronize the advertising columns of the newspapers.

Every form of amusement popular with the public is a mark for crank reformers and the "funny men" on the papers. No man or measure may hope to escape the jibes of the paragrapher of the sensational yellow journals.

Sit tight and give the newspaper man all the good "dope" on pictures he will use. We print in another column a sample of what one picture man is doing. Try his method.

Many Picture Men in Town

Last week saw quite a gathering of exchange men in New York. Mandelbaum, of the Lake Shore, was over from Cleveland, Ohio; Louis Mitchell, of Little Rock, Ark., and Memphis, Tenn.; H. C. Stevens, of the Amalgamated, Portland, Ore.; and J. C. Woolf, of the Florence Exchange, Salt Lake City, all dropped in to transact a little business at headquarters.

Kane Out of Crawford Exchange

It is reported that Arthur Kane, for a long time a popular factor in the O. T. Crawford Film Exchange Co., of St. Louis, has severed all connection with that company and will probably become connected in some important capacity with the licensed exchange business.

Front Cover Scene

Our front cover illustration for this week is of the final tableau from the hand-colored aesthetic feature subject to be released by George Kleine on September 24th, 1910. This subject introduces one of the most remarkable child players ever presented to lovers of motion pictures, and every scene is a wonder from the standpoint of artistic value and photographic perfection. The descriptive bulletin on this subject is of interest.

Long Takes Vacation

Mr. Sam Long, of the Kalem Company, left New York on Saturday, August 6, for Denver, Colo., and Western points of interest with the intention of taking a month's vacation. He was accompanied by Mrs. Long.

Vitagraph's London Smith Here

Mr. George Smith, London representative of the Vitagraph Company, and brother of Mr. A. E. Smith of the Vitagraph Company, is in New York on business. He will remain in America about a month, making his headquarters at his brother's home in Brooklyn, N. Y.

F. W. Hall Builds New House

F. W. Hall, proprietor of the Aitkin electric theatre, Aitken, Minn., is branching out his show business, and has purchased a lot in the new town of Cuyuna, and is erecting a building, which is nearly completed. The front of the building will be similar to those of the theatres in the large cities, and will be an up-to-date theatre when completed. Mr. Hall expects to be ready to open up for the entertainment of the people at Cuyuna in the course of a few weeks.

Simpson Screen Agents

Alfred L. Simpson sends some interesting news regarding the progress of his exploitation of the Simpson Solar Screen. The screen, as we have told before in these columns, is an invention by Mr. Simpson by the use of which motion pictures and slides can be projected in a well-lighted auditorium. It has a metallic surface of aluminum and other substances that projects pictures with great brilliancy even in the light. It is the only screen that can be used in the light, and is fully protected by United States letters patent.

Contracts have been closed for State rights by the following agencies: Lake Shore Film & Supply Co., for Ohio; J. D. Wheelan Film Co., for Texas; Imported Film & Supply Co., Ltd., for Louisiana, and Miles Bros., Inc., for California. The Yale Film Co. are now negotiating for the state of Missouri.

MAYOR SEES MERIT IN FIGHT FILMS

"You Cannot 'Sissify' the American Boy," Says Mr. Gaynor

The following article appeared in the New York Herald of Friday, August 12, 1910. Its especial appropriateness at this time when so much is being said against the motion views of the Johnson-Jeffries contest, constrains The Film Index to print the Herald's reference to the forthcoming article in the Pictorial Review. The text of Mayor Gaynor's article will appear later.

MAYOR GAYNOR'S views on the subject, "The Municipality and the Child," are to be published in the September number of the "Pictorial Review," advance copies of which became available yesterday. The Mayor said:

"The American child may have too much speech in the family circle and too much theoretical education, but it has never had too much attention from the government, national, State or municipal.

"Take for instance, the problem of the child on the streets. We receive stacks of complaints. And I ask, Who has the greater right to the streets of New York, a child or an automobile? Within reason a child has a right to play in the streets. What is to be done with the active youngsters? Are they to be shut up in pens like cattle ready for shipment to the shambles?

"Most of the complaints that have come to my office about children have come from childless men and women. They have grown to hate themselves and everybody else, but even these ill-natured complaints must not be lightly dealt with. They are signboards pointing to the need of more room for children to grow up in.

"We have had too much educational refinement. By this I mean the refinement of the educational system itself. We want simpler courses of study. Most of the modern children are top-heavy. There should be no study after school hours for the smaller children and very little of it for the older ones.

"A lot of pressure has been brought to bear on me concerning the prize-fight pictures. You cannot 'sissify' the American boy. He will not permit it—and you do not want him to do it. I have never seen a prize fight, but I have no quarrel with the man who wants to see one. If pictures of a prize fight will teach a boy how to defend himself when called to do so, then, I say, let him see the fight pictures. The man who rails against prize fighting is the very man who would wallop his son well if the latter did not know how to defend himself when attacked by another boy. The man with red blood in his veins knows that blows such as boys will exchange do not kill, and the right blow, rightly landed, may make a man of a boy who has had too much book learning and too little physical development.

"I feel the same way on the subject of dancing. I even receive protests against dancing in the public schools, dancing in the city parks and the scheme of establishing municipal dance halls. Now, young people want to dance. It is a perfectly wholesome, natural desire. I wanted to dance when I was young. I did it, and it never hurt me. The boys and girls of to-day want to dance, and, mark my words, they will dance.

"Therefore, it becomes the duty of every city to see that its young people dance in the right place. Do not imply the worst motives to the boys and girls who frequent dance halls. Give them the right sort of dance halls, and just see them desert the wrong sort.

"And it is the same with moving pictures. I have been going to see moving pictures. They are all right. The harm lies in the way children go to see them. If they go with the wrong kind of company that is up to the mother. She ought to know who takes her children to moving picture shows, theatres, etc.

"We have twenty-seven playgrounds in the city of New York. They will do the children who can reach them a lot of good; but among New York's million or so more of children they are—well, just a flea bite.

"And so you see the duty of the municipality to children is a big problem. It is not going to be solved to-day nor to-morrow, but it will be solved in time. We must move slowly and not make grave mistakes. All progress in government, sociology, politics, philosophy and religion, to be good, must be the result of slow and careful growth. How slowly do our bodies grow! How slow is the growth of trees! How long was the Almighty brooding over His work!"

PICTURES AT MANASQUAN.

Old Parker Hall Changed to New Theatre; Under Management of Borden & Gibbeit.

The New Motion Picture Theatre, formerly Parker Hall, Manasquan, N. J., is doing an excellent business this summer. The house is under the management of William Borden and Daniel Gibbeit, two popular Manasquan boys, who are doing their best to give their patrons the best there is in the way of licensed films.

The machine used is one of standard make and latest models, thus giving the pictures great clearness. During the summer months straight pictures have been run; but as Manasquan is a thriving hustling town, and enjoys good clean entertainment it is the purpose of the managers to put on first class vaudeville in connection with the pictures.

Parker Hall, as it is known by, is an old Manasquan land-mark. For years it has been the only amusement place between Asbury Park and Freehold on the west and Toms River on the south. As a theatre for traveling companies the house has been a failure; but since motion pictures came in vogue, this old land-mark has become the delight of hundreds of pleasure loving people.

The new managers, Borden & Gibbeit, are two hustling young fellows, who take delight in catering to the public's amusement, and want to give the best entertainment they possibly can for the money. In using licensed pictures they get the best of all there is in the dramatic, comedy and educational films.

It is rumored that the house will be put in much better condition in the near future, which will greatly add to the business the managers are looking forward to.

WOULD SUPPRESS CRIME PICTURES.

Editor of The Film Index:

As I am a reader of The Film Index, I have noticed several items in regards to better film subjects, and as an exhibitor I wish to state my views on the matter.

The people want good subjects, of all kinds, and I think they should be something on the order of a standard novel or up-to-date story. They should be thrilling (some subjects) and exciting to make them interesting, but at the end let them finish so everything ends right.

Don't let them finish with the killing of some of the actors. In a well written novel or story, if you notice, it ends well, no matter how exciting the body of the story is.

I think the Board of Censorship should cancel all films that finish with a killing or a murder; it leaves a bad impression on the public. Hoping I may have some light on the subject, I remain,

Yours truly,

W. D. Rowell,

El Dorado, Kan.

A JOLLY KALEM COMEDY

It's "Straight" and Full of Humorous Situations

IT is pretty generally understood among picture players that everyone connected with the Kalem stock company works—they just get the fever. Recently a particularly ill-favored young dog annexed himself to the company and became so insistent in his determination to work in the pictures that no amount of abuse could keep him out, even when he was not wanted. He was just a mutt, and didn't seem to know when it was his cue to keep out.

Noting the mutt's liking for the business, a scenario was written for him, and he was trained for the part. If you doubt this, just wait till you get the Kalem subject—"Mamma's Birthday Present." Don't wait to get it, but order it in advance, because it's worth seeing.

In the first scene father comes out of his store to go home, when he is tackled by a man carrying a dog which he offers to sell. Father doesn't want the dog, but the fellow insists, until an idea occurs to father. It is his wife's birthday, and he will present her with this mutt as a joke. He buys it, and starts home. Attempting to board a trolley car, he is put off by the conductor, and is compelled to walk all the way. Reaching home at last, he sneaks the dog into the house and hides him in a cubby-hole under the stairway. Then father is called away on business, and leaves without saying anything about the mutt.

Company comes—two girls—the cook quits, and there is a lot of good comedy over the preparation of dinner, in which the biscuits and the steak are burned. Finally all retire, only to be aroused in the middle of the night by a noise that suggests burglars. After much fear and trembling, the three girls determine to capture the burglar, and down stairs they go.

Now, Mutt has been shut up under the stairway all this time, and is growing hungry. It is his clawing at the door of his cubby that has upset things. The girls locate the hiding place of the supposed burglar and barricade it while they telephone for the police.

Mutt is shown in the picture making desperate efforts to get out. In this scene he proves his ability as a picture actor beyond question.

The police arrive, accompanied by some of the neighbors, all armed to the teeth. The barricade is removed, the door opened, and out comes Mutt, to everyone's consternation.

Just at this point a messenger boy arrives with a message from father, explaining the dog's presence.

Throughout the picture the situations are well marked out and brought to a fitting climax, entitling the subject to a seat among the other straight comedy pictures of recent production.

USING NEWSPAPER SPACE

How the Best Sort of Publicity for Pictures May be Obtained

The Film Index has freqently reproduced examples of newspaper advertising used locally by managers of picture theatres. Much of it was commendable and worthy of emulation. The usual method is to run the stereotyped reading notice in the amusement column with, now and then, a display ad. for a feature program, all of which is good.

With the growing importance of pictures and the fact that they have become the chief form of amusement in the smaller towns the public demands and the newspapers require something of more general interest than the usual announcement of the subjects to be shown at the theatres from day to day.

An example of the broader and better use of available newspaper space is furnished us by Ben L. Morris, secretary of the Spagg Amusement Co., which operates picture houses in Bellaire, Ohio, and Wheeling, W. Va. The Index gives space to Mr. Morris' contribution that its readers may take pattern from it and, if possible, follow the good example:

LONG SHOWS.

Moving Picture Shows Here Gradually Increase in Length.

Views of Jeffries-Johnson Fight to be Released.

Interesting Gossip of Interest to Moving Picture Patrons.

The big show appears to have caught on with the many Wheeling patrons of the "flickering reflections." Starting off with the two reel shows, came the "one solid hour's entertainment for a nickel." The two-hour show was next, and now there is a two-and-a-half hour show on the boards at one of the local playhouses. At this rate it will soon be a case of the popular song, "come after breakfast, bring lunch along." But, however, the all evening show is the thing that is going a long ways towards popularizing the pictures. They make it worth while for people to dress and go out for the evening to see a show. Wheeling has both classes, and the regular nickelodeons that pick up the transient trade are still gathering in the small coins.

Regardless of the many protests, the pictures of the recent Jeffries-Johnson prize fight are to be shown. They will be shown simultaneously in three theatres in New York, one in Boston, one in Philadelphia and two in Chicago. Following that they will go into the smaller towns. There will be six reels of them, making a two-hour show. They show the training camps and many incidents leading up to the fight, and the full fifteen rounds of the contest. They are said to be the best fight pictures from a mechanical standpoint ever put on the market. The company controlling them will not permit them shown in the ordinary picture show houses with other pictures.

The popular Vitagraph Company has made a three-reel picture of "Uncle Tom's Cabin," to be one of the most elaborate pictures ever put on the market. They will be released July 27, 29 and 30th. The company has been over six months making this set of pictures, which are expected to be classics of their kind.

Buffalo Bill and Pawnee Bill, who are making their farewell tour, are to take their big company to the latter's Western ranch at the close of the show season and go into the business of making moving pictures.

Travelogue pictures are popular with local audiences and the manager of one of the local theatres states he has constant inquiries for this class of picture—those showing foreign countries and unusual scenes. "Roosevelt Reviewing the French Troops" was a very good picture, giving fine views of the ex-President. During the past week Wheeling people have taken in "An Excursion to Wales," "A Vacation in Havana," "Motored Among the Cliffs and Gorges of France," watched the "Beigian Army Riders," take "A Trip to Brazil," seen "The Rhine from Cologne to Bingen," "Tropical Java of the South Seas," been "In the Realm of the Czar" and have seen other interesting sections of the world which the ordinary run of people do not get to see in the real.

Fred Walton, known as the emperor of silent comedy, has joined the Selig Company staff, and is writing a series of pictures for them. The first was "The Hallroom Boys," the two ribbon counter clerks who are so well known to the readers of the News through the comic supplement. Selig also has the well known Milton and Dollie Nobles, familiar to every old theatregoer, and they have acted their famous play, "The Phoenix," before the Selig cameras, and it will soon be seen here.

The South Side Theatre on Chapline street was opened the past week, making another to the big list of theatres showing pictures now operating in Wheeling. They are using the independent pictures, making the fifth house in Wheeling using that class of goods.

"Picture Music" is a new term for piano playing that has become popular with the advent of the moving pictures. Very few ordinary piano players can play to the pictures, most of them bang away at most anything, a ragtime piece doing for a funeral or death on the curtain, and a selection from a popular opera for an Irish jig.

The Independent forces are now exceeding the Association in the number of pictures put out each week. The Association releases twenty-three pictures every week, while the Independents have been making twenty-six to twenty-eight a week.

What is claimed to be the most elaborate religious picture since the first Passion Play will be "The Lord's Prayer," to be released by the Gaumont Company next month.

It is estimated that the pictures of the big prize fight cost the promoters $200,000.

The Essanay Company of Chicago is offering $100 for the best word name to substitute for "moving picture theatre."

The foregoing filled a column in a Bellaire daily. Mr. Morris contributes this matter once every week and says that it is "news matter that most any paper in the country would be glad to run free of charge."

NEW $10,000 HOUSE FOR ST. PAUL.

The Penny Parlor at 14 and 16 East Seventh street, St. Paul, Minn., has been closed and work has begun to remodel the building for a first class motion picture theatre. The improvement will cost in the neighborhood of $10,000. The house will be operated by a newly formed corporation, known as the Twin City Amusement company.

The house, which will be ready by September 1, will be finished with decorations of the Moorish style. A large pipe organ will be installed in the orchestra pit. Only first class pictures will be used.

SOCIETY SEES FIGHT PICTURES.

The pictures of the Jeffries-Johnson contest were shown at a dinner party given by Mr. and Mrs. Joseph E. Widener, of Philadelphia, at their summer home in Newport, R. I., August 7. The pictures were greatly enjoyed by the society folks, who saw nothing out of the way, in them.

In spite of the big minstrel show, which proved a hit, the pictures were the features of the evening.

BEAUTIFUL LOVE COMEDY

Pathe American Players Make Happy Version of the Lover's Well

PATHE'S American players have fairly excelled their previous satisfactory efforts in a delightful love comedy drama, due for early release, entitled "The Lover's Well." The story is based on the lines in the "Dream Book," which instruct the girl in search of her true love to look for him in a well at midnight on Halloween, and another warning her to beware of a false maid who will cause trouble.

The scenes of this picture are especially well chosen and delightfully picturesque. There are several dramatic moments that are given their proper value. The usual Pathe photographic quality completes a picture that reflects credit upon the makers.

Briefly, the story is of a pretty country girl, with a young soldier for a lover. Following the directions in the "Dream Book," the girl looks into the well to see her true love. The lover happens around in time to discover the girl's plan, and manages to get to the well and look in, too. As the night is rather dark, the girl does not discover her lover till the moon, shining through a rift in the clouds, reveals him as he leans over the wall about the well. There is a pretty little love scene here that is particularly well done.

After this the soldier boy rises in rank and forgets his sweetheart in the charms of another girl. Both girls chance to meet the soldier as he comes from his post, and he coldly turns down his first love—the dainty country girl—for his latest enamorata.

How he is eventually turned down and fooled by the "false maid," for whom he narrowly escapes wrecking his career, and is finally brought to his senses by a recollection of his meeting with his first sweetheart at the well is successively pictured concluding with a double exposure which shows that first meeting at the old well, as it comes to the mind of the conscience-stricken soldier.

With this memory haunting him the lover wanders off towards the old well and finds his little country girl is on a similar quest. We will not attempt to describe the touching final scene —something must be left to create a desire to see this picture, and we believe you will agree that it is as convincing a bit of picture dramatics as you have witnessed in many a day. It is one of those pleasantly haunting scenes that you will not quickly forget.

"If a maid would her future husband see
On Hallowe'en night, 'tween twelve and three,
She should go alone, if the moon is bright;
And look down in the well, on Condon's Height."

"The troth once plighted,
Let the lovers beware,
Lest a false-hearted maiden
Bring sorrow and care."

SCENES FROM PATHE'S AMERICAN SUBJECT: "THE LOVER'S WELL."

FIGHT PICTURES WELL RECEIVED.

People of Stamford, Conn., Suffer No Bad Effect from Pictures—Many Ladies Present.

The exhibition of fight pictures in the small towns, has done anything but cause race riots. The newspapers have watched with much interest the way these pictures have been received and had there been any demonstration on the part of either whites or blacks, the news would have been spread far and wide.

In those towns where the pictures have been shown, both the press and the audience have spoken most favorable regarding the films. The pictures have not only attracted a large male audience, but many women have taken the opportunity to see just what the pictures were like. So far, from all accounts, the women who saw these pictures were by no means horrified by the brutality that is alleged to be displayed.

To show how the press and public are receiving the fight films in the smaller cities, the Stamford Advocate gives the following account of the exhibition in Stamford, Conn.:

A good sized audience attended the exhibition of the Jeffries-Johnson fight pictures last night, in the Alhambra theatre, and, like the audience in the afternoon, was orderly. There was not even a sign of the race feeling. At the evening performance, white men and colored men sat across the aisle from each other and chatted about the fight, but not one word was said that might lead to hard feeling. The audience was a mixed crowd, and comprised many of Stamford's sporting enthusiasts.

The police protection was very good. Chief Brennan had Officers Thewlis, Kenefic and O'Brien, Bicycle Officer Kurth and Detective Sergeant Heffernan at different places in the audience, but their services were unnecessary. Neither Jeffries nor Johnson received applause. During the entire first reel, showing Jeffries's training quarters and the ex-champion doing his stunts, there was not a hand clap. Johnson's training quarters were not shown. During the reel showing Reno's crowded streets, the audience applauded for the first time, and this was for Bob Fitzsimmons, who could be seen in an automobile, talking and laughing with a crowd of sports. Fitzsimmons got another hand when the reel showing the introduction of many of the pugilistic stars at the ringside was shown. Tex Rickard also received a little Stamford applause.

The audience laughed but twice. Once when the pictures showed John L. Sullivan giving a bag-punching exhibition (John L. managed to hit the bag about three times out of ten), and again during the twelfth round of the fight, when the announcer was telling about the kidding match between Johnson and Corbett. Corbett said, "Get him now, Jim." Jeffries at this time was fast weakening, and was entirely on the defensive. They had been fighting for over an hour in the hot sun, on a cloudless day. All Johnson said was: "It looks like rain, Corbett," and his face wore a golden smile.

The audience was by no means confined to the male sex. Women were there and in goodly numbers, and seemed to enjoy the fight as well as their escorts.

"Isn't he the rough thing!" remarked one member of the fair sex, as Johnson knocked Jeff through the ropes.

A little newsboy waiting outside asked Dr. T. J. Biggs, who attended with a party of friends, if he had lost any money on the result.

Among the prominent men present were Councilmen Austin and Smith, Deputy Judge Stanley T. Jennings, Frederick Berg and Chief Brennan.

A number in the audience came in automobiles and carriages, which formed quite a line in front of the theatre.

PICTURE WAR ON MOSQUITOES.

Dr. L. Marshall Price, secretary of the State Board of Health, of Baltimore, Md., is considering the advisability of conducting an educational campaign against flies and mosquitoes. His plans for the warfare include motion picture films, which he proposes to distribute among the several motion picture theatres of the state with the request that they be displayed on screens. There will be no charge for the films.

"These views could be made especially to appeal to children," said Dr. Price recently, "and once you get the children earnestly enlisted in your behalf you have accomplished a great deal. I would suggest that the children be organized through the schools to help the health authorities in having unclean places cleaned and thus destroy the breeding places of disease.

NEW ORDINANCES FOR RICHMOND.

An ordinance requiring motion picture theatres to open not earlier than 9 o'clock in the morning and close not later than 11 o'clock at night was recommended to the Council of Richmond, Va., July 29. The original measure provided that the hour of closing should be 10.30 o'clock, but Councilmen Burke and Fuller took the position that this was too early. The ordinance also provides that before an operator shall run a motion picture machine he must be examined by the City Electrician.

TRIBULATIONS OF A SCENARIO WRITER

By WILLIAM H. KITCHELL

THERE is nothing new under the stars, even from the point of view of a scenario manufacturer. Everything in history, from Ananias to Julius Caesar and the rest of the biblical characters, down to hobble skirts, has been "done" in pictures. Even Job and his tribulations has been brought to life to slow music, played by a musical "picshow" artist with a predilliction for cigarettes.

Unfortunately, Job never tried scenario writing. If he had his finish would have been sooner and more interesting. Imagine Job and his boils hammering a typewriter under a tin roof on a hot day in June, laboriously concocting an ice-cold seashore love drama. And imagine him in cool September, reading the note from the picture manufacturer declining the aforementioned story. "Your Ms., 'Jiggins at Coney Island,' received June 25. We like it, but owing to the fact that the story is now unseasonable, and that we have under production a story similar in topic to the enclosed, we are compelled to return it." If Job's spotless reputation for patience wouldn't have caved in after that, he would be more than human.

"$10.00 to $100.00 for Moving Picture Plays." So advertise the film people. Ah, those hundred-dollar checks! How enervating one would be to a writer, if it were framed on a gilt mat and hung over the seltzer bottle to gaze at as a curiosity! Yet, the manufacturers may not be so much at fault. Probably the "fraud-detectors" used to stamp their checks stop work at "Not Above $50." Besides, the picture business is not what it was fifty years ago, and the manufacturers need the money.

And the equivalent they expect for the cash! In a magazine story, a writer may spill 3,500 words in a chat between two irresponsible young persons who are about to fall overboard into the slushy sea of love, and get away with the goods! "I've got the time, I've got the place, but it's gosh-darned hard to find the girl," runs a topical song. Worked up as a magazine narrative, this plot complication would be good for twelve numbers of 4,000 words each, at a cent a word, or more, and be published afterward in book form at a big royalty to the author.

Made over into picture stuff, the same plot would require two complete autobiographies, a description of how the old man broke his right ankle bouncing the bridegroom out of the house the morning after the wedding, and a tableau showing the inevitable baby that followed the matrimonial venture. All this written in fifteen scenes for $25.00, and worked into 750 feet of film! Then, when all details are supplied, the MS. comes back torn and thumb-tracked, shy a two-cent stamp which the office boy of the "Tear-'em-up Film Company" has carefully washed from the return envelope, with a note tucked inside, saying: "This story is lacking in incident"! No wonder the insane asylums are overrun with demoralized scenario writers—and editors—as a result of advertising for picture plays in the trade journals of happy story writers.

Then, why write scenarios? Why did Lot's wife look back at the pillar of salt, or words to that effect? Why did Jim Jeffries swing his feet over the ropes at Reno to get what was naturally coming to him by way of the African? Jim didn't care for the money. He merely wanted to see how he looked in the moving pictures. In this peculiar failing of human nature lies the sole reason for the existence of a scenario manufacturer.

Ah, it is glorious to be a picture playwright! To sit next a garlic-eating son of Naples in an open-air theatre, with the smoke of a cigar and a flock of tame mosquitoes above one's head, and a first-run reproduction of one's own narrative dancing to life above the footlights. There is no cold print to freeze a mistake of syntax or a weak paragraph into an eternal icicle of memory. The dramatic director has corrected all errors of plot and judgment, and the originator sees his story rise—rise—until, "Why the devil don't you frame-down that dod-gasted string of junk?" yells the refined operator to his assistant at the wheel, and the story drops to earth.

The plot unfolds, and one by one the characters, as imagined by the author and the picture people, light upon the screen. The film happens to have gone through the studio with "bells on," so to speak; and the reel runs smoothly, with clear pictures well developed. Only six of the author's cherished "features" have been omitted thus far, and although the heroine eludes the villain in an aeroplane instead of a buggy, as originally intended, the change looks very well in the limelight. All is well. Suddenly a blur comes over the writer's eyes as he looks at the screen, and hears the hand-clapping of the assembled multitude. "Let me write the nation's plays, and I won't care a picayune who stops the fight pictures," he murmurs rapturously. Then he wakes, to find that the sprocket wheel of the machine has collided with the sparking plug, and that the audience has only been applauding, in a rude, sarcastic manner, the mechanical ingenuity of the operator.

At last the reel jiggles on, and the crowd settles into rapt attention. Hist! the climax approaches. This is where Annie, the Girl from Bingo Gulch, should decline, in a few well-chosen gestures, the hand of Chestnut Spriggins, the young owner of the Bonanza mine in Death Valley. The author gazes mistily. What in Weehawken! She has accepted—and without an apology for her lapse of the proprieties! Another story ruined, and nothing to show for it but a bank check.

The hum of voices reaches the ear of the scenario writer as he stumbles into the night. "I like them cowboy chases best." "A few more plays like that and I'll take a hand in closing the picture shows myself." "I'll bet the fellow as wrote that sketch had been on a tear for a week." It is such talk as this that makes a reputation. "Let me write the plays of a nation, and"—

But there are compensations. There are film manufacturers and film manufacturers. The real kind predominate. For one story spoiled in the taking there are a dozen hammered into artistic shape by a friendly editor and stage director, who have the author beaten forty ways in knowledge of plot construction and "picture values." The one production department furnishing the excuse for the present article is located in Mesopotamia, and its scenario editor was hung last week for robbing a beggar of a crust of bread. As for the rest, they are human, like the scenario writer, and better mannered as a class. There is one—but this is not a sketch of personalities.

At any rate, there is one position in the world which no writer of scenarios will envy. It is that of the unfortunate editor who is compelled to read his story plays.

FROM TYRANNY TO LIBERTY

An Edison Picture Drama With Pilar-Morin in the Leading Part

MLLE. PILAR-MORIN appears in a favorite role in a forthcoming Edison picture entitled "From Tyranny to Liberty." As the wife of the editor of a Nihilist newspaper published in St. Petersburgh, she endures the brutality of the Russian police to protect her husband from arrest. The part is a trying one and one that only an artiste of Pilar-Morin's ability would care to undertake.

Her efforts to save her husband are successful through the singular resemblance to him of the printer who betrayed the whereabouts of the newspaper office to the police and who is caught in his own trap and taken for punishment by the police in belief that they have the husband.

Having escaped arrest the editor with his wife and daughter escape to America—freedom's land, and are seen gazing upon the Statue of Liberty from the deck of a steamship as they near the end of their flight from tyranny.

The story is lucidly told by the picture which is replete with intensely dramatic situations.

THE MAN WHO LEARNED.

In a previous issue of The Film Index extended reference was made to a picture on the question of milk supply made by the Edison Manufacturing Company. That picture is soon to be released under the title of "The Man Who Learned." Those who have seen this picture agree that it will, as an educational subject, become as valuable as the already famous "Fly Pest" picture.

The subject was made at the instigation of the New York Milk Supply Committee and with that committee's co-operation an intimate insight of the bad and good methods of handling milk are pictured.

To give the subject a sentimental interest and to bring the lesson home to the people in a manner which will not be quickly forgotten, there is a story of a baby—the grandson of the old fashioned farmer who will not learn new methods—who nearly dies from drinking milk from its grandfather's dairy. When "Grandpa" sees the effect of the impure milk and discovers that it came from his dairy he goes home and transforms things. After this there is a reconciliation between the old fellow and his son, who make up their differences caused by the old ways of doing things against which the son rebelled.

This is a subject that is bound to attract widespread interest.

PICTURES HOLD IN NEW BEDFORD.

Motion pictures at New Bedford, Mass., are more than holding their own these hot summer days. At Vien's theatre, on Main street, the house is kept crowded at every performance. Such licensed films as "The Cowboy's Sweetheart," "The Call to Arms," "A Mad Dog Scare" and other pictures bring rounds of applause every time they are thrown on the screen. While the vaudeville is the best that is on the market, there is no doubt that the pictures are what attract the most attention, especially the children. Educational pictures are being highly appreciated.

FREEPORT WILL HAVE NEW HOUSE.

Messrs. Foster & Bender, two well known picture men of Freeport, Ill., are planning to erect a motion picture and vaudeville theatre in that city. The new playhouse will be located at 75 Stephenson street. The managers claim when the house is completed, it will be most modern in every way. The ventilating apparatus will keep the house filled with pure and wholesome air at all times. The pictures will be the latest licensed films. Music will be furnished by a three-piece orchestra and the latest illustrated songs will be sung by a first class artist.

A SLIDE INNOVATION.

A novel idea in the slide game is inaugurated this week by the Levi Company. By special arrangement with the American Press Association the Levi Company will make slides for and distribute illustrations of all the great news events that are headliners in the newspapers. The slides will in each case be made at the time of the event from photographs taken by the Press Association. They will be released by Levi immediately after.

Already illustrations for "The Capture of Dr. Crippen by Wireless," "The Attempted Assassination of Mayor Gaynor," and "The Johnson-Jeffries Fight" are on the market.

CHICAGO LETTER

By James S. McQuade

Chicago was resplendent in colors last week, and all are blended to adorn the insignia of Knights Templar from every State in the Union, from Canada and from lands beyond the sea. State Street has been so richly and ornately decorated that it has been rechristened "Templar Way," while Michigan and Wabash avenues are only slightly in the rear, from the point of attractive and costly display. Over $250,000 have been spent on this mark of respect and welcome to the Templar hosts, whose ranks will marshal at least 65,000 men.

This is the third triennial Knights Templar conclave held in Chicago, and the thirty-first which has assembled in this country. The first grand encampment, convened in Chicago, took place in September, 1859, and the second in August, 1880, just thirty years ago, when there were only three commanderies in Chicago and fifty-one in the State of Illinois, with a total membership of 3,900.

The most spectacular feature of the present encampment was the grand parade of Tuesday, August 9, in which from 65,000 to 75,000 Knights marched in full regalia to the strains furnished by 100 bands of picked musicians. The long line of march was thronged by hundreds of thousands of sightseers, at least 500,000 of these being visitors. This parade afforded a pageant such as has never before been witnessed in the history of Knight Templarism in this or any other country, both from the point of numbers of commanderies participating and of decorative splendor along the marching line. Imposing and architecturally and symbolically beautiful arches were passed under at various points by the marching Knights, the scenes being picturesque to the point of mediaevalism, and the color effects bewildering and fascinating.

Competitive drills will be held at the Cubs baseball park, Wednesday and Thursday, when crack commanderies will vie for supremacy and for rich and costly trophies.

Readers may wonder what all this has to do with films and the film industry, but they will be pleased to learn that all the pomp and magnificence of the parade and all the clever and spectacular evolutions of the drills will be brought to them at their homes throughout the world by means of moving pictures. William N. Selig purchased the sole rights to take and make these pictures, and five expert camera men from the Selig forces will make it a point to chronicle in film every important spectacular feature of the present encampment. This Selig special release bids fair to surpass in interest and pageantry any film that has yet borne the diamond trade-mark, and Masons everywhere will doubtless hail its appearance with pleasure and enthusiasm.

Decision on Jeffries-Johnson Pictures Postponed.

The hearing of the mandamus suit brought by Aaron J. Jones and George K. Spoor against the city of Chicago, in the matter of the Jeffries-Johnson pictures, was postponed until Monday, August 8. On that date the complainants and their counsel appeared before Judge Bretano in the Superior Court, Corporation Counsel Brundage representing the city. After argument by both sides, the court adjourned temporarily for the purpose of seeing the films run off, this being done in the private projecting room of the Selig Polyscope Co. on Randolph Street.

After the exhibition the court held a short session, and it was decided to withhold the rendering of a decision until Wednesday, August 10.

Detroit Grants Permit.

Some weeks ago it was heralded by the press throughout the country that the Detroit authorities had refused to grant a permit for the exhibition of the Jeffries-Johnson pictures in that city. Contrary to the dispatches, Mayor Breitmeyer and Chief of Police Croall issued a permit for the presentation of the pictures licensed by the Motion Pictures Patent Co. The permit was granted on Wednesday, August 3, and the pictures have been on exhibition at the Avenue Theatre, that city, since Saturday, August 6, when they will be given an eight-day run.

As has been the case in every city where these pictures have been exhibited, the crowds in attendance at the Avenue Theatre have been orderly and no disturbance has been made. In fact, everyone who has visited them is astonished at the fuss made at the outset by hysterical reformers.

The Detroit rights were purchased by Wesch & Blankmeyer, of that city, and the rights for the State of Michigan are owned by the Michigan Fight Pictures Company, with offices at 71 Griswold Street, Detroit.

The Moving Picture in Surgery.

The value of the moving picture in educational work is becoming more and more apparent to progressive instructors, and its aid has already become indispensable to students in surgery and experimental science. Magazine and special writers, it will have been observed by the careful reader, are devoting considerable space nowadays to this mission of the moving picture and to the boon conferred on students who have not the means nor the opportunity to attend the famous seats of learning.

The student in surgery of moderate means cannot hope to gain a thorough knowledge and practice in clinics until he has graduated from the smaller college and laid by a sufficient sum during his early years of practice that will enable him to continue his studies in the larger medical colleges at home or abroad. But with the aid of the moving picture, and with competent professors in the small college, he can now take a course that will embrace all the operations, ordinary or difficult, performed by the most noted surgeons in the largest colleges.

The following article by Edwin Tarrisse, which appeared in the magazine section of the Sunday "Tribune," of Chicago, August 7, will be read with great interest by all who have watched the progress of the moving picture in late years, and who have been watching with eager eyes its triumphant march into new fields for the uplift and benefit of the human race:

These seems to be little doubt that the moving picture machine is destined to become a recognized factor in the course of surgical instruction.

Among others who will benefit by its introduction may also be reckoned those persons—and there are many such nowadays—who, although not actually following the profession of medicine or surgery, interest themselves in assisting the suffering, as they will thus acquire a knowledge of certain facts of immeasurable importance.

It is probable that few persons, if any, can have foreseen in the invention of the moving picture machine that which would to a great extent revolutionize the world of teaching; and yet this is precisely what the instrument promises to do, though originally offered to the public only as a toy, an amusement for an idle hour, in the form of a superior magic lantern combining motion with pictorial effect.

The moving picture machine has already brought scenes of national and stirring interest before spectators prevented from seeing the actual occurrences, and with a promptitude that made the representation more valuable. Now it appears about to enter on a path of usefulness the extent and value of which it is impossible to estimate; for it has been recognized as an unrivaled means of demonstration for the use of teachers, and in cases where the eye and hand require to be educated and trained, there is unmistakable evidence that before long its application will be widely established.

Everyone will understand the enormous advantage to those engaged in imparting instruction of a demonstrator which can be called upon to repeat the examples required to explain a lesson whenever and as often as may be required, and can, moreover, be depended upon to reproduce the examples in precisely the same way. The latter attribute makes the moving picture machine extremely useful, especially in cases where delicate and exact manipulation is required, and gives the instrument a great advantage over a mere flesh and blood performer, whose fatigue, state of health, etc., might cause variations.

The use of the moving picture machine, by which moving reflections of the subject under consideration will be distinctly seen by all, also enables a much larger number of students to assist at an illustrated lecture, and to derive benefit from the demonstration. In addition, the lecturer, whether he be the author of the examples or not, might be expected to give a far more clear and lucid interpretation of his subject, if freed from the embarrassment of simultaneous performance.

To students unable to attend the lectures of the cleverest and ablest professors, as well as those whom fate compels to reside at some distance from the centers of education, the moving picture machine in its new function will come as an incalculable boon, for it will be possible by its aid to repeat the illustrative action of the greatest authority on any given subject, and by means of an accompanying lecture to repeat the lesson not only as many times as may be required, but in as many different places. This will enable the poor as well as the wealthy, the country as well as the town, to enjoy the same high advantages.

GREATEST MARK IN SURGERY.

Useful as all this undoubtedly promises to be, the moving picture machine, however, proposes to make its greatest mark in the science of surgery, and by its illustrative power to add immensely to the knowledge of that science, as well as to simplify the means of acquiring it.

It has also been suggested that by familiarizing people with the sights, the moving picture machine might show, much of the terror felt regarding a surgical operation could be dispelled; while the apparent precision and ease with which everything is accomplished, as well as the calmness of the surgeon and his assistants, would induce a feeling of confidence.

Enough has been said to prove that the moving picture machine has a future of usefulness totally unsuspected by those who first launched it, and of an extent no one in these days of marvelous discoveries can possibly foretell; while, in addition, there is stimulus given to and a change likely to result in the art of photography, of which the moving picture machine is a part.

Tom Norman Goes Angling.

Tom Norman, chief clerk of the program department of the General Film Co.'s branch at 85 Dearborn street, left for a fortnight's vacation on Friday, Aug. 5. He has gone to visit his parents in Northern Minnesota, with whom Mrs. Norman has been summering for several weeks.

"Tom's" home is situated in a fine fishing section of country, being near Lake Pokegama, a magnificent fresh water lake, ten by seven miles, well stocked with fish. Besides, Snake river is close by, a stream which anglers love to whip, because of the fine variety of game specimens of the finny tribe to be found there.

"Tom" has promised so many messes of trout to his large circle of friends here that he will need a wagon to bring them in; and, if he fails to do so, he may need the wagon for himself. The crowd is fish hungry just now and they will prove worse than half a dozen "repeaters" should he return empty handed.

Chicago Film Brevities.

There is a good opportunity for a live exhibitor, with the necessary funds, to open a licensed picture theatre in Burlington, Ia. At present there are three picture theatres in that city—the Elite with a capacity of 315, and the Palace and the Lyric with a capacity of 276 and 183, respectively. The two last mentioned are independent houses, but a modern and properly managed licensed theatre would put both out of business. Burlington has a population of 25,000 and the residents are strong supporters of good pictures, all three theatres mentioned doing a good paying business. The Palace and Lyric use only eight reels each, weekly, which about exhausts the "independent" dependable output. The Elite uses 14 reels per week of the licensed product and has the patronage of the best people in the city. It will pay some licensed exhibitor to examine the field in Burlington carefully.

"Ranch Life in the Great Southwest" has already proved to be the largest seller that the Selig Co. has yet turned out in the "special" class. The demand from Europe is especially large, this in addition to the exceptional sale here.

H. H. Buckwalter of the Denver Exchange made a short stay in the city last week. He continued his journey to New York last Tuesday, where he will remain for a few days.

The Selig's Guide, gotten out especially for the exclusive use of exchanges, is highly praised by exchange men, as it contains a great deal of valuable information concerning the earliest Selig releases as well as the latest, and in such condensed form that one can catch

A LIFE FOR A LIFE

A Vitagraph Life Portrayal

THERE are some conditions of human existence that we are all anxious to escape and, notwithstanding our natural antipathy for such conditions, we always pity anyone who is a victim of environments or a predisposition towards that fate. Pity is akin to sympathy and we cannot help feeling a desire to help anyone to rise above one's surroundings if we recognize the slightest ray of hope for their redemption.

The Author of "A Life for a Life," is the Author of "Convict No. 796," which made such a profound impression on all who saw it, acknowledged to be a powerful picture sermon for good.

SCENE FROM VITAGRAPH LIFE PORTRAYAL, "A LIFE FOR A LIFE."

There is nothing very attractive about a convict or a rat, but when we see the poor unfortunate in his lonely cell playing fondly with his pet rat while the world shuns him we are convinced that his love for even a dumb creature is a strong indication of a redeeming quality in his nature. At once he has our sympathy and attention and when the prison keeper bursts into the convict's cell, seizes the rat and kills it we find ourselves urging the prisoner on when he strangles the keeper for robbing him of his only companion and comfort.

The convicted man is placed in solitary confinement. A visiting clergyman with the prison superintendent, his wife and little girl, making a tour go into the cell, the child and the clergyman speak kindly to the poor fellow, his heart is moved and the darkness of his soul is dispelled by the touch of love and kindness and we cry with joy when the spark of hope we saw at the beginning is still alive and is revived in the man.

The last scene of this remarkable story show that our sympathies were not misplaced and the trust imposed and kindness extended to the convict by the superintendant and by his family were well bestowed when, regardless of self, he rushes into the blazing home and rescues the superintendent's child from the flames, willing to lay down his life that she might live. In this deed of heroism and gratitude our higher emotions respond to the better part of our natures and we are not ashamed of the pearls of feeling which irresistibly glistens in our eyes when at the end the poor fellow smilingly greets the superintendant and his child as he lies upon his bed of pain in the hospital ward.

Pictures of this kind are strong in the encouragement of the humane and philanthropic elements of our nature, they tend to develop our faith in the betterment of mankind. They are logical and natural and for that reason they appeal to the greatest good in the greatest number.

FIVE HOUSES FOR MACON, GA.

Five Motion picture theatres are in prospect for Macon, Ga., this fall and winter. In addition to the Lyric, the Palace and the Theatorium, long since established and successfully in operation, two more show houses will be opened here on September 15, both on Cherry street.

Messrs. E. A. Horne, Cooper D. Winn, Sr., and E. H. Kernagan will open a picture theatre at the Winn-Johnson stand. It will probably be called the "Princess."

Mr. William Oldknow of Atlanta, associated with Macon investors, will locate "The Savoy" on Cherry street, between Cotton avenue and Second, next to the McClure store. A lease has already been secured from the Messrs. Willingham, and the work of converting the store into a beautiful showhouse will begin at an early date. "The Savoy" will represent an investment of about $9,000 and will be so constructed as to be a vaudeville theatre, if so desired, as well as a picture house.

The promotors of the two prospective theatres say they have well investigated the situation here, and that Macon will sustain five houses. They say their stands are the best in the city and when opened will be in the midst of the "Great White Way."

FIGHT PICTURES AT NARRAGANSETT.

The fight pictures of the Johnson-Jeffries contest seems to have no effect on the morals of the society folks at Narragansett Pier. Last week, at the famous summer resort, the pictures were shown at the MacVeagh villa, which is occupied by Mr. and Mrs. R. E. Strawbridge of Philadelphia.

According to reports made by the society folks, present, they enjoyed the pictures very much. Among those present were: Mr. and Mrs. Alexander Brown, Mr. and Mrs. Robert C. Bohlen, Mr. and Mrs. H. W. Harrison, Charles Wheeler, D. Milburn, M. S. Stevenson, F. S. von Stade, Hugh Drury, Edward Connor, Dr Joseph Leidy and members of the visiting polo teams.

PICTURE ROW

On East Madison Street, Chicago

By James S. McQuade

HAVE you ever been on Chicago's "Picture Row?" While there are some 400 moving picture houses in the city, there are four of the number that have given that name to a small section of one of the great thoroughfares which connect the East and the West sides.

That part of East Madison Street which is bounded by Dearborn and South Clark streets, has gradually come to be known by the designation referred to, and every resident of the city who has the picture habit can readily direct the stranger to the locality. The four theatres are located in one short block, two on the north and two on the south side of Madison, and they stand on property that is valued at from $10,000 to $15,000 per front foot. Little wonder—is it not?—that these theatres have narrow fronts; and great wonder—can anyone deny it?—that these costly houses offer during the week the whole output of licensed manufacturers at an admission of 5 cents! If the prices of provisions have soared and if women's hose has touched high water mark by reason of a beneficent tariff, there assuredly is offered in picture entertainment a balm for all these woes.

The Casino Garden Theatre.

Starting west from Dearborn, on the north side of the street, one first comes to the Casino Garden theatre, at 103 East Madison. The entrance and front at once impress you by their neat and pleasing architecture. True, the front width is only twenty-five feet, but as one passes into the lobby there is a cozy, garden-like effect that dispels any sense of contracted quarters. And, by the way, this lobby is one of the modern features of the Casino that has gained for the house much favorable comment. The tickets are taken up on the right-hand entrance to the body of the theatre. In case the house is full, the visitor can sit in the lobby until the usher notifies him that a seat is vacant. This innovation prevents the wearysome task of standing and waiting for room, which is trying on persons of weak physique and on ladies especially.

The walls of the lobby are covered with panelled oil paintings which extend their entire length, the effect being especially pleasing at night when the double row of ornamental lamps light up the shadows. The entrance, too, at night shows up very atractively, nearly 400 incandescent lights being used as well as a colored flashing sign of unique design.

The theatre proper has a depth of 110 feet, the height of the ceiling in the front, near the screen, being considerably higher than at the entrance. This peculiarity of construction permits the location of the operating room near the center of the theatre, and above the audience, in a vertical wall facing toward the screen. This arrangement serves to reduce the throw of the machine, which, in reality, is only about 40 feet.

The Casino seats about 400 people and that comfortably, the A. H. Andrews Co. having furnished the appointments. The interior decorations are in keeping with the scheme followed in the lobby, large panelled oil paintings appearing on the walls, on which also emergency lights, in inverted, stained glass boxes, are constantly burning. On the high front ceiling, near the screen, incandescent lights are arranged in Japanese lantern effects. To prevent the distraction of the audience by the noise created by heavy-footed persons entering or leaving, a cork carpet has been placed on the aisle.

The Casino has been running for nearly a year and in that time quite a change has been made in the business policy of the management. At first vaudeville was given a decided preference, pictures being used only as a side issue. Now vaudeville has been eliminated, except on Saturdays and Sundays, when the price of admission is 10 instead of 5 cents. Harry B. Fitzpatrick, the manager, is strongly in favor of dispensing with vaudeville altogether, and it is just possible that an understanding will soon be arrived at by the managers of the picture houses on "Picture Row," whereby pictures will "come into their own."

At the present time the Casino is using one first run every day except Sunday and one reel five days old, pictures and illustrated songs forming the entertainment on Mondays, Tuesdays, Wednesdays, Thursdays and Fridays. The show is continuous, running from 9 a. m. till 11 p. m.

Under Mr. Fitzpatrick's management the Casino has realized handsome profits on the money invested by the owner, Charles Weeghman, an enterprising Chicago business man. No matter when one pays a visit, this handsome little house is found showing to capacity, which, indeed, can be truthfully said of all the four theatres on "Picture Row."

HENRY W. THOMPSON, GENERAL MANAGER OF PASTIME THEATRE.

The Pastime Theatre.

At 109 East Madison one finds the Pastime theatre, erected by the Pastime Theatre Co., about two years ago, at a cost of $22,000. This company also owns the Pastime at 70 East Adams street, which runs moving pictures strictly, and the "Victoria," in Logan square, a beautiful family theatre which seats 600 people and which offers to its patrons high class vaudeville and two reels of moving pictures daily.

During the present summer season, the Pastime on East Madison is giving an entertainment similar to that of the Casino and of the Alcazar, the latter being directly opposite, on the south side of the street. These three theatres are booked by the General Film Co., under Manager F. C. Aiken, and it was arranged, with the consent of the manager of each house, that vaudeville should be excluded during the summer months, except on Saturdays and Sundays, also that their bookings of pictures should be so selected as to prevent conflict. As the entire weekly output of the manufacturers is at their disposal and as the manager of each house is present at the time of weekly bookings, a highly satisfactory and thoroughly practical working plan has been evolved.

Each house is exhibiting daily, except Sunday, one first run and one second run about five days old, the latter, in most instances, not having been exhibited previously on East Madison street. On Saturdays and Sundays three good vaudeville acts and two reels of pictures are used, 10 cents admission being charged. On these days the vaudeville acts are put on in order, the first from noon to 4 p. m., the second from 4 to 7 p. m., and the third from 7 to 11 p. m. The Pastime management get their vaudeville acts from the Western Vaudeville Managers' Association. When the acts are short a character singer and illustrated songs are added.

The Pastime has a seating capacity of 460, but can accommodate 480 people at a pinch. The front is only 20 feet wide and the depth is 190 feet. The main floor of the theatre, however, is 25 feet wide and the balcony boxes, on the north side of the structure, add 8 feet more to the interior width. These balcony boxes are a boon to many who dislike crowding, and they are divided into two equal sections, one for ladies and one for men.

The Pastime has the largest projection in the loop, the throw being 106 feet. The size of the picture is 15¾ by 13½ feet, the size of the curtain being 18 by 21 feet.

The ventilation is excellent and this can be vouched for all the theatres on "Picture Row." The air in the house is changed every 30 seconds and this without any discomfort caused by draughts, the exhaust being placed near the ceiling so as to draw all the heated air out over the heads of the audience.

The attendance is uniformly large and few seats are vacant at any hour while the house is open. Posters and signs are extensively used and feature films are well announced and exploited.

H. W. Thompson, general manager of the Pastime Theatre Co., makes his headquarters at this house, and he owns one-half interest in the theatres controlled by it. The house manager is E. J. Barrett, an efficient showman, who is "always on the job."

The Alcazar.

The Alcazar theatre at 108 East Madison is the oldest theatre on the street, on the East side. It was opened in May, 1907, at a cost of $20,000. Its capacity is 300. Association and licensed films have always been used here and the management always stood for straight moving pictures until nearby, competing houses introduced vaudeville.

The front and interior decorations of the Alcazar are chaste and attractive and are standing advertisements for the Decorators Supply Co. of this city. The ventilating and lighting systems are of the best modern type and the closest attention is paid to the comfort of patrons.

PASTIME THEATRE, 109 EAST MADISON STREET, CHICAGO—VIEW OF FRONT.

A. H. TALBOT, MANAGER OF ALCAZAR THEATRE.

This house was the first in Chicago to install a pipe organ, which is played by an expert. In serious and tragic picture subjects this instrument is used instead of the piano, and the music has attracted many regular patrons. A piano and trap drum are the other instruments used.

A. H. Talbot, manager of the Alcazar, states that he has noticed many wonderful changes in the clientele of the house since it opened. Those who first attended came to view pictures as novelties, and there were no regular patrons. Now the regular patronage has grown so that seldom a day is missed by many. They keep track of the weekly releases and have their favorite people in the production of the film, just as they have in drama and vaudeville.

V. C. Seaver, owner of the Pastime is interested in numerous ventures in the entertainment line. He has a circus on the road at present and owns the Theatorium, at 44 State street, this city, the Crescent theatre at 311

The Boston Theatre.

The Boston theatre was built two and a half years ago by the Boston Theatre Co., at an outlay of $17,000. It is a very neat appearing house on the exterior and although it seats only 300 people the space is such that with less liberal allowance for chairs it could easily seat 400. James W. Ferris, the manager, has been with the Boston since it opened, and he has always been in favor of an exclusive picture entainment, that is, so far as vaudeville is concerned.

The service of the Boston is 14 reels weekly, five of which are first runs, the balance being from four to five days old. Two acts of vaudeville are used daily, one double, from 11 to 5 p. m., and one single act, with illustrated songs, from 5 to 11 p. m.

Everything in the Boston is modern and up-to-date, including house appointments and stage equipments. The regular patronage forms a large percentage of the attendance, Mr. Ferris informed me. About 3,000 people per day, on the average, attend the Boston. Mr. Ferris states that the business has shown a very wonderful increase over that of last year and he attributes this to the marked improvement in quality of the licensed product.

The George K. Spoor Co. attends to the film bookings of the Boston.

NO "JIM CROW" PICTURE SHOW FOR ORANGE.

The efforts made by the negroes of Orange, N. J., to obtain a license for a "Jim Crow" motion picture theatre has been squelched. Mayor Seymour has now put his foot down once and for all on that line shows.

The negroes claim that they are looked upon as undesirables in shows patronized by the white race, and it is only just to them to be given the privilege of running their own shows.

A. E. ATKINSON SELLS BIJOU THEATRE.

A. E. Atkinson, the pioneer motion picture manager of Escanaba, Mich., and owner of the Bijou motion picture theatre, has sold that popular house to J. A. Frechette. The transaction took place July 30.

For a long time the Bijou has been the leading picture theatre in Escanaba, and under the management of Mr. Atkinson has been looked upon as one of the principal attractions in the city. He has taken every opportunity to give his patrons the best there is on the motion picture market, and has always kept his house strictly up-to-date.

It is said that he has an option on a first-class house in Chicago and that he and Mrs. Atkinson will leave for the "Windy City" some time during the middle of August.

Mr. Frechette is expected to keep up the same standard of pictures and will endeavor to give his patrons the best entertainment he possibly can. He has had considerable experience in this line of work and is known to be a hustler.

CAPTAIN AMENT'S NEW HOUSE.

Well Known Southern Showman Erecting New $25,000 Theatre at Meridian—Has Four Houses.

Captain W. D. Ament, of Jackson, Tenn., who already owns four first class picture houses in Jackson, Tenn., and Meridian and Corinth, Miss., is now erecting his second house in Meridian. The new theatre, which will cost over $25,000, and will bear the name of the Majestic, will not only be the finest and most modern house in that city, but will rank with any in the state.

According to the original plans the house will be equipped with every modern appliance known for the comfort and safety of the picture theatre. The ventilating and cooling plants will be such, as used in most of the theatres in the large northern cities. The machine booth will be strictly fireproof. There will be large exits both on the sides and front of the house so that the place can be emptied of an audience within a very few minutes, should occasion demand it.

The pictures that will be used will be the latest licensed films. Experience has taught Captain Ament that the Southerners will not stand for anything but the best. The same pertains to vaudeville, and as it is his intention to put on such performances, he will endeavor to get the best. It is expected the new house will open sometime about the middle of September if not sooner.

The picture business in the south, claims Captain Ament, has suffered owing to the houses being run by incompetent men, who know nothing about public amusements. Any old thing goes with such managers, but not with the patrons. They want the best, and unless a man is a capable judge of the best, he not only "stings" himself, but causes the public to get disgusted and blame the picture manufacturer.

His houses, the Elite and Marlowe, at Jackson, are looked upon, by the traveling public as two of the most modern houses in Tennessee. Both houses are running capacity audiences at each performance.

As a practical showman Captain Ament has had twenty-five years' experience. He is a man who caters to the public's needs and tries to give the best that is obtainable. His success in the south has been such as to warn others, who intend going in the same line of business, that unless they have the necessary experience it will be a useless task. It takes experience in every line to make a success, claims Captain Ament, and he has devoted nearly a lifetime to amusing the public.

MOTION PICTURES IN BUFFALO CHURCH.

A motion picture exhibition at a Sunday evening religious service was the innovation that the Rev. S. R. Vinton, of Rangoon, Burma, introduced at the Prospect Avenue Baptist Church, of Buffalo, N. Y., July 31. The picture showed the good results of the Christian missionaries work in heathen land and a large and interested audience mostly made up of young people attended. This was the first motion picture exhibition to be given in a church on a Sunday night in Buffalo, and if the attendance is a criterion of success it certainly was all that the lecturer could have wished.

Mr. Vinton is a Baptist missionary at Rangoon and was born in India. The pictures were taken by himself on the scene of his labors and illustrate the effect of Christianity on the pagan people of eastern lands. He lectured in the picturesque costume of India and his subjects was "Western Women in Eastern Lands."

TWO ESSANAY FEATURE COMEDIES

"Take Me Out to the Ball Game" and "The Count That Counted."

WHEN the Essanay Company promises a film d'extraordinary in the way of comedy, it's a safe bet that something of a top-notch order in the way of a scream provoking film will be the result. The Essanay Company promises in their comedy of August 24th, "Take Me Out to the Ball Game," a feature comedy of unusual excellence and the best of comedy of recent months.

The plot of the story is characteristic and typical of the Essanay's well known comedy subjects. The photography is of the highest order and the leading parts are in the hands of well known Essanay comedians. A brief outline of the story of the picture follows:

SCENE FROM ESSANAY'S "TAKE ME OUT TO THE BALL GAME."

A young business man, a veritable baseball bug, decides to go to the ball game and hurries home from his office for an early dinner. At home his wife, Fanny, learns where he intends to spend the afternoon and insists that she is going, also. The husband hesitatingly agrees and waits impatiently as she dresses. Finally, arrayed in their best, they hurry out to catch the ball park car. Jack, the bullpup, has been brought along by Fanny and causes considerable annoyance on the street car, but finally, landed at the park, the fan hurries off to purchase the tickets, after cautioning Fanny to wait in a certain place so she may not be lost from him in the jam. When the fan rushes back to his wife he seizes the wrong woman and drags her to the gate when the latter's husband stops him and points out his mistake.

After a few other accidents and mishaps, Fanny and her husband are seated with the crowd on the bleachers and the game starts. Jack, the bullpup, takes the lead from that moment on. A husky ball slugger drives a home run that is muffed by the fielder but the pup is on the job and grabbing the ball makes away with it. The game is interrupted for a moment while the players pursue the ball but it is at last rescued and the game continues. Jack scores another hit when, during an argument between the players and the umpire he again breaks his leash and runs out to the diamond intending to make it hot for the umpire. There is another lively scene here which ends happily for the cheering mob when the umpire changes his decision.

The game is finally finished and the fan, elated over the victory of the home team, goes home forgetting Fanny, who, unable to find any interest in it goes to sleep on the bleachers.

Fanny is aroused, however, by the faithful bullpup, and, finding herself alone and the ball park empty hurries out with the intention of making it warm for her faithless spouse.

The two meet on the street, the fan having finally remembered that his wife was left behind, and Fanny carries out her scheme to the letter. The film closes with the fan getting a drubbing.

Those who will have remembered the Essanay Company's baseball comedy of two years ago, "The Baseball Fan" will not fail to obtain this one, also. It is claimed by Mr. Anderson, who produced both of these famous comedies, promises that this latter will prove more humorous than the former. The baseball scenes of this comedy were made at one of the big parks in Chicago and are full of action and of lively interest. The comedy on the bleachers, however, is given the most prominence and is exceptionally funny.

Coming at the close of the baseball season when the interest in the great national sport reaches its most interesting phase this film will undoubtedly prove a great hit.

Another exceptional comedy film from the Essanay Company will be released one week previous to the issue of the baseball film. It is another of Mr. G. M. Anderson's productions, is lively in action, with a good story, and excellently acted. The photography will be found to be superior to anything recently released by the Essanay Company, which, in recalling the very excellent standard maintained by the Essanay in this department, is saying a great deal.

SCENE FROM "THE COUNT THAT COUNTED."

"The Count That Counted."

This is a typical Essanay comedy. It tells of a young newspaper reporter in love with the daughter of a millionaire and who is objected to by this latter. When he asks father's consent he is immediately thrown out of the house, but not daunted by this he writes a note to the girl asking her to elope with him. The message is intercepted and an answer is returned by father telling that if he can obtain his (the father's) consent all will be well.

The reporter tells his trouble to others of the staff on his newspaper and an excellent scheme is doped up. News that Count de Soakum of the French nobility has arrived in town and will visit the millionaire is published and the witty reporter immediately masquerades as the bogus count and calls on his sweetheart's father. He is given an elegant reception by the father and the Count expresses his desire to marry the bewitching daughter. This latter refuses to listen to such a proposition until she learns that the Count and her Willie are the same. Then she agrees—so does father. And this is his undoing for despite his making the discovery that the Count is a fake and that the young reporter has played a trick on him he is urged to remember his promise and the film ends with his final consent and blessing.

Mr. Augustus Carney with Miss Martha Spier are in the roles of the reporter and sweetheart and both are exceedingly entertaining. The comedy is genuine and of a very high order.

NEW HOUSE FOR PEORIA.

Plans prepared by Hewitt & Emerson for the Orpheum theatre to be erected in the 100 block, North Madison avenue, of Peoria, Ill., by E. C. and A. E. Leisey, were taken July 25, to the office of J. A. Schneider, commissioner of building, for examination preparatory to issuing a permit. It will take several days for the commissioner to pass upon them.

The plans depict a structure 71x150 feet on the ground dimensions and 70 feet in height. It will be an absolutely fireproof building of steel and concrete with an ornamental front of stone and terra cotta with a basement under all. On the street floor will be two stories divided by the main entrance eighteen feet in width. The stage from the rear wall to the footlights will be 38 feet deep and 58 feet wide. The auditorium will be 71 ft. long and 58 wide with a mezzanine balcony on the second floor and a gallery on the third. The seating capacity will be 1,400 and the structure will represent an investment of $150,000.

The building will be completed and ready for occupancy by the begininng of the Christmas holiday season.

HALLBERG IN NEW QUARTERS

Little Wizard of Electricity Now Established at 36 East 23d Street, New York

One of the signs of the growth of the motion picture supply business is the recent removal of J. H. Hallberg, of "Economizer" fame, from his former quarters at 28 Greenwich avenue, New York City, to new and handsomer offices at 36 East 23d street, directly opposite the Metropolitan Life Building.

This move on the part of the "little wizard of electricity" was no surprise to his many friends and customers. They knew that Mr. Hallberg's business had doubled itself many times since he first devoted his endeavors to the motion picture industry two or three years ago, when he invented the now well known "Economizer." He was at that time the consulting electrical engineer for the Beck Flaming Arc Light Co. Later he occupied the floor above the Beck Co., and on August 1, removed to the present new location.

The new offices are ideal in every respect. They are situated right in the heart of the motion picture business of New York, and within a stone's throw of many of the large film establishments. They consist of the following departments. A large general office and sales room, a private office, fitted with rich mahogany furniture and rugs; a projection room and a large store room. These rooms are wired for a complete demonstration of his electrical goods.

Mr. Hallberg keeps in stock a big line of supplies ready for immediate shipment to exhibitors. He carries a complete line of Hallberg "Economizers" for alternating and direct current which reduce the amount of electric power bills two-thirds. A new line of "Economizers" is also out which changes alternating into direct current giving the most brilliant light possible for places where alternating is the only available current. "Economizers" for special incandescent lamps, signs, lobby and house lighting is another style.

He handles 24 inch exhaust fans made for alternating current with a special controller and reversing switch directly attached to the motor enabling one to exhaust dust and foul air in the day time and at night when the air outside is cool, to reverse the fan and blow in cool, fresh air, putting the theatre under a cool pressure.

Mr. Hallberg also carries the motiograph projector stereopticons, Hardesty opera chairs, "Electra" carbons, "Excello" flaming arc carbons and a full line of condensors, announcement slides, lenses and supplies.

MOTION PICTURES HELP ACTRESS.

Miss Irene Fenwick, a young Chicago girl who is playing comedy in her native country for the first time in "The Brass Bottle," under the management of Charles Frohman who brought her out in London two years ago, has developed a new use for motion pictures. She has had the living room of her home fitted with a complete moving picture apparatus and a screen on which she throws pictures of herself as she rehearses in the new play. By this method she declares she can study and correct her acting.

"The idea is really a valuable one for every actress," said Miss Fenwick, "and I expect that before long every one of prominence will be adopting it. The great difficulty previously has been that you can never see yourself as you appear from the front and must always rely on the criticism of the manager or the stage director."

"HER WINNING WAY."—Anxious to escape the strain of business and seek diversion and recreation, Robert asks his father to give him a vacation for a few days' rest. The father, who is absorbed by his business affairs, one of the old school plodders, reluctantly grants the son's request, and the young man hurries from the office, packs his grip and hustles for the train. On his way he makes the acquaintance of a very charming lady, who is bound for the same place as himself. Arriving at their destination he offers to carry her grip and she accepts his proffered kindness. Loaded down he follows her to the hotel, where he gladly deposits the luggage to escape a complete collapse from exhaustion. He finds his "acquaintance" very winsome and attractive; so infatuated is he with her he prolongs his stay from one day to another until his father is obliged to send a clerk after him to bring him back. When the clerk reaches the hotel he finds the son head over heels in love with his "acquaintance" and seems willing to leave his happy home for her. The clerk is introduced to the young woman and he falls to her charms as readily as Robert did. The captivating creature drops the son and takes up with the clerk. The clerk succeeds in getting Robert to go back to the city, pretending he will go with him. At the last moment the clerk refuses to go, and hastens back to the adored one. The son returns to business; the father asks him where the clerk is. When he is informed the old man gets furious and immediately despatches another clerk after the first one. The second clerk walks into the same ensnarement as the first, with the same result, the girl gets them all. The boss in despair determines to go himself and see what is doing. He gets a worse "crush" than any of the others, is her devoted slave, calls her "honey bunch" and gets perfectly foolish over her.

He is entertaining the lady with all the delicacies of the season and spending his money with a lavish hand. A gentleman with three or four children now appears upon the scene. The kids shout in chorus, "O, mama!" and lovingly gather around the old gentleman's lady friend, very much to his surprise and chagrin.

The son and the clerks, who have returned to the scene of their discomfiture in search of the boss, arrive just in time to see the children clinging to their mother. In concert with the boss they all exclaim "stung" and unceremoniously beat it for the city.

PATHE FRERES.

"MAX HAS TO CHANGE."—Max, having made the acquaintance of a millionaire, is invited to a social evening to help entertain the guests. The host's daughter falls violently in love with him and announces to her father that she means to marry him. Her ideas do not coincide with those of her father, who declares to that young man of genius that if he does not find some means of breaking it off he will blow his (Max's) brains out. Max politely refuses, but the barrel of a revolver brings him to a more amenable frame of mind, and we find him next day doing his best to destroy the good impression that the young heiress has of him. For some time the girl tries hard to believe that to dust boots with a serviette and to use fingers instead of a fork are but the vagaries of a genius. She, however, gets thoroughly disgusted when Max, feigning to be intoxicated, does some most outrageous things. She rushes out of the room, leaving her father convulsed at Max's antics. So thoroughly diverted is he and so excellent a fellow does he now find Max that he abruptly changes his mind and insists that Max must marry his daughter. Again Max refuses, but the every-ready gun is whipped out, and at the point of the revolver makes his peace with the girl and confesses that he was compelled by her father to behave as he did.

"BACK TO LIFE AFTER 2,000 YEARS."—A uniformed attendant is sleeping soundly by the side of a marble tomb, in which lies the remains of one of ancient Rome's mighty Caesars. The top of the tomb gradually slides off, and there emerges a fine old Roman dressed in classic toga. Shaking the dust from his feet, he sets out through the city, but naturally finds things have changed since he last knew Rome. Some of the crumbling ruins he can recognize; others he cannot. Finally he meets a picture postcard seller, who shows him cards with views of modern Rome. He is so delighted with them that he starts through the city to inspect, but the sight of two well-dressed girls captures his eyes, and soon making their acquaintance they all adjourn to a restaurant. Meantime the attendant awakes, and, finding the tomb empty, soon discovers the truth. He locates the old warrior in the restaurant, half asleep from the effects of the strong champagne. With the aid of two guards he places him in a wheelbarrow and they take him back to his tomb, where he is soon again put to rest, and the heavy marble cover being replaced, the attendant falls back in his chair and is able to finish his own sleep.

"A CHEYENNE BRAVE."—Red Shield, a Cheyenne, is madly enamoured with the daughter of a Sioux chief, which love is reciprocated by her. But the Sioux and Cheyennes were ever bitter enemies and a marriage between them is not to be thought of, so when he offers ponies and fur robes for the hand of the maid he is promptly refused by her father, who informs him that at no price can he marry his daughter. Big Bear Claw, himself a Sioux chief, is the successful suitor for the girl's hand, and she is then given to him. Red Shield, however, follows on their trail, and on a dark night awakes her and together they fly. Big Bear Claw and his braves soon take up the pursuit, and when Red Shield and the squaw take to the river in their canoe they soon follow in their fleet of canoes. After a long chase down the stream they are unable to catch up, but when Red Shield takes again to the land he is hindered by the girl, who is becoming fatigued, and is soon overtaken. Big Bear Claw, wishing to be generous to the girl, offers Red Shield that they fight for her, and after a long knife and wrestling fight Red Shield is victorious, and taking the squaw in his canoe sets out with her for the home of his people.

"THE ERIKS."—The performance of these two acrobats and contortionists creates an involuntary holding of the breath, even when it is watched in motion pictures.

"SCHOOL IN NEW GUINEA."—A colored educational film of merit and interest. Showing how the children of savage parents are becoming civilized.

"THE SHEPHERD'S DOG."—Jack, a shepherd lad, incurs the displeasure of his master by reason of his attachment to a little black poodle, which the elder man declares is no longer any good for looking after the sheep. The farmer accordingly purchases another dog, and then instructs Jack to drown his dog in order that a saving of food may be effected. Jack carries the dog to the stream, but his heart revolts at the idea of drowning his only friend, and he ties the animal to a tree. The farmer's suspicions are aroused when he sees Jack slip some of his food into his satchel, and, following the lad, ascertains the truth. Determining that the dog shall be drowned, he decides to do it himself, and carries the animal to an old wooden bridge where the current runs swiftly. As, however, the farmer leans against the rotten handrail it gives way, and he is precipitated into the stream. In a flash the dog has plunged in after him, and with his assistance is saved from the rapid waters. Shamefaced and repentant, the farmer owns up like a man to his unkindness of heart, and from that day Jack and his dumb friend are two honored members of his household.

"A SHORT-LIVED TRIUMPH."—Colonel Smith at the last moment found that he would be able after all to preside at the unveiling of the statue at Tortland, and after wiring the Mayor to this effect jumps into his sixty-horse power machine and starts for Tortland. Shortly after passing through Newark his car broke down, and divesting himself of his sword and uniform he endeavored to assist his chauffeur to locate the trouble. Not being successful, he went off to fetch a neighboring blacksmith. Weary Willie was taken for the Colonel and presided at the ceremonies, in addition to which he made a great hit with the wife of the Mayor. In the midst of the ceremonies, however, the real Colonel Smith appeared on the scene, having obtained a lift in another vehicle, and soon satisfies the assembled company as to his identity, and after a short-lived triumph Weary Willie has to again tramp on in his weather-worn attire.

SELIG POLYSCOPE CO.

"WILLIE."—Willie gets a letter from his best girl's papa in answer to his proposal for his daughter's hand, in which he reminds him of his inability to support a wife and suggests he go west and grow up with the country and then come and talk to him. Willie goes, takes a few ideas along with him regarding the invasion of the wild and wooly. He arrives at the Texas camp and is shown his bunk. Willie finds his silk pajamas are not adapted to the surroundings and the initiation of the rope and saddle not conducive to his early training.

It was a long eventful night. Morning dawns and finds the tenderfoot on a broncho, nothing like a Florida truck horse, who politely takes to the occasion and attempts a few acrobatic stunts. Willie arrives at the bunk house slightly disfigured, but still in the ring. He finally discovers his courage, gives the bully of the guying cow punchers a good trouncing, floors the manager of the ranch, shoots up the place and returns east to claim the girl. All ends happily and is one of the brighest western comedies of the season.

"HUMAN HEARTS."—In presenting Hal Reid in his original creation of Tom Logan in "Human Hearts," we feel we have supplied a long felt want in picture stories—namely, that of presenting in person, a well-known theatrical star, in a staple play, known throughout the country. The story of Tom Logan, the village smithy, stand to-day without a rival as a portrayal of the vast human emotions concealed in the hearts of life's weary travelers, and has given to the stage a memorable story enjoyed by millions of people, and is now reproduced in picture by the famous Selig Company.

We find Tom Logan busy at his forge one sultry day when the arrival of Ford and his wife Jenny takes him for a moment from his work. The sturdy manhood of Tom could not stand idly by and see Jenny abused by her husband, who had in many ways made life to her seem almost a blank. Sometime later we find she was compelled to leave him. Two years roll by and she returns to the little village of Cedarville with all its quaint environments that show little change—Samantha, Seth, Tom and all the boys and girls are there. Logan looks with favor upon Jenny and that admiration is returned. The church bells soon tell the villagers of their happy wedding.

A year later heaven has blessed their happy home

"THE USURER."—"Lay not up for yourself treasures upon earth, where moth and rust doth corrupt." —Mat. 6-19. How few there are that appreciate the truth of this advice from holy writ, in our incessant struggle for gold. Wealth is not only transitory, but it often conspires against our eternal salvation. "Ye cannot serve God and Mammon." True it is that the fight for fortune is ethical where the methods are legitimate, but the one despicable means is that of the usurer or money shark. This man fattens on the misfortunes of his fellow beings, gloating over the fact that his debtors are his abject slaves, and like the ancient king who called for a reckoning from his servant, "But forasmuch as he had not to pay, he commanded him to be sold, and his wife and children, and all that he had—" This is the procedure of the usurer. We find him about to leave his office in the evening, ordering his collectors to warn the delinquent debtors that if they do not pay by the morrow their effects will be sold. They start off on their rounds while he goes to spend an evening of pleasure at a banquet. What a contrast. On the one side the poor unfortunates apprised of their inevitable fate, while he and his friends quaff the blood-distilled wine, and regale themselves with viands paid for with the tears of the needy. The next day the collectors carry out the usurer's orders, and the plea "Have patience with me and I will pay thee all" is ignored. The bed is removed from under a poor widow's sick child; the household effects of a widower with one small child are seized and sold and other cruel, merciless deeds are perpetrated. Still, in the time of all this misery our usurer is enjoying the best the land affords. However, there comes a time of his reckoning, and "woe unto you, for ye devour widow's houses, therefore shall ye receive damnation." The poor man whose goods were seized, in desperation terminates his unendurable existence, and here the blood of the oppressed cries to Heaven. The widow leaves to go to the usurer to plead mercy, and when she arrives at his office he is in the safe. The poor woman faints from exhaustion and, falling against the huge safe door, which stands ajar, closes it. Here he is imprisoned in his storehouse of blood gotten wealth at the mercy of the time lock. Struggle as he may, his condition is hopeless, and so he falls to the floor of the vault suffocated. Of what value is his gold now? Will it buy him eternal happiness? No, for "we have brought nothing into this world, and it is certain we can carry nothing out." The next morning when the time lock snaps, the usurer is found the victim of that great leveler, death.

"WHEN WE WERE IN OUR TEENS."—Diplomacy is one of the most valuable traits in a man's makeup. By it he loses nothing and often gains much; besides, it prevents trouble. When we are in our teens, diplomacy stands us good in love's young dream. Tom did not possess this quality, and when May showed to him her latest painting, Tom said "punk," for in truth he was anxious to discourage her hobby for painting, knowing full well that she would never become a great artist. Howard, his rival, was more diplomatic. He praised her efforts and is at once the top-notcher in May's esteem. This perturbs Tom, and he at once plans to trip Howard up. Disguised as a tramp, he, with the butler's assistance, steals the painting and in the presence of May tries to sell it to Howard, who, not recognizing it as May's, calls it "the worst ever." May, however knows her own handiwork, and seizing the canvas bids them "beat it," for as regards her they are both in the "in bad" class.

"AN OLD STORY WITH A NEW ENDING."—Cupid has often started something he hasn't finished and possibly he hugely enjoys the disappointment of the victims of his folly. Miss Pauline Smith is forelady of the factory, and the girls, jealous of her, plan a practical joke, by placing one of her cards in a pair of overalls which they are getting ready for shipment. The overalls are later on purchased by a Rube who is recognized as the village Beau Brummel. He, finding the card, becomes "chesty," and immediately writes the following letter to the fair unknown:—"Dear Miss:—I found your name and address in a pair of overalls I just bought. Suppose we round up this romance by us two getting married. I know I could love you. Just say the word.—Jay Downs." This letter is delivered by the mail carrier to the girl who is highly indignant and answers:—"Dear Sir:—I don't want a silly noodle who gets mashed on a girl he never saw. I don't know how my card got in those overalle. I want a fellow who can afford something better than a 47c. pair of breeches. Yours respectfully, Pauline Smith." Result—Conceit gets a jolt.

EDISON MFG. CO.

"HIS NEW FAMILY."—Michel Lafayette, a school teacher in one of the little seacoast towns in France, concludes to go to America to better provide for the maintenance of his wife and eleven-year-old boy. He leaves after bidding farewell to all his neighbors and his scholars, and lastly his devoted wife and son, whom he leaves to the care and protection of the cure of the village. We follow Michel to America, where he finally wanders into the great Southwest and seeks occupation at a large quartz mine. This is given him and for sometime he goes along successfully. A year after his arrival in America his wife dies in France. The good old cure, thinking it best, sends little Jean by express to his father at Holcomb, Ariz., in the United States. At about the time Jean leaves France, Michel Lafayette, his father, is killed in a mining accident. When the boy arrives at Holcomb and is turned over by the stage driver to the express agent, there is a curious crowd of miners gathered about. As the express agent inquires "who knows Michel Lafayette" there is a silence which immediately conveys to the agent that the father is no more. The pathetic little figure of the French boy among his strange surroundings is beautifully portrayed. The question arises among the miners what to do with the child. It is suggested that a widower among them who has two children of his own, one Jack Smith, take the boy in charge and that they will club together to help him along. Smith peremptorily refuses to do this and roughly withdraws with his own children. Big hearted Andy Kendal, typical old pioneer, takes in the situation and makes up his mind to adopt Jean. Jean, on learning of his father's death, is deeply affected, but rousing the manly instinct which fills his heart, child though he is, in the slang of the day, he "braces up" and accepts Andy's open offer of friendship. We see Andy bring the boy to his cabin and establish him in his new home. After Andy has built a bunk for the boy they proceed to enjoy their first meal together. Jean, who has been reared with elegant manners, is terribly shocked at the table etiquette which Andy displays, and a beautiful comedy scene is enacted between the rough old miner and the little French boy. They finally come to a complete understanding and everything looks bright for the household which has opened up a new life for Jean. After some months of life in the West little Jean becomes more of a Westerner. He wears boots and the characteristic handkerchief about his neck and he is innocent of a coat. The only children in the camp are the little boy and baby girl of Jack Smith, the ruffianly character who refused to take care of Jean. Jean becomes attracted to the little ones and seeks frequent opportunities of playing with them. This annoys Smith, who orders the French boy away. One way Smith is walking near the edge of a mountain stream and is roughly dragging his little boy along; the boy seemingly is overtired and Smith to hasten him, attempts to strike the little lad, when Jean comes along and remonstrates with him. Smith becomes very angry and makes a quick movement to strike the lad. Jean ducks the blow, but Smith's movement is so great that he misses his footing and goes over the bank into the stream below. Jean is thunderstruck and rushes down to try to help the man who had just attempted to strike him. He is unable to do anything, for Smith is carried down by the rushing stream. Jean cautions the little children to remain quiet and he runs to the mine where Andy is engaged and tells the superintendent of the accident, running back himself to the little ones. The men rush along the stream and finally find the body of Smith, but too late. Little Jean has seen them recover the body and knows that the father of the children is no more. A big thought comes to him. He takes the little ones by the hand and brings them home to the cabin of Andy Kendal. The youngsters are very tired and Jean puts them both into his little cot, tucking them in for the night. He feels the necessity of looking up Andy Kendal, who is busy with the men at the mine, and before leaving the cabin writes a characteristic letter notifying Andy that he has adopted the little children of Jack Smith. Jean is so sleepy that he gives way to the desire for rest and falls asleep before he quite completes the letter. Andy returns to his cabin a couple of hours later, lights the lamp and finds Jean asleep over the table. He picks up the letter, reads it and is astonished to find that the family is increased by two. It is impossible to describe the emotion of the miner. Comedy, pathos, nobility, everything is blended here in a beautiful heart touch, Andy finally takes the sleeping boy in his arms, lays him across his own bunk and covers him up for the night. The question now is what he is going to do. Thinking the thing over for a moment, he stands before the namesake of the great French General, comes to a military salute and bows his head, fully convincing the observer that he has concluded to abide by the action of little Jean. The question comes to Andy's mind where he will sleep that night, and he begins to build another bunk, but in attempting to strike the first nail, he realizes that he will wake the sleeping youngsters. Giving up this means of resting he takes his heavy coat from the wall, rolls it in a bundle, lays it on the corner of the table, fills his pipe, sits in his chair surveying his trio of proteges and that peace which comes to the heart of a man who is doing a noble deed, fills the soul of the rugged character who has divided our interest and sympathy with the little Jean during the progress of the picture.

This is merely the briefest outline of the story. The scenic effects are most beautiful, the coast of France, the little village home of the Lafayettes, the mining scenes involved and the interior of Andy's cabin are all perfect in every detail. Mr. Norton's artistic blending of comedy, pathos and heart interest are wonderfully brought out by the Edison players. The picture is one which produces the smile and the tear, hearty laughter and a realization of the noblest virtue of the human heart. The film will rank among the Edison Company's great pictures.

"HOW THE SQUIRE WAS CAPTURED."—Here is a jolly, happy, unconventional little outdoor comedy which fairly overflows with a spirit of mischievous youth and springtime love. It starts in church and we see most unexpectedly a country squire trying to flirt with a pretty girl across the aisle. The said pretty girl being full of ideas, perhaps somewhat induced by the young man behind her, who whispers in her ear, intimates to her maiden aunt beside her, that the squire's sheep's eyes are being cast at her, the aunt. Strange to say, the old lady is not so much displeased as one might expect, but smiles rather demurely and almost coquetishly. Then there comes a note from the same squire which is addressed to Miss Cora Lee, the pretty girl aforesaid. She shows it to the young man, likewise aforesaid, and they laugh at the idea of the squire addressing her. And when they have both read the note and see that the squire wishes to call they are ready for any mischief. Again the girl has an idea, and seeing that there is space to do so, she changes "Cora" so that it looks like "Cordelia," which is the maiden aunt's name, and consequently the letter finds its way into the hands of the older lady, who at once responds by giving the squire an invitation to call. When he does call and tea is served in the garden, he finds that he is being entertained by the aunt and that the pretty girl is just out of reach at the flower bed, so near and yet so far. After this experience he can take no chances and he sends a pretty red shawl to the young girl with the message that if he may hope she is to wear it that evening in the garden. The plan in which the letter was concerned having worked so well, the girl presents the shawl to the aunt and tells her that it is from the squire also. Of course, auntie is much pleased and is only too happy to agree to the squire's conditions and wear the shawl in the garden. And then the young lovers meet and talk over the situation and decide that they must watch the outcome of the drama which they have set in motion. The girl suggests that they climb the tree which overhangs the summer house and watch from the protection of its leaves what happens below. As auntie is not favorable to the young man's suit, he has no particular desire to meet her, and consequently is only too glad to accede to the suggestion. They are hardly ensconced in the tree when auntie appears, the shawl draped about her shoulders, and sits her down in the summer house to wait for the squire. The squire is not long in coming, and through the lattice of the summer house he sees his gift being worn by the girl to whom it was sent—at least he thinks so. He approaches softly and speaks low to the figure within the summer house and sees an affirmative nod of her head. Up above them the picture flashes to two young people, looking over the branch of a tree and enjoying rapturously what happens below. Then the squire proposes to the lady wearing his gift and is gently and sweetly allowed to take her hand in acceptance of his offer. Again we look up into the tree and see the young lovers fairly hugging each other in ecstasy at the success of their plan. And then comes the denoument. The squire discovers to whom he has proposed and by whom he has been accepted. He starts back in amazement, but at that instant there is a soft laugh behind him, and being a wise old man, he understands what has happened. The young people come down from the tree and approaching hold out their hands in earnest congratulations. And the squire, well, he looks at them and looks at the lady who is leaning on his breast so fondly. And then being a real sport, even though he is a country squire, he says to himself, "it is not such a bad bargain after all, and I will refuse to let these two youngs scapegraces have the laugh on me." Consequently he takes the extended hands and shakes them warmly. And then there is a quaint little touch for the young lady asks auntie if she may have the youth at her side, and auntie out of the goodness of her heart and willing to share her responsibilities with her new found lord and master, asks him for his consent to the marriage of the young people. He looks at the pretty girl, swallows hard and gives the desired consent.

For pure, roguish fun and wholesome sweetness the comedy is pretty hard to beat, and it is played by a special cast which would do credit to almost any picture. It is a real, solid, sure hit, this little comedy, and everybody will like it and enjoy it.

"BUMPTIOUS TAKES UP AUTOMOBILING."—Once more our jolly little friend Bumptious makes his bow to the audience and follows his experience of papering the parlor, stuffing birds and constructing marvelous aeroplanes to fly through the air, by buying an automobile. Of course, it would be foreign to his character to admit that there was anything about an automobile that he did not know, and he scornfully refuses the instruction offered when the machine is delivered to him. He is even so confident of his own ability that he does not practice in private before inviting his family and friends to take a ride with him. For some reason the machine does not start off promptly when he takes his seat, and does what he thinks ought to produce immediate results. The levers, cranks and so forth fail to start the obstinate auto, and he is obliged to descend and look things over. Then he remembers that he has forgotten to crank the engine, this enlightenment coming from the book of instructions which he condescends to look over. The cranking is not so easy as it looks, and results in his getting a "kick back" and a bad fall. After various experiences of this kind his friends become distrustful and refuse to ride with him. Whereupon he intimates that he will show them what a joy ride really looks like. For some unaccountable reason the machine starts off promptly this time, but it has only gone a few feet when it takes a backward jump and the last we see of it it is speeding away backward up the road, to the amazement of his friends. The following scenes show the exciting experiences which Mr. Bumptious gives himself in the machine, which continues to run backward in spite of all his efforts with lightning speed up hill, down dale and across the country. He runs to the very edge of a bridge and barely escapes tumbling over it by a sudden turn. He dodges a telegraph pole when the machine has run up on to the sidewalk, and finally brings up with a bang against a huge tree, the shock throwing him up against the trunk, where he clings for dear life. When he has descended from this position and rubbed his bruised arms and legs he decides that automobiling is a sport that belongs to someone else and for which his talents are not particularly suited. At this moment a farmer appears leading a little donkey home after a day's work, and Bumptious full of scorn for his despised auto offers to make a trade with the farmer, the donkey for the machine. When the latter is convinced that Bumptious is not crazy he at once accepts the offer and takes his seat in the machine. And then to Bumptious' horror and surprise the machine starts off exactly as it should and the farmer rides off in the distance with perfect ease and contentment, leaving Bumptious standing in the middle of the road holding the bridle of his newly acquired donkey. We next see his arrival, which does not compare favorably with his departure, and which causes his friends much merriment. All of Bumptious' friends and enemies and those who have laughed at his previous exploits appear with him in this picture and again enjoy his discomfort. There is the paper hanger, the two aeronauts and the gum chewing girl who proves his hoodoo whenever she appears.

The fun in this picture is not coarse, the scenery is beautiful and it should prove a very jolly addition to the list of Bumptious' advertures, winning new friends for him and for the Edison short comedies. As in the preceding picture, the action is continuous, there are no waits, and the fun, though fast, is not of the slapstick variety, but contains an element of wholesome humanity which will make it appeal all the more strongly to those who enjoy genuine and good natured fun.

"THE ESTRANGEMENT."—A rare collection of beautiful out-of-door scenes, carefully built into a charming drama of love.

Two lovers, having been for a row, are seen landing from a boat. They wander along the shore and disappear from view. The following scene is the couple now married and in all appearances as fond of each other as before. A lady friend calls and the wife has occasion to leave the room, which occasion the man seizes to declare his love to the friend. His wife returns, catches him in the act, and orders them both from the house. Years elapse, but the love that husband and wife bore towards each other has not abated. Separated as they are happiness is denied them, but one evening, as if led by fate, the footsteps of both are directed towards the shore where they spent so many happy evenings. The man recognizes his wife, so much older, approaches her and begs forgiveness, which, after a very weak resistance is given.

POSTERS Now Made in Four Colors

We successively see the bridge over the Vistula at Warsaw. A regiment of Cossacks maneuvering. The Lazienki castle and a theatre in the open air. The statue of Jean Sobieski, King of Poland, who died at Villanov, in 1696, one of the greatest heroes of the XVIIth century.

Villanov castle built under Jean III. Sobieski is the ancient summer residence of the Kings of Poland. At last, we see Bison in the Bieloveje forest.

"REFUSING A MANSION."—This drama, full of beautiful situations, abounding in pretty incident and careful acting, with sea views of wonderful beauty and charming effect, affords a look into the past and introduce people and costumes and situations out of the heroic stories of fairy-tale days.

THE STORY.

ONCE UPON A TIME THERE WAS A PRINCE.

Under this sub-title we are brought into the beautiful little seaside kingdom over which the good and handsome prince holds sway. We are just remarking upon the tastefulness of his palace and grounds when he appears upon the drawbridge with his squire. With them we journey along a well-kept road by the sea until, on a point of rocks, we see a fair damsel washing garments and note the prince is interested. He goes to her and we learn that

HE IS IN LOVE WITH THE PEASANT GIRL.

Because of his wealth she rejects him. We are forced to return to the palace with the help of many vassals.

Now on his return she listens to him, his honeyed words soon win her heart, ere long he coaxes her within the walled town in which his palace stands. Expecting to give his choice great pleasure, he reveals himself, but is surprised to learn she is even more angry than upon their first meeting. She forthwith leaves him and his court.

The poor maiden consoles herself with the thought: "If he deceived me before we were wed, what would he have done later?".

"BUYING A MOTHER-IN-LAW."—"All the World Loves a Lover," is doubtless true, but our lover proves more a target for laughter than for affection.

The endeavors of a lover to get near the object of his affections are humorously shown. Owing to his very weak financial position he is not allowed the privilege of calling, and he is first of all seen entering the house in a garb of a lady to answer an advertisement for a music teacher.

Once in, he allows his impetuosity to run away with him, with the result that he very quickly finds himself out again. However, he is not yet defeated, and devises other means of entrance, but with the same result, till a kindly relative, dying and leaving him a trifle of the great necessity of life, all doors are opened to the progressive young lover.

"THE RIVAL SERENADERS."—A rollicking comedy of the sunny, music-loving people of Spain.

This is a comic picture with a Spanish setting. An old man serenades a fair damsel, much to her disgust.

Her accepted lover devises a plan for geting rid of the old fellow's unwelcome visits, and impersonating the lady, flings a pail of water over him when he comes to play beneath the window. A love token in the shape of a bunch of flowers which the old man

LUBIN MFG. CO.

"THE DISTRICT ATTORNEY'S TRIUMPH."—The District Attorney is a young man, alert, fearless and without an ounce of romantic sentiment in his make-up—just the sort of man to be attracted by a gentle, dreamy girl to whom King Arthur's Knights are far more fascinating than the serge-coated men of to-day. To her the day of romance set with the passing of the big wigs and knickerbocker; and when the District Attorney tells her of his love and asks her hand, she confesses that she likes him, but that she has her heart set on marrying a hero. The lover knows that he is no personage from a romantic novel, and is content to abide his time. He is busy with a murder trial and his eloquence and the careful preparation of his case bring about a conviction. Even in open court the ex-convict makes an attack upon the attorney for the people and is dragged away declaring that he will kill the official. There seems little likelihood that a man just convicted of murder can carry out such a threat, but the man escapes from his guards while being carried to the penitentiary where the death sentence is about to terminate his evil life, and the police are hurriedly dispatched to recapture him. Knowing nothing of the escape, the District Attorney takes the girl for a canoe ride, and when a storm comes up they seek refuge in the very hut in which the convict has found concealment. Taking a gun from the wall, the murderer is about to add to his heavy score, when he sees the police outside. A shot would bring them to the hut, and so, waiting until they have passed, the convict forces the young Attorney to enter the boat and follows after. With quick wit the young official overturns the boat, holds his captor's head under water until he ceases to resist, and then drags him ashore to turn him over to the police. He is not conscious of having done a brave deed, but when the girl reads the story she decides that, after all, there are heroes of to-day as brave as the ones who used to ride in armor in the good old days of romance.

"THE DUCK FARM."—Taken on the famous Duck Farm at Allentown, Pa., the short industrial is a capital condensed history of the life of the duck from the instant the duckling breaks the shell until it lands in the cooling room, plucked and ready for the market. The pictures of the hatching are unusually clear and distinct and the entire subject is notable for photographic excellence and placement of the point of view. Ducks of all ages are shown by the hundreds, for this is one of the largest duck farms in the country, if not in the world. A comedy finish adds to the attractiveness of the subject.

"SHORTY AT THE SHORE."—Shorty is a gardener, and a pretty bad one at that. To make matters worse, he works for a fussy family and they are forever finding fault with the manner in which he does his work. Shorty's trampish pal suggests a way to obtain a vacation, and writes Shorty a letter announcing that he is heir to a fortune. The scheme works better than was expected, for the letter is opened by the boss in mistake, and that scheming employer decides that he will marry his none too lovely daughter to the gardener before he tells him of his good fortune. They suddenly become most amiable toward Shorty, and decide that he must have a vacation at Atlantic City. Shorty is willing to take a vacation anywhere outside of jail, and soon they are started on the trip. It is a pretty serious drain on the old man's purse, for Shorty is expensive in his likes and dislikes, and whenever there is any change he quietly pockets it or hands it to his chum, who has turned up on the boardwalk and joins the party. Only the thought that Shorty will pay back presently consoles the schemers, and when they discover that the letter was a hoax Shorty realizes that it will be well for him to go away from there quickly. He starts down the boardwalk, but lames his ankle, and the rest of the chase is continued in a roller chair from which the rightful owner is dumped with scant ceremony. The picture is rattling good comedy from start to finish, and the chase in the roller chair a real novelty.

KALEM CO.

"TRUE TO HIS TRUST."—This is a Kalem Indian production, and, although it abounds in thrilling situation, its principal motive is one which will appeal to all who love children. The plot centers around a little pioneer family consisting of the father, mother, a little boy seven years of age and a little baby one year old. While the father and mother are away from the cabin working in the fields the little boy is left to look after the baby. Some Blackfoot raiders happen by, but the little boy sees them in time to find a novel hiding place. He puts the baby in the well bucket and lowers himself with the baby to the bottom of the well. In the meantime the Indians ransack the cabin, loot it, after setting it on fire, depart. Father and mother who have heard the outcries and seen the flames from the distance unhitch their horses from the plow and ride to the fort for help. A squad of soldiers ride back with them and after a sharp skirmish with the Indians the cabin is found in ruins. There is no trace of the little ones and the distracted parents, of course, think that the Indians have either murdered them or taken them away. Finally however, the father hears the little boy calling, and after a search the cries are located and the two youngsters are drawn up from the bottom of the well safe and sound.

A very novel touch is given the action by an insert showing the little boy and baby at the bottom of the well, while the Indian raiders are busy destroying the cabin.

"THE PERVERSITY OF FATE."—The Kalem Company producers of late have shown a decided leaning toward Canadian themes and the success of their earlier productions has brought forth one feature very pretentious "The Perversity of Fate." The story of "The Perversity of Fate" starts in the United States. A young girl, who is the secretary of a wealthy manufacturer, is burdened with the care of an invalid mother. The lover, a young engineer, with his career yet to be made, decides to go to Canada and work out his fortune in the wilderness. Before he has been away for a few months the doctors decide that the girl's mother must be taken to a warmer climate in order to save her life. The girl is unable to take care of this extra expense out of her meager earnings and in her distress turns to her employer. The employer offers to marry the girl and take care of herself and her mother. His offer is accepted.

Several years pass by and the lover who has gone to Canada has learned of the marriage of his sweetheart and in his bitterness takes up with a young Indian squaw, whom he marries.

There comes a day, however, when the wealthy manufacturer dies, leaving the young widow in a position where she believes herself free to claim her first love. She goes to Canada, finds him in the wilderness with his Indian wife and, although she uses every inducement and wile, he is too much of a man to desert his Indian wife and the young widow is forced to turn back heart sore and broken over 'The Perversity of Fate," which has come between her and her love.

The scenic embellishments of this production are particularly beautiful and the Canadian scenes full of primitive splendor.

VITAGRAPH CO.

"DAISIES."—They say that love is blind, and too frequently it is to everything but its own passion, therefore it is not unusual when Harry objects to May going to college and breaking into their courtship; furthermore, he declares that it makes girls mannish and strong-minded. We see May and Harry seated in a field of daisies, and just previous to the above discussion May is trying to prove Harry's love by the daisy test of "He loves me; he loves me not." He places a daisy locket about her neck in affirmation of his love.

When May reasserts her determination to go to college notwithstanding his objections, they quarrel and he departs in a huff. May confides in her chum, Anne, with whom she is going to college, and Anne advises her to return Harry's engagement ring and locket and put an end to his interference. May sends back the ring but retains the locket, telling him that she lost it.

May and Anne are at college and Harry has time to think over his separation from May, and indulge in hunting and other pastime in an effort to forget his loneliness. The girls have successfully passed their examination for graduation and Commencement Day is near at hand. May wants to send an invitation to Harry to attend the exercises, but does not want it to appear that she is really anxious to have him come. Her chum suggests that May send an announcement without signing any name.

This plan is agreed upon, and the day of the diplomas, planting the tree and the "daisy chain" arrives, and with it comes Harry, who watches the different ceremonies with much interest, wistfully glancing here and there to locate May. The graduates pass in procession carrying the "daisy chain"; after they have gone by Harry accidentally comes across May. She is surprised and acts somewhat "offish." He holds out his hand to her and she comes to him, and, strolling away from the rest of the people, he asks her if she still loves him, and tells her of his regret for interposing opposition to her college experience.

She then confesses she still loves him, and, taking the "daisy locket," which she has kept and always cherished, she plucks a daisy from the field and, picking off the petals, repeats: "He loves me; he loves me not," at which he clasps her arm and says: "I do with all my heart."

"BACK TO NATURE."—It has happened before, but not exactly in this way. A chauffeur falls in love with his employer's daughter, and she ignores him by her haughtiness and indifference. She is bored by his attentions. Later the employer, a man of affairs, is appointed Consul-General to Australia.

The chauffeur goes along with the family, and they are now on board a steamer on their way to Australia. A storm arises and the vessel is wrecked. Everybody seems helpless to have themselves but the chauffeur, who, with his brain and brawn, succeeds in getting the Consul-General and his family safely to shore. They are sadly lacking in clothing and essentials, and again the chauffeur's quick wit comes into play. He makes them comfortable, cheers them up in every way and starts in to build a hut and secure provisions, showing the superiority of mental and muscular attainments when it comes to an emergency, and he proves himself master of the situation, winning the respect and admiration of all.

The Consul's daughter, gradually realizing that in the chauffeur there dwells the real manly courage and courtesy which are characteristic of true heroes, cannot resist a growing appreciation of his worth. After living for many days in this primitive fashion

The beauty of the gypsy maiden and the alluring life of the wanderers' camp are well known to all readers. The incident we have selected for our story presents fascinating situations that will make this production exceptionally entertaining.

a ship is seen on the horizon. At once the chauffeur raises signals and attracts attention to the island and the wrecked party.

The captain of the vessel steers near shore and sends boats which take the wrecked Consul-General and his party to the ship, and they are all put aboard bound for Australia. En route to their destination the chauffeur again proposes to the Consul's daughter, and this time she accepts him. The young couple tell the father, who is somewhat surprised and opposed to the match; but he consents, feeling assured that in the chauffeur his daughter will have a protector as well as a husband, who will always show himself equal to the occasion, no matter what may be the circumstances.

"UNDER THE OLD APPLE TREE."—The peddler, burdened with his pack, trudging along, weary and footsore, holding his little motherless child by the hand, stops under a shading tree and bids the little girl, who is no less tired than himself, to sit under the tree while he tries to dispose of his goods and he will return for her in a short time. The child falls asleep. The father, in crossing a roadway, is struck by an automobile and taken to a hospital unconscious. The little girl awakens from her nap, and when she finds herself alone, begins to cry and starts running in a frightened daze, calling for her father.

The children of a widow, a big-hearted farmwife, are playing under an old apple tree. The peddler's child in passing by is heard crying. One of the children hears her as he is standing on the ladder at the top of the wall, and he and his sister bring the poor child to their good mother and she takes the little one into her home as one of her own.

The peddler recovers from his injuries, is discharged from the hospital and goes in search of his child. While passing under the old apple tree where the children are playing, where his child found friends and a home, he sees the apples hanging from the branches and climbs the wall to help himself to some. When he gains the top of the wall the children are again seen playing under the old apple tree, this time increased by the presence of the peddler's own child. He is astonished and delighted, and unhesitatingly jumps down among the youngsters and clasps his little daughter to his bosom.

The child tells her little friends about her papa, and they all take him to the good mother, who gives him a position to help her in running her farm. The next scene is some time after the last one, and it shows the former peddler carrying the children on his back, for he is now their step-father, while the kindly farmwife is now the step-mother of his child. A scene of real happiness in accord with our wishes and just as we like to see a good story end.

"THE COUNT THAT COUNTED."—Jimmy Little, a reporter for the Daily Howl, is in love. The object of his affections this time is the pretty Dorothy Alexander, daughter of a millionaire, and this is the unfortunate part of it, because Dorothy's father suspicions the report of wanting the millions more than Dorothy.

However, nothing could be furthermost in the mind of Jimmy, and on the afternoon our story opens, having received a note from Dorothy to call immediately and ask her father, he leaves the office and takes a car to Dorothy's home.

Dorothy and he fearfully approach the old gentleman in his study, but he mercilessly denounces Jimmy as a fortune hunter, and in the end the unlucky suitor is dragged to the door by the butler and pitched out on his ear.

Jimmy refuses to accept defeat, scrawls a brief note to Dorothy inviting her to elope with him and sends it in by the maid. Dorothy answers that he must first win her father's consent, and father, coming into the room as she writes, adds a postscript to the effect, "and if you ever do you can have her."

Jack Horning is interested in Jimmy's affair, and when Jimmy confesses his predicament to him, the star reporter immediately hits upon a lovely scheme. Jimmy, he announces, will masquerade as an Italian count and will, with promises of title and fame for the daughter of the soap maker, obtain the latter's consent.

Due publicity is given the "advent to our city of his lordship, Count De Soakum," and the article, concocted by young Horning, adds further that the count bears a letter of introduction to Mr. James Alexander, the millionaire soap maker.

That evening Jimmy, masquerading as the count, calls on Mr. Alexander, and is given a fine reception. The old gentleman not only gives his check of $10,000 to the happy couple, but also an iron-clad consent to marriage.

Dorothy's father and mother then leave the young people to themselves and during their absence Jimmy removes his false moustache and goatee. This is a sad mistake, however, as a moment later father and mother return and Jimmy, in endeavoring to get his facial trimmings restored to his face, sticks the moustache over one eye and the goatee on the side of his cheek.

However, Jimmy and Dorothy win cut in the end when the reporter flashes the written agreement signed by father himself, "and if you ever do you can have her."

"THE DUMB HALF-BREED'S DEFENSE."—Nellie Nixon, the half-breed wife of a drunken miner, and her brother, a mute, are waiting the evening homecoming of Nixon. His lateness means that he is drinking up his salary at the "Silver Dollar" saloon and fixing himself into an ugly frame of mind so he may properly abuse his half-Indian wife.

He is very much intoxicated when he enters, and reeling into a chair at the table pounds loudly for his supper. The frightened girl and her brother hasten to do his bidding, but their placid and meek submission and willingness to do for him only serves to make him more irritable, and finally rising with a scowl he aims a kick at the mute and ends in throwing the boy out of the house. Then he bolts the door and turns on his wife, his eyes wild with maniacal deviltry.

When the half-breed mute rises painfully and looks in at the window a thrill of horror shakes him at the scene inside. On the floor lays his sister, while the big brute of a husband, his black hands around her throat, is slowly choking her to death. The half-breed, with a cry of rage, puts his shoulders to the door, but it refuses to yield; then seizing a heavy timber he rams an opening in a lower panel and crawls into the shack.

Nixon sees him, and the two men are on their feet facing each other. Next they grapple and struggle about the room. The boy weakens and falls back against the table, but his hands close on a sharp butcher knife and with an effort he forces up the other man's arm and jabs the knife, hilt deep, into the man's breast.

When the half-breed lad reels blindly out of the shack the dripping knife is still in his hands. Not knowing whether to go, he runs madly down a path to a neighboring creek, then pauses when he finds he is still carrying the knife. Two cow-punchers, hidden behind a boulder near by, see the mute hurl the knife from him, and when he flies on they come from their hiding place, take the knife and hurry back to Nixon's shack. Their fears are confirmed when they find the lifeless bodies of Nixon and his half-breed wife.

An hour later the sheriff is notified and a posse is put on the trail of the mute half-breed. A lively chase and he is overtaken, dragged into a saddle and hurried to the county jail.

Shortly after the capture the sheriff notifies the district attorney of the murder and capture of the murderer, and the young assistant district attorney is sent to interview the boy. The boy is fearful and tries desperately to explain. The young attorney is finally convinced of the boy's innocence, and slapping him assuringly on the back, returns to the district attorney's office. Here he begs his chief to give the boy an interview, and upon the district attorney's consent the boy is brought in.

Unable to write or speak, there is a tremendous handicap placed upon the unfortunate boy. However, in pantomime he explains to the attorneys how the husband came home drunk, how he choked and kicked him and his sister, and finally how his sister was murdered. The rest is explained, and to the complete satisfaction of the district attorney, who gives him his liberty.

NEW LAWS FOR WHEELING, W. VA.

In order that the patrons of the Wheeling, W. Va., motion picture theatres, be more fully protected from fire, Deputy State Fire Marshall Kindelberger and Fire Chief Altmeyer are now preparing an ordinance they will present to the city council for its approval.

This ordinance will be similar to that of New York City, in that it will require proprietors of motion picture houses to employ only operators that have passed the required examinations. These operators must be American born and must show their certificate before they can go to work.

The picture theatres in Wheeling are now in an excellent condition as far as fire escapes and galvanized protected operator's booths are concerned.

the news at a glance. A printed list is given of the regular releases for the month of August, also of the specials, in the latest issue of the Guide, which is very valuable for reference.

K. W. Linn reports that the demand for Pathe American subjects still increases and that the cry is for more of them. Mr. Linn was out of the city for a few days last week on business for his firm. He returned Wednesday.

The Selig publicity department has just devised a neat and effective plan for aiding exhibitors in advertising the exhibition of the forthcoming great Knights Templar special parade and drill film. An artistic postal card, bearing the colors and insignia of the Knights Templar and the legend of their thirty-first encampment here, will be provided exhibiting managers free of cost. These postals are intended to be mailed by managers to their customers, space being reserved on the stamp side for a short note apprising the recipient of the date when the Selig special film of the great parade will be shown.

Canada's crack Templar band marched with St. Bernard's commandery of Chicago in the great Knights Templar parade last week. St. Bernard's is Chicago's veteran trophy winner of prize drills, so that the combination formed by them in the line of march was one that could hardly be beaten throughout the marshalled host of knights.

C. M. Walker, owner and manager of the Orpheum theatre, Plymouth, Ind., was a visitor at the General Film Co.'s offices last week. The Orpheum is a new theatre which was finished a short time ago. The capacity is 350 people; the service two reels daily, and moving pictures only are used, supplemented by illustrated songs. Mr. Walker is county auditor of his home county and is a thorough business man. He is a native born Plymouthian and has lived in his home city all his life. For some time he has been attracted by the moving picture business and made up his mind to build the Orpheum. Knowing very little about the quality of films, he started in with "independent" service, but threw it overboard after a week's trial, as he found the pictures lacking both in quality and variety. The General Film Co. of Chicago is now booking his films.

The Saxe Amusement Co. of Milwaukee has just completed a new theatre, the Crystal, on Second street, at an outlay of $25,000. The new house is a handsome structure with glazed brick front and beautiful interior decorations. The Decorators Supply Co., of Chicago, designed and built the front and installed the decorations. The Crystal will run five acts of vaudeville and one reel of pictures daily. The admission is 10 cents. As will be remembered this company has two of the finest and most expensive moving picture theatres in the country—the Princess and the Modjeska, both of which run moving pictures only.

John B. Rock, western manager of the Vitagraph Co., tells me that the demand for "Uncle Tom's Cabin" is really remarkable for a subject containing nearly 3,000 feet of film. The first part was released July 26, the second July 29, and the third July 30.

Mr. and Mrs. Eugene Cline and daughter of this city, left last week for a three weeks' visit in eastern cities and water resorts. They will make their headquarters in the Imperial hotel while in New York City.

While in the Vitagraph office in the Schiller building one day last week, John B. Rock showed me a remarkable photograph which gives a panoramic view of the Reno arena of the Jeffries-Johnson contest, in which 19,000 faces appear. The photograph is 12 feet long by 9½ inches wide and was made before the contest began, being copyrighted by the Jeffries-Johnson Co. "John's" handsome visage is easily discerned in the sea of faces; and, in the picture, he sports a special policeman's badge on his manly bosom.

The Melies product is showing increasing popularity. This is especially true of the Southwestern subjects, both dramatic and comedy, so Mr. Rock says. He states also that the extra orders for August, both of the Vitagraph and Melies products promise to be very large.

Geo. H. Price, one of the oldest, if not the oldest, moving picture operators in Chicago, both stereopticon and moving pictures, called at The Film Index Chicago office last week. Mr. Price was one of the first operators to run the old Ahmet machine, the Magniscope. He has been operating ever since then, either traveling on the road illustrating lectures or working locally in the same line. Mr. Price has operated all makes of machines in his time and keeps himself thoroughly in touch with all the modern improvements. He knows all the old-timers in the business in Chicago, and, while he is still content to serve as an operator, he does not begrudge others the more material successes which they have made. His son, Henry T. Price, is superintendent of the Mackintosh Stereopticon Co. of this city.

J. E. Sherwood, a member of the firm of Sherwood and McWilliams, which controls a circuit of theatres in Wisconsin and Illinois, attended the Knights Templar conclave in Chicago last week. Mr. Sherwood states that the summer business has been very fair in Madison, in the Fuller and Fair Play houses.

F. L. Koppelberger, owner and manager of the Majestic theatre, La Crosse, Wis., was a visitor at the General Film Co.'s offices, this city, last week. He will reopen the Majestic, August 15.

Manager Radeke, of the Princess theatre, Kankakee, Ills., was seen at the General Film Co.'s offices last week. Mr. Radeke tells me that his house has been running all summer to fair business and he looks for unusualy fine business this fall. Moving pictures only are used at the Princess, and a fine class of patrons attend.

SEEKING PICTURE ENGAGEMENTS

Lubin Company Says Many Prominent Artists are Now Glad to Appear in Motion Plays

Even the enlarged company did not prove to be sufficiently strong for the new Lubin productions and negotiations are now pending whereby a number of important engagements will be closed within the next week or ten days. Players who a few years ago would have regarded as an insult the proposition that they pose for pictures now seek the opportunity and applications are numerous.

A very well known leading man now playing in a Broadway production has a mania for motion pictures and on a recent Sunday took in every picture show on the "Bowery" at Coney Island. In a letter to a friend in the Lubin company he wrote that "Wifie's Mamma" was not only the most favored picture along the famous street of amusements, but one that gave him real enjoyment. "Wifie's Mamma" was something of an Ugly Duckling in its early studio days, but it has scored a lasting hit wherever shown and a splendid example of smart comedy.

The newest to float into the Lubin scenario department was a man who wrote that he could make a capital picture of his method of rendering persons immune from mosquitos. He was rather vague as to his method, though he was willing to demonstrate before any money was paid, but he was very decided as to the method of showing. Six thousand feet of film was to be the display for which an admission fee of one dollar was to be charged, the audiences being pledged to secrecy though given permission to make use of the idea themselves.

Orders have been placed for another motor bus for the use of the Lubin stock company, it having been found that a single bus works to greater advantage than the touring cars used to supplement the bus equipment. The busses attract almost as much attention as a circus bandwagon as they slip along the Philadelphia streets ladened with the players in make up and a lot of properties stored in the baggage boot in the rear.

There is always an insistent demand for short comedies and the Lubin release for August 25th will carry a doube bill, "The Anarchistic Grip" and "The Dream Bill," the latter introducing many trick effects. "Cowboy Chivalry," a Western romance, precedes them on the 22d.

ENLARGING THE FAMILY THEATRE.

Before returning home, C. Peterson, manager of the Unique and Family theatres, Tamaqua, Pa., made a social call at the office of the Film Index, Wednesday afternoon.

Mr. Peterson, who is enlarging the Family theatre, has been in New York several days, purchasing supplies. The house, which formerly seated 240 persons, will in the future seat over 500. A new fireproof machine booth is being installed and every device for public safety will be adopted.

The Unique is a summer theatre and seats about 800.

Business in Tamaqua, has been exceedingly brisk all summer. Both houses have been drawing well during the hot weather and business bids fair for the fall and winter.

When the Family theatre is completed it will be the largest amusement place in Tamaqua.

AMONG THE EXHIBITORS

What the Picture Men are Doing Everywhere

The E. F. Hardwicke building on Main street, El Paso, Texas, which is being remodeled for a motion picture theatre, is about completed. Henry Nimitz, of Artesia, will be the manager.

Joseph Dangello is erecting a one-story brick motion picture theatre at Twelfth avenue and Sixteenth street, Brooklyn, N. Y. The house will cost $4,000.

The Syndicate Theatre Company, of St. Louis, Mo., received a permit July 27, to erect a motion picture theatre at 114 North Sixth street.

A motion picture machine has been installed in the the Grove clubhouse, Far Rockaway, N. Y.

A new motion picture show will soon be opened at the Princess theatre, Decorah, Ia.

O. J. Sybert has purchased the Grand theatre of Marietta, O., from Capt. E. E. Eisenbarth.

The opening of the Hippodrome, Lancaster, Pa., July 26, was one of the events of the summer. The big amusement palace was crowded at the opening performance and has been ever since.

L. L. Westerland, of Chelsea, Mich., will open a motion picture theatre at Millington, Mich.

Gillard Bros. have sold the Bijou Theatre on South street, Marquette, Mich., to Lloyd Dorsey, Grand Rapids.

An open-air picture and vaudeville theatre has been opened at Aero Park, North Adams, Mass., under the management of Daniel Young.

"Betty," that well known Pathe comedy, had the audiences at Manhattan theatre, New York City, laughing at last week's performances.

Hopkins, Milgram and Gardiner are having a fireproof roof put on their Philadelphia motion picture theatre.

M. F. Beiger, of Fort Wayne, Ind., has sold the Red Mill theatre of Columbia City to S. H. Randall. Mr. Randall was formerly the picture machine operator.

The Cook & Harris motion picture show gave a performance in the town hall at Morrisville, Vt., July 29. The performance was under the auspices of the Ladies' Aid Society of the Methodist Church.

A new motion picture theatre has been opened at Bull and Jones' lane, Savannah, Ga. The house, which is one of the most modern, will run only the best pictures.

C. B. Cowles has just purchased a new Edison picture machine for his Theatorium at Waverly, N. Y.

Motion pictures will be shown nightly at the Highland Park Casino, Richmond, Va.

The Majestic theatre, Grand Rapids, Mich., is being thoroughly cleaned before the fall season opens. Among the new improvements will be the tiled floor in front of ticket office and ladies' room.

Such films as "The Stepdaughter," "More of Betty's Pranks" and "Pete Has A Good Time" continue to draw large audiences at the Duquense theatre, Pittsburg, Pa. Although the house changes its films daily there are often many requests to hold certain films over.

The Valatie Opera House, Valatien, N. Y., will open with motion pictures, the early part of September. The house will run the best and latest pictures, thus assuring its patrons of the latest subjects on the market.

Jackson, Ala., is soon to have a new motion picture theatre. Lock Bolen, purchasing agent for the J. A. Savage, is now in that city looking over different sites for a house.

C. E. Haas, of Derry, Pa., and R. P. Hodgson, of Greenburg, have rented a large room in the Eiseman building, Latrobe, Pa.,and are having a new front put in, preparatory to opening a nickelodeon.

Work on the new motion picture theatre, Brighton, Mass., is progressing rapidly. W. H. Woods, the proprietor, expects to open the house early in September.

E. J. Myrick, manager of the Bijou theatre, Missoula, Mont., left July 25 for a trip over the Oregon Short Line Railway. During his trip he looked over several picture houses with the intention of purchasing one that suits his fancy.

It is rumored that there will be two new picture theatres started in Williamsburg, Pa., before the winter season opens.

L. D. Bates, manager of the motion picture theatre, at Quincy, Mass., has engaged Ralph D. Hawkes and Miss Anna Hammond as soloist and Miss Nellie Tower as pianist.

A motion picture theatre that will cost $100,000 is to be erected at Lawrence, Mass., before the winter season opens.

PEARSON'S THEATRE, SOMERVILLE, MASS.

Decorated for the occasion of visit of President Taft, July 4, 1910. Seating capacity, 650. Scene shows children waiting for admission. Arthur G. Pearson, lessee and manager.

The skating rink, Gowanda, N. Y., has been turned into a motion picture theatre. Performances will be given Monday, Wednesday and Saturday nights.

Motion pictures as a means of improving morals in the most modern manner was discussed by a delegation of men from the motion picture theatres of Oakland, Cal., who were greatly agitated over the new censorship introduced in the City Council by Councilman L. N. Cobblestick.

A motion picture theatre was started in the town hall, Port Huron, Dich., July 27.

At a meeting of the selectmen July 27, motion picture licenses were granted to the opera house, Palmer, Mass., and the Pastime Moving Picture Palace, Three Rivers.

J. B. Maginder is planning to put a motion picture show in one of the rooms of the Arcade Building, Jacksonville, Fla.

Managers Austin & Barlow, of the opera house, Norwood, N. Y., will soon turn that playhouse into a motion picture theatre.

Work of remodeling the old opera house building and transforming into a motion picture theatre is causing the inhabitants of Hudson, Mass., to sit up and take notice.

Plans for remodeling the Stowe motion picture theatre, Main street, Chiculie, Mass., are under way. When the plans are completed the building will be extended 40 feet.

William R. Gaylord, of Oxford, Mass., is planning the opening of a new motion picture theatre in Marion, Ind.

The motion picture theatre Wonderland, Carthage, N. Y., has been sold to R. H. La Fare, proprietor of the Mystic. Mr. La Fare took charge Aug. 1.

RECENT SLIDE RELEASES

Synopsis of Production Issued by the Leading Song and Novelty Slide Makers.

DE WITT C. WHEELER.

"I'M A LUCKY BOY TO HAVE A GIRL LIKE YOU."—Words by Stanley Murphy; music by Percy Wenrich; published by Jerome H. Remick, New York. It is a pretty story. Not only at the wedding nuptials, but after many happy years of married life the husband feels ever lucky to have for a wife the one he possesses. The slides tell the story in a quaint way, giving many phases of country life and true love upon the farm.

"WHEN THE SUMMER DAYS ARE GONE."—Words by Leo Curley; music by Geo. Christie; published by Witmark & Sons. While the summer days are not yet gone, this song may seem unseasonable, but it was so good the publishers couldn't wait, so published it ahead of time. The slides by Wheeler certainly do show some fine selections of scenery by him. It would seem that all the beauties of nature full bloom in the summertime are pent up in this little set. Seashore, mountains, rivers, lakes and woods are all here, beautifully colored and charming to look at.

"BAND, BAND, BAND."—Words by Seymour Brown; music by Nat D. Ayer; published by J. H. Remick & Co. As the name implies, this is a novelty song, written in a novel way to a novel idea, and shows progressive ideas in song writing. The slides are one of Wheeler's best comedy sets. He shows us a very beautiful girl leading a band around the streets. The costumes of the players are, of course, brilliant and dazzling. The coloring is exquisite, and there are plenty of novelties. But best of all is the model. It is worth getting the set to see her.

"I LOVE YOU, DEAR."—Words by Blair Leyton; composed and published by Sydney P. Harris, Detroit, N. Y. A beautiful set of lyrics in the true love strain, set to a fine melody. This is one of the love ballads that are so difficult to illustrate. But Wheeler makes the slides interesting no matter what the song is. This is an example.

"WHAT IS THE WORLD WITHOUT YOU."—Words and music by J. Hayden Clarendon; published by J. H. Remick & Co. A semi-high class love ballad, which is written in a popular vein and is sure to please any class of audience. The illustrations are a well thought out series of poses, which, executed with the well known skill of De Witt Wheeler form a very pleasing set of slides. Scenic effects, rich in nature, are also present in numbers.

"ONLY A CHAIN OF DAISIES."—Words by Fred. J. Barnes; music by Raymond White; published by Kominsky Music Co., Troy, N. Y. One of the annual daisy songs which always please. The lyrics are seasonable in nature and the music all that can be desired. Here's a set of slides in which some very cute children play an important part. Slides in which children appear always make a hit when the youngsters are posed correctly. The natural grace and charm of youth is proverbial. This set should be especially well adaptable to houses frequented largely by women and children.

"ON A SUNDAY EVENING IN THE SUMMERTIME."—By Edward O'Connor; published by Grinnel Bros., Detroit, Mich. As the title would imply, this is a typical summer love ballad, but treated in a novel manner, and is bound to be popular. There are very many different ways in which different people spend Sunday evenings. Wheeler has depicted in this set of slides the way a certain young couple spend theirs. Sometimes moonlight walks, boat rides, excursions, etc. All beautifully colored and all extremely interesting. Don't miss "On a Sunday Evening in the Summertime."

SCOTT & VAN ALTENA.

"LOVE BEAMS."—Words and music by Luella Lockwood Moore; published by Jos. W. Stern & Co. This is a beautiful little love ballad that tells of a young Venetian couple who fall desperately in love with one another. The illustrations show the pair on the canals of Venice, beautiful gondolas, pomp and gaiety. The pretty little model in this instance is she who posed for the slides of Scott & Van Altena's "Espanolia Sprance." She is dark and beautiful, fitting well the part of a Venetian daughter. The male model, too, is just the one for this kind of a song. Coloring is beautiful and the scenic effects charming and wonderful.

"DEAR MAYME, I LOVE YOU."—Words by Irving Berlin; music by Ted Snyder; published by the Ted Snyder Co., New York. These two authors need no recommendation. Their many successes have been heard by all and any new composition by them is looked for eagerly. Slides by Scott & Van Altena form another of their many novelty sets. They are new and interesting, illustrating well this little love waltz.

"I'LL BUILD A CASTLE IN LOVELAND."—Music by Arthur W. Lange; published by the Royal Music Publishing Co., New York. A very pretty ballad illustrated by very beautiful pictures. The novel and color effects are unique and characteristic of the Scott & Van Altena kind and seen in but few other slides. Who wouldn't build a castle in Loveland for a little girl like this one.

"YOU'RE MINE, ALL MINE."—Lyrics by Richard H. Buck; music by Theodore Morse; published by The Theodore Morse Publishing Co. A fine set of lyrics set to a catchy tune such as Theodore Morse usually writes. The slides are without doubt some of Scott & Van Altena's best. They contain beautiful moonlight effects, rare coloring, beautiful scenery and handsome models—all that could be desired in a set of slides. If the song lacked anything to make a success the slides themselves would certainly make it a hit.

"I'M BUGS ABOUT YOU."—Words by Victor Smalley and Jack Drislane; music by Geo. W. Meyer; published by Haviland Publishing Co. A novelty song, using a popular slang phrase as the title. A cute little girl and boy are the principals in the fine set of illustrations. Decidedly novel "bug effects" here and there make the set a very unique one. The slides ending each chorus are most cleverly carried out, and show what this firm can do in the novelty line.

"YUCATANA MAN."—By S. R. Henry, composer of "Peter Piper," "Down at the Huskin' Bee," "Ive Got the Time, Ive Got the Place," etc. Henry is well known among song writers, and his latest piece, "Yucatana," is bright, cheery and snappy. The slides are without doubt the best produced by Scott & Van Altena since their wonderful illustrations for the "Espanolia Prance." They are somewhat of the same nature—Southern scenes—and are full of the romance proverbial of warm climated countries. Besides the usual number of clever novelties the set contains many tropical scenes that will delight old and young alike.

"LUCY-ANNA-LOU."—Words by Edward Madden; music by Gus Edwards, the writers of "By the Light of the Silvery Moon." This, their latest song, has also to do with the moon, which fact may cause many to go "luny" over it as they did over the former. The slides are one fine set of moonlight scenes posed by two as graceful young persons as we have ever had the pleasure to look at. They seem to "get right in" to the thing and make the set full of human interest. The soft but rich coloring of the set, too, makes it a very attractive one.

"PLANNING."—Another of Gus Edwards' charming melodies set in waltz style to the lyrics of Will D. Cobb. Published by Gus Edwards. Here's one of those all-novelty sets that Scott & Van Altena know so well how to produce. Each slide a novelty, each novelty a winner. The models, too, are winners. When planning, plan "Planning" or your program will not be complete.

ALFRED L. SIMPSON.

"ALL THAT I ASK OF YOU IS LOVE."—By Edgar Selden and Herbert H. Ingraham, author of "Roses Bring Dreams of You," "You're the Ideal of My Dreams," "Let Me Waltz Home Sweet Home With You Just for Old Times' Sake"; published by Shapiro. This is going to be one of the ballad hits of the year. After all, heart interest is the thing; and no one can escape the touch of sentiment conveyed by this delightful song as sung by Frank Morrel at Hammerstein's Theatre. The slides Simpson has sent out for this song are beautiful. His models are well chosen and extremely good looking, the photography is excellent and the coloring beyond criticism.

"MY OLD LADY."—Lyric by Vincent P. Bryan; music by Gus Edwards, composer of "School Days" and "Sunbonnet Sue"; published by Gus Edwards. A mother's song and one of the most beautiful ballads ever written. These slides are really remarkable for their beauty, coloring and artistic merit. They are of the standard of excellence which Simpson always requires. This set is one of his best.

"WHISTLE AND I'LL WAIT FOR YOU."—Words by Earle C. Jones; music by George W. Meyers; published by Shapiro. A bright, snappy song introduced by the clever little English comedienne, Daisy Lloyd. Simpson has produced for this song a most pleasing set of illustrations, clever in conception with plenty of variety and novel effects.

"AS THE YEARS ROLL ON."—Words by Edgar Selden, author of "All That I Ask of You Is Love"; music by Melville J. Gideon, author of the "Yankiana Rag"; published by Shapiro. This is a beautiful ballad of the higher class.. The lyric is of great poetical merit, and the music is truly classic. Simpson has done justice to this song with a wonderful set of slides remarkable for their beauty, clearness and natural coloring. It is a fascinating set.

"ONLY LOVE DREAMS."—By Edward Madden, author of "Starlight," etc.; published by Shapiro. This is a beautiful love ballad with a melody fitting for such a tender theme. Simpson has done justice to this song with a wonderful set of slides remarkable for their beauty, clearness and natural coloring. The young lady who posed for this set of slides is a most beautiful model. The scenery is extremely artistic.

"HOOP LA (I'M HAVING THE TIME OF MY LIFE),"—By the writers of "Yip I Addy I Ay"; published by Shapiro. This is one of those catchy airs, together with clever humor, that is bound to appeal to every one. Simpson has made a very novel set of slides for this number, depicting the awkward country pumpkin in a series of funny poses that speak very well for his sense of humor. This set of slides will be a distinct addition to any programme.

"YOU AINT GOT THE GIRL TILL THE RING IS ON HER FINGER, AND EVEN THEN YOU NEVER CAN TELL."—By Al Bryan and Kendis and Pauey. These clever writers are known the world over for the number of sensational hits they have produced. Simpson has illustrated the bashful youth and the worldly-wise father in bright snappy situations that are bound to create a laugh whenever shown; they are funny without being vulgar and yet artistic as are all of Simpson's slides, and illustrate the words of the story so well that the eye follows the action of the story without trouble, and even a poor singer could not help but make good with these pictures. This catchy little number is published by Shapiro.

LEVI COMPANY.

"JESSAMINE."—Words and music by Frank B. Williams; published by Shapiro. A pretty love ballad surpassing many of its kind published heretofore. A set of slides by Levi that delight the audience.

"BYE BYE SWEETHEART."—Words and music by Will Wood. A little gem of a song, refined and melodious. The slides contain many bright and snappy novelties and illustrate well this love song.

"WHEN THE OLD OAKEN BUCKET WAS NEW."—Words by Geo. Moriarity; music by Joe Cooper, writers of the big song hit, "I Can't Miss That Ball Game." Published by Harry Cooper, of the Empire City Quartette. The melody is very sweet and worthy of a pronounced success. Slides in typical Levi style illustrate the lyrics in an interesting fashion.

"AS THE TRAIN ROLLED AWAY."—Words by Arthur A. Myers; music by Sidney T. Wilson. This song is above the average in many ways. Slides by Levi tell the story in a simple manner, and together with the novelties.

"VALLEY FLOWER."—Words and music by Kerry Mills; published by F. A. Mills, New York. An Indian song of merit, as are most of the songs exploited by these publishers. The posing is in typical Indian style and shows many new phases of Indian life. For those fond of Indian pictures this set should appeal.

"A LITTLE GAME OF LOVE."—Words by E. Soloman; music by B. Osias. This song when demonstrated in a large New York department store is said to have made a big hit. The slides are worthy of Levi.

"WHEN EVERYTHING WAS SUNSHINE."—Words and music by Will Wood. Published by Will Wood, New York. A song that conveys just what the title reads, a very bright and pleasing love song, and the slides are beautifully executed and finished with the skill of Levi.

"IN THE VALLEY OF OLD ST. JOE."—Words and music by Dennis Mackin; published by M. Witmark & Sons. This is one of those sentimental ballads for which M. Witmark & Sons are noted. Posing is good; slides are artistically colored.

"I WONDER IF YOU LOVE ME."—By Mabel Hite and Tom Kelly; published by M. Shapiro. Shapiro does not get out very many ballads, but when he does, it usually is a big hit. This song is Mabel Hite's big hit in her act, and that is sufficient in itself to show the value of the song.

"IN DEAR OLD TENNESSEE."—By Olive L. Fields; music by Harry S. Newman; published by M. Shapiro. It is the song for which Shapiro is said to have paid $5,000 to the Sunlight Publishing Co. Levi Company claims that this set of slides is the best ever put out by them.

NEW LYRIC OPENS WITH PICTURES.

The beautiful Lyric theatre, located on Sycamore street, opposite the entrance of the German-American bank building, Muscatine, Ia., opened its dors to the public July 23. The house which is managed by Henry Fayle and F. E. Tewksbury, two young townsmen, have done all possible in making the theatre most up-to-date.

The seating capacity is 250, and every patron is provided with a large roomy opera chair that is comfortable. The ventilation system is the best; the house being kept perfectly cool during the hot summer days. There are four large doors on the sides of the house making it easy for crowds to get out. The pictures will be the latest from the licensed picture studios. The house is also equipped with the latest model motiograph picture machine.

NEW MANAGER FOR ORPHEUM.

E. C. Wright has taken the management of the Orpheum theatre, Williamsport, Pa., and will in the future conduct a motion picture and illustrated song theatre. Many improvements are being made, including the repainting of the entire front and the readjustment of the lighting system. The theatre opened July 30 under the new management. Mr. Wright is a vocalist of considerable ability and for several weeks he will do the singing.

PUBLICITY WORKED BACKWARD

Chas. Jenkins of Chatham, Ont., Observes a Peculiarity of Advertising.

WHEN the steam railway locomotive was first invented, a high ecclesiastical gentleman denounced it as a contrivance of the Evil One. In doing so, he bolstered up a prejudice that deprived him of much pleasure and convenience, for to be consistent, he dare not afterward ride behind one. Time and advanced civilization have done much to wipe out the notion that the poor, old, much-overrated Devil is behind every new idea, but the medieval fetish still taints the race in various new forms.

Every new thing that genius has devised for convenience and entertainment has had to run the gauntlet of biffs and knocks from the ultra virtuous, who are not content with their privilege of abstaining from what they deem to be questionable, but must forsooth try to hold their more reckless fellows back. All of which leads up to the roasting and banging the motion picture business has had to put up with in Canada.

But here let me remark the press of Canada has been kinder to the pictures than most of the papers in the States. Had it not been for a remarkable indifference on the part of the Canadian press at a time when ministerial associations and certain church societies were jumping on the pictures in double shifts, the business in Canada would have suffered a hard set-back. The papers for the most part stood pat and let all the lurid howling go by the boards without scarcely ever deeming an outburst worth a scare head. Editorially, many of them indeed took up the cause of the picture.

Just why the papers held this attitude is not for me to say, but it may have been that many of thew riting men on their staffs, like myself, enjoyed an hour in the dimeolodeon after the paper went to press and a hard day's grind was over. Perhaps some of them remembered that the self-same preachers and reformers tactlessly roasted the press in the past lacking less vulnerable "evils" to attack.

I remember one preacher jumping from side to side of his pulpit the while he vituperated linguistic lava on the picture houses, which he said were kindergartens for convicts. Afterwards, he admitted that he had never been in one, but his own children had pilfered his trousers in the night for fare to steal off to a theatre after school. He had been hit in his most vital spot—the pocket. Attractions that would lead hitherto godly offspring such as his to steal must be vile and low, and he was out to squelch them. Nice logic! But it is the sort one daily runs into behind-scenes in newsgathering.

There will scarcely be a city in Ontario where the Reno fight pictures will be shown. The reason is that the reformers read all about the fight pictures being taken in the daily press and they put the screws on the police chiefs and police commissions long before the releases were announced. They took time by the forelock. Had there not been such widespread publicity beforehand, ten to one the fight pictures would have slipped through this very godly province without any row. For once advertising worked backwards.

But for all this, Canadians are strong in their patronage of moving picture houses. In many of the smaller cities opera houses have been darkened permanently and in others large theatre managers see the wolf's gaunt shadow at the door. Many cities of twelve thousand inhabitants and under support three thriving picture houses, all doing a great business which would be greater still if the rotten vaudeville were eliminated. Picture house vaudeville, in the smaller Canadian cities, is of such a wretched character for the most part that it is unspeakable. Brutal vulgarity supplies what is supposed to be humor and the "artists" appear to view with each other as to who can put up the most lewd or suggestive thing. Long-suffering at the hands of these amateurs who never will be more leads to the conclusion that they are all champion smutt slingers. They are the most formidable barnacle the picture business has to contend with.

By Special arrangement with the American Press Association we will reproduce on slides all events of special interest to the world. Every enterprising exhibitor should place a standing order, as the price is within reach of all. With each set flaming display posters are given free.

Ewin Soffing has closed his motion picture house for the summer, and will open again in September.

The Queen City Amusement Co., Cincinnati, O., took out a permit July 18 to build a five-cent motion picture theatre on Hamilton avenue. The cost of the house will be $1,000.

Manager A. Speros, of the Columbia Theatorium, Pottsville, Pa., is putting on a great run of licensed pictures these hot summer days.

Manager Lampman announces that the Bijou motion picture theatre, Jackson, Mich., will re-open Aug 7. The building has been in the course of repairs during the past few weeks.

John Merhm, of Sea Bright, N. J., is having his picture theatre remodeled for the winter.

In spite of the fact that he has been turned down by the license committee of Paterson, N. J., C. Stampful is still running a motion picture theatre at 137 Main street.

The Astoria theatre re-opens for the winter season. It will be remodeled and put in first class condition for the winter season. Besides making the house fireproof, an orchestra pit will be put in and an electric dome will be placed in the center of the building. Manager A. L. Krouse believes in giving his patrons the best there is in the amusement line.

Concordia Hall, Waterbury, Conn., has been transformed into an Italian motion picture theatre. The house will show nothing but motion pictures and all the songs will be in Italian. This is the first Italian theatre of its kind in Waterbury, and is creating considerable interest, owing to the class of music that is sung. The house is under the management of Marcello Mele, of New York City, who is well known in the picture business.

William R. Gaylor, of Oxford, Mass., has gone into the motion picture business in Marion, Ind.

Alexander Kovas has sold his motion picture theatre on Main street, Wheeling, W. Va., to O. Scarnechia & Son. The new owners have already started to make extensive improvements before the winter season starts in.

William H. Smith, of Stafford Springs, Conn., has sold his interest in the motion picture business to Le Gord Brothers.

Henry S. Davis has been engaged by Robert H. Norton to manage the new picture theatre at Bristol, Conn.

William E. Morrison has purchased a picture theatre in Rochester, N. Y.

Elmer Fox is planning to open a first-class picture house in Utica, N. Y.

Eugene Marx is erecting a motion picture theatre, 23x115 feet, at Milwaukee and Belmont avenues, Chicago, Ill.

Burgess Edgar Hale Jacobs, of Altoona, Pa., will show the pictures of the Johnson-Jeffries contest in two theatres. One theatre will be for whites and the other for the blacks.

William M. Smith, of Stafford, Conn., has sold his interest in the Gem motion picture enterprise to his partner, Edmond Lessord. Mr. Lessord will continue the business on the same lines as the past.

A motion picture theatre will replace the restaurant of Peter Fabacher & Bros., on Charles street, New Orleans, La. The lease held by Messrs. Fabacher, which has four years to run, was purchased by Josiah Pearce & Sons, who will make it an up-to-date picture theatre.

O. J. Sybert, of Clarksburg, W. Va., has purchased the Grand Theatre, on Putman street, Marietta, O. Mr. Sybert will run only the best line of pictures.

The navy recruiting station, Omaha, Neb., has received 1,000 feet of film showing life on an American battleship. The film will be used in section for about three weeks.

John Strand and Dock Sader are conducting a motion picture theatre at Bayville, N. J., for the summer.

James Kolar, who was half owner with Otto Jenicek, in the Phoenix Theatre, Laporte, Ind., has purchased Mr. Jenicek's interest for $7,000.

Samuel Klein, of 69 Pacific street, Newark, N. J., is putting up a one-story brick motion picture theatre. It will cost $4,500.

Manager Lampman announces that the Bijou motion picture theatre, Jackson, Mich., will be ready for the reopening the latter part of August.

Two motion picture houses have been opened on West Trade street, Charlotte, N. C. The first was installed by the Parker Brothers and the latter by J. B. Beard, of Gastonia, N. C.

Harris Bros., of Boonton, N. J., have purchased a new Powers motion picture machine for their house on Main street. The new machine should greatly add to the clearness of the pictures.

Frank Leavitt has sold his Theatre Comique at Sanford, Me., and is making arrangements to build a larger theatre. The new house, which will be used for motion pictures, will be one of the largest in Maine.

LA CORONA THEATRE, CORONA, CAL.

E. L. Sparr, manager and proprietor. This picture theatre is one of the best in California. It seats 350, and is equipped with a Standard A Picture Machine and a Hallberg Economizer.

Lewis Van Allen, of 671 Main street, Buffalo, N. Y., has remodeled his picture theatre and is now making plans for the winter.

Edward Flagg, who conducted a motion picture show in the Opera House, Utica, N. Y., has sold his interests to James Waugh, of Fulton, N. Y.

W. H. Wentz, proprietor of the Majestic motion picture theatre, Allentown, Pa., has installed four new electric ceiling fans.

John Harlovich, of Dodgeville, Mich., has opened a motion picture show at the park. For the opening he engaged the Royal Band of Calumet.

McNamara & Coughlin have leased the Hudson Opera House, Clinton, N. J., to the Boston Amusement Co., who are fitting it up for motion pictures.

"The Unknown, the Other Johnson" and "Motoring Among the Cliffs and Gorges of France" were among the films that delighted the large audiences that filled the Lyric Theatre, Duluth, Minn., last week.

H. F. Pfau has obtained a permit to run a motion picture theatre at 774 Seneca street, Buffalo, N. Y.

Pictures are changed twice a week at the motion picture theatre, Greenfield, Mass. Miss Alma Dingwell has been engaged to sing the illustrated songs.

CASUAL COMMENT

WHEN we printed the advance notice of the Pictorial Review's interview with Mayor Gaynor on the question of "The Municipality and the Child," last week, we promised to give the full text of the story in this week's issue of The Film Index. At that time the publication was not available. Since obtaining a copy of the Pictorial Review we have discovered that the subject was fully covered in the advance sheet and that there is little more to add—not enough to warrant a full reproduction.

There is one paragraph, though, that deserves further comment. It reads:

"The auditoriums in which moving pictures are shown should be light. Science has not yet found the way to show pictures in a room as light as the legitimate theatre. That is the problem for the manufacturers to solve."

This is a question upon which The Film Index has devoted considerable space. Much of the present objection to the picture theatre would disappear if managers would make their houses light. Mayor Gaynor may be excused for saying that "science has not yet found the way to show pictures in a room as light as the legitimate theatre" for the reason that a man as busy as he is cannot be expected to discover everything connected with the picture business in the brief time he is able to devote to it.

The truth is that there is a way, as many picture men know and as some practice; but the practice has not become sufficiently general to excite comment. Nevertheless, a plan for lighting picture theatres has been sufficiently perfected to warrant the adoption of an ordinance by municipal boards of aldermen to compel picture theatre managers to "light-up."

The Film Index is averse to making folks do the things they ought to do by legislation, but there seems to be no other way of inducing picture theatre managers to make this improvement. The ordinance cannot come too quickly, either.

THERE is every reason for the users of licensed pictures to be enthusiastic over the present outlook for strong feature subjects. Aside from the uniformly good photographic quality and composition of the licensed product, nearly every manufacturer is turning out subjects that will arouse more than ordinary interest, or that may be used by the enterprising manager to stir up interest in his house. Feature pictures are as numerous as honey bees in a clover patch. The Edison Manufacturing Company has had a stock company up in Northwest Canada for the past month. They returned home this week with many good pictures, which will soon be released. The Kalem Company has produced an Indian picture of historical value which should interest the school children. Selig has taken a picture of the big conclave of the Knights Templar held in Chicago, and Essanay is out with some corking baseball pictures. Lubin has some Atlantic City pictures; Vitagraph has an "Uncle Tom's Cabin" series that is proving a money getter. Pathe always has something good and the work of their American producers is not to be overlooked. Kleine is offering a number of remarkable productions, anyone of which may be termed "headliners." Melies has a boxing match picture story and a baseball story coming and Biograph—well, an exhibitor told us the other day that all he had to do was to put the name "Biograph" on his bulletin board to get a crowd, so what more can we say.

With such material to work with the exhibitor that complains is just a natural born grouch.

LAST week we said something about hte advisability of reviving some of the old subjects that have made a hit. We asked exhibitors to send us a list of some of the pictures they would like to see. The first response came from Mr. H. B. Smith, manager of The Gem, Peeples Corners, Cincinnati, Ohio. This is the list he submits:

Why Girls Leave Home?
The Leopard Queen.
The Cowboy Millionaire.
Barted on Their Honeymoon.
To Save Her Soul.
Cohen at Coney.
Energetic Street Cleaner.
Moonlight Sonata.

No consolation in that for a "highbrow." Our first thought was that Manager Smith had made a mistake and had intended his letter for Al. Woods, the old melodrama producer, but the titles were recognized as good old burlesque and farce comedy subjects. The list will serve to indicate the pressing demand for pictures that afford a few laughs. Mr. Smith says "these are a few, there are others." Possibly the others will represent a little better class.

IT is seldom that we turn aside from the strict purpose of our existence—boosting pictures—to talk about ourselves, so we trust that we may be permitted to call your attention in this instance to the generally excellent appearance and the truly good contents of The Film Index. It is distinctly "the picture paper." Elsewhere we mention arrangements that have been made to give our readers some reliable information on the uses of electricity in the picture theatre. It is expected that the series of talks on this important subject will be commenced in the next issue. The writer is a practical man, eminently qualified to conduct the department and to tell managers and operators the things they should know. It is costing us a pretty penny to secure a man competent to discusse the subject of electricity in its relation to the picture theatre, so we hope that our readers will make the most of what he tells them.

WE positively refuse to permit the Dramatic Mirror picture man to have the last word in the now familiar "Jersey" controversy; we also refuse to be diverted from the main question by any flank movement, otherwise "sidestepping," which he attempts by referring to the story we printed of the actress that makes up and rehearses to the flicker of the picture. Neither should he insinuate that "the amity that should exist between brethren of the press" is disturbed in the least by this pleasant controversy. We insist that our critical brother adhere to the rules of the game or take the count.

As for ourselves we say: Hurrah for Jersey.

A Denial From Spencer.

The editor of The Film Index is in receipt of a friendly communication from Mr. C. Spencer, of Sydney, N. S. W., written at Vancouver, B. C., just prior to his sailing for Australia.

Mr. Spencer desires us to say that he has no wish to engage in a controversy with Mr. Williams, but would like to have us state for him that he "never had the agency for Edison machines in Australia or elsewhere."

It will be remembered that Mr. J. D. Williams made the statement in his letter to The Index, published in the issue of Aug. 6, that Mr. Spencer has been the Australian agent for Edison machines.

Further than to deny that statement Mr. Spencer declines to discuss the picture business in Australia with Mr. Williams.

Wants the Truth Known.

Film Index, 1 Madison Ave., New York, N. Y.:

Gentlemen—We notice by this week's Moving Picture World an article headed "Chas. Farrell—A Buffalo Live Wire," stating he opened up a number of theatres, and mentioned six as follows: "Sylvia, Cazenovia, Palace, Unique, Bailey and Owl theatres"—and for some reason or other they are all using Independent goods." We wish to contradict this, as we are supplying four houses out of the six mentioned, viz.: Unique, Bailey, Owl and Sylvia.

Yours truly,
GENERAL FILM COMPANY.

Another Pirate Held Up.

The Motion Picture Patents Company has been advised by its attorneys, Messrs. Miller & White, of San Francisco, Cal., that the United States Court for that jurisdiction has granted a decree of injunction against the Pacific Life Motion Picture Manufacturing Co., of San Francisco, upon the Edison camera patent, reissue No. 12,037. This is the second decree that has been obtained against California picture pirates.

Howard in Town.

Frank J. Howard, of Boston, Mass., formerly in the motion picture exchange business, but now retired, was in New York last week for a few days while on his way to Niagara Falls. He was accompanied by Mrs. Howard and daughter. The Howards are making an extensive tour by motor car. They came overland from Boston on Tuesday, and continued their trip to the Falls on Thursday. From Niagara they will go to Clayton, N. Y., and then take the St. Lawrence boat to Montreal, Quebec, and around to Boston by water,

AN ANNOUNCEMENT

In an issue of the Electrical World of July 15, 1905, the following biographical sketch was first published:

"Josef Henrik Hallberg was born in Falkenberg, Sweden, in the year 1874. In the spring of 1890 he graduated from Latin-Larovesket, Halmsted, Sweden. Shortly thereafter he came to America, and in October of the same year entered the Ottumwa Iron Works, Ottumwa, Iowa, as apprentice in the machinist trade. During the three years of his apprenticeship he gained much practical experience in building and testing, erecting and operating steam engines, coal mining and hoisting machinery.

"After completing the apprenticeship course in 1893, he became associated with Kohler Brothers, contracting engineers in Chicago, which connection he severed in 1894 to accept a position as sales engineer with the Electric Appliance Co., of Chicago, with which company he remained until 1896. For three years, or until 1899, he served as electrical engineer and designer for the Standard Thermometer & Electric Company, Peabody, Mass.

"From 1899 until 1903 he was electric engineer and designer with the General Incandescent Arc Light Company, New York. While with this company he patented and developed a complete line of modern enclosed arc lamps, alternating-current regulators, automatic transformers, switchboards and protecting devices. He has also engineered many important street lighting installations, the most notable of which is the street lighting system in Cincinnati, O., which is remarkable in that there are installed about 6,000 4-ampere series alternating-current arc lamps which require over 105 separate circuits, with transformers, regulators and switchboards located in sub-stations. This is the largest arc lighting installation in the world using series alternating-current arc lamps.

"In 1903 Mr. Hallberg was appointed general superintendent and electrical engineer for the Cincinnati Gas & Electric Company, with full charge of its electric power stations and distribution system, comprising about 30,000 horse-power of steam and electric equipment and a large storage battery. While in charge of this plant he made many important changes in the methods of operating the power plants and the storage battery, considerably reducing losses and operating expenses. In the early part of 1904, Mr. Hallberg was elected vice-chairman of the Cincinnati Chapter of the American Institute of Electrical Engineers, in which capacity he acted during that year.

"In 1904 Mr. Hallberg established an office in New York City as consulting engineer. He has been retained as consulting and advisory engineer to the Commission on Municipal Electric Lighting of New York City, and has been appointed consulting expert for the National Carbon Company, Cleveland, Ohio, in all matters relating to carbon for electrical purposes. He has also been retained as consulting engineer by several large lighting and power, industrial and manufacturing plants.

"Mr. Hallberg is the author of numerous technical papers and articles. He is the inventor and patentee of electrical apparatus and systems, among which may be mentioned a single-phase to poly-phase alternating-current trunk-line electric-railway system. He is an associate member of the American Institute of Electrical Engineers, an associate member of the National Electric Light Association and a member of the Swedish Engineers' Club of America."

About three years ago, to bring the story down to date, Mr. Hallberg became interested in motion picture theatres through the granting to him of a patent on his electric "Economizer" and on flaming arc lamps, special terminals and connections for use in picture houses.

Through his ability Mr. Hallberg has filled the position of consulting engineer for many large manufacturing establishments. Among these are the Atlantic Mills, of Providence, R. I.; A. D. Juilliard & Co., New York; National Carbon Co., Cleveland, O.; Standard Silk Co., Phillipsburg, N. J.; Stanley G. I. Electric Mfg. Co., Pittsfield, Mass., and Jacob Rupert Brewing Co., New York.

He was selected by Horatio A. Foster, editor of "Foster's Electrical Engineer's Pocket-Book" to write the chapter on "Arc Lamps and Arc Lighting" for that publication, which is the guide and reference book consulted by all electrical engineers. It is also worthy of note that Mr. Hallberg has lectured frequently at the University of Columbia on electrical subjects.

"Why all this fuss about Hallberg," you ask. "How much does he pay for it?" We will tell you: Mr. Hallberg has not paid us a cent for this write up.

The fact is—and this is what we want you to know—that The Film Index has induced Mr. Hallberg to become a regular contributor to its columns for a consideration, and for the purpose of writing a series of articles on the subject of Electricity in its relation to the picture theatre. Our purpose in publishing his record is to permit our readers to judge, after having read it, whether or not they believe him competent to tell them about electricity, and its uses in picture theatres.

The Index has been waiting a long time for Mr. Hallberg to reach the proper frame of mind to be willing to undertake this work. In the meantime a great deal of nonsense has been printed about electricity, and theatre lighting in motion picture trade papers. It was this more than any other reason that induced Mr. Hallberg to accept the offer of The Film Index.

In a conversation with the editor he said: "It is my intention to treat this subject in the dignified manner that it deserves. It is a dignified subject and should not be made light of. I shall handle it impartially and without reference to any particular device or commodity in which I may or may not have an interest. Every picture theatre manager and operator should know about the uses of electricity and how to use it in the picture theatre to the best advantage and with the greatest economy.

"Since you have mentioned the subject to me I have really become anxious to get at it, and I feel that I shall be able to do justice to it. It has been especially annoying to me to read some of the ridiculous statements that have been printed on this subject and I am glad that The Index has decided to devote space to it."

This will, we think, be a sufficient introduction to the series of articles to be written for The Film Index by Mr. Hallberg. It is quite likely that the first of the series will appear in next week's issue and we feel safe in promising our readers something really good and valuable to them.

H. H. BUCKWALTER PAYS US VISIT

Head of Denver Film Exchange Makes Short Call Before Going to Atlantic City

Mr. H. H. Buckwalter, fresh from the "breezy west," blew into the office of The Film Index last Saturday morning, where he spent a few moments prior to a visit to Atlantic City. Mr. Buckwalter, who is secretary, treasurer and manager, of the Denver Film Exchange, looked as stout and robust as ever, but with all he sees in New York and the "Great White Way," you can't convert him into a "Manhattanite" or even argue that living in a Harlem flat is as good as the city that is set on a hill. While he likes the east and its people there is nothing so refreshing as a view of Pike's Peak before breakfast.

When asked how business was west of the Rockies, Mr. Buckwalter assured us that all was moving along lovely and that the hot weather has caused little or no falling off. The people of Denver like pictures and just so long as they are the best; no first-class house will feel the effect during the dog-days.

Just at present the thing to cause him worriment is the manner in which the express companies are treating the Denver exchange men. The Adams Express Co., which has sort of a monopoly on the easern business, is charging rates on the shipment of films that are way above the rates of any other kind of express that is handled. Mr. Buckwalter says the express companies claim they don't want to handle films and that if the exchanges don't feel like paying the rates charged, they need not ship.

There is now a movement on foot to ask Congress to investigate the matter and to help the motion picture men in that section of the country to get fair treatment.

WHERE IS SCHINSKI?

The Film Index is in receipt of the following communication from Philadelphia under date of Aug. 12, 1910:

Gentlemen—I beg to inform you that a person who answers to the name of J. S. Schinski, short of stature, smooth shaven, No. 512 South 4th street, Philadelphia, called here on Friday, Aug. 5, and received a No. 6 mechanism made by the Nicholas Power Co., New York City, serial No. 515, patent No. 2062. Part payment was made with a check for $120.00, which was returned by his bank, and subsequently I learn that he has drawn almost the entire amount from his bank and left Philadelphia for Chicago, Ill., on Saturday.

I will appreciate it if you will give this matter publicity through your journal.

Yours very truly,

LEWIS M. SWAAB.

"A LUNATIC AT LARGE"

A Vitagraph Comedy

THERE goes the Prof.! He's off! He doesn't look it. In fact, he doesn't appear much different from the rest of folks, but when he gets to going he does go some. To make matters worse, he gets mixed up with a real professor of entomology, in plain, every-day, unvarnished English, "bug-ology," or the study of bugs and such things. And strange to say, that is just what is troubling him; he is "buggy" on bugs.

Now it happens that the real professor is on his way to visit a gentleman to whom he has been duly announced, and by whom he is momentarily expected. The genuine professor sits down to rest beneath an overspreading oak and casually secures a few specimens of the insect species which he carefully examines with his magnifying glass. Becoming drowsy, and being wearied, he falls asleep.

The bughouse professor espies the sleeping "highbrow," and, seeing the microscopic glass, loses no time in annexing himself to the tool of his trade and the professor's satchel bearing his autograph—Prof. Burling.

He goes on his way rejoicing, until, as luck would have it, he comes to the house of the gentleman where the celebrated Professor Burling is to be entertained. The housemaid is surprised when she finds the "daffy" examining everything in the room with the glass, and nearly has a fit when he dexteriously plucks the bow upon the top of her cap and carefully examines it; but it is altogether too much when he takes off his coat and shoes and acts as if he owned the whole place. The head of the house comes in just as the queer guest springs upon the seat of the chair, reaches across the table and quickly yanks a button or two from his host's vest, which he places under the glass for a closer observation. The house owner is dumbfounded, but feels assured that it is his anticipated guest, Professor Burling, when he sees the name on the satchel. There is but one thing to be done; he must be humored in his eccentricities, which is putting it mild, when we see the didoes he performs with a most serious and aggravating dignity. With tactful persuasiveness, the gentleman of the house gets his guest to go to bed.

The guards from the "funny cottage" are now in pursuit of the escaped patient, and trace him to the house where he is comfortably resting. They are told by Mr. Ward, the host, he has not seen the object of their search, and they start out on another trail.

What has become of the real professor? He's all right, but he gets in wrong. When he awakes from his slumbers under the tree he finds that he has gotten next to a nest of ants, who make him feel kind of creepy, and he realizes that they have gotten next to him. He misses his satchel, and beats a hasty retreat, vigorously scratching himself while he goes, the ants getting in their fine work and his disposition on keen edge to spoil his temper.

He reaches Mr. Ward's house, recognizes his satchel and cannot understand how it got there before he did. Between the ants and his indignation at the loss of his satchel and glass, he acts pretty nearly as funny as the luny professor, for whom he is mistaken and bound to a chair by the house owner, with the assistance of the maid.

Things are getting interesting, when the guards from the asylum return at the call of Mr. Ward, and at once tell him he has the wrong man. The professor is unloosened, and all hands rush into the bedroom for the lunatic, who jumps through the window and is off again, quicker than it takes to tell it.

The chase begins. Gee, Hosophat's ghost! It's worth following. The fellow, who takes the part of the "nitty" one, couldn't act more foolish if he hadn't any sense at all; the way he gets over the ground is something alarming, and the further he goes the harder you laugh, until you wish he'd stop so you can get a chance to breathe and loosen the stitches in your side. He's an acrobat, a vaudeville artist, a knockabout team and few other things rolled into one. He's the real dip from "dippyville."

To make a long chase short, they catch up with him, take him back to the hospital, while Professor Burling and Mr. Ward go home to straighten themselves out and have a good laugh with the audience over the funny mix-up.

The beauty of this picture is, it is all fun, seriously and conscientiously presented, with no effort to ridicule or exaggerate. It is so much like the real thing, and so well done, we want to see more of it done in the same way.

SCENES FROM VITAGRAPH COMEDY SUBJECT. "A LUNATIC AT LARGE."

Since the Vitagraph Co. has reproduced its scenes into motion pictures, it has proven one of the best films that company has ever produced. At the Lyric Theatre, Duluth, Minn., the picture was one of the hits of the season. The 3,000 feet of film was to some extent overworked, owing to the large crowd that tried to get in the theatre to see the story portrayed.

"UNCLE TOM'S CABIN" A WINNER.

No matter how many years have elapsed since the story of "Uncle Tom's Cabin" was written, nor what great changes have taken place during the half-century past, and even with the new and lasting friendship that has grown between the North and South—that old story of Harriet Beecher Stowe's is still as refreshing as ever.

NEW PICTURE THEATRE FOR BROCKTON.

George A. Mulford, who will conduct a motion picture house in Music Hall, in the new Marston block, reached Brockton, Mass., Aug. 10, bag and baggage, and from now on he will hustle things along so that he may open Aug. 22. The seats have been put in place in the hall and things are beginning to look shipshape. Mr. Mulford has secured Miss Marjorie Hannigan, soprano soloist at St. Patrick's church, for one of his illustrated song singers. He will also present Master Harry Fletcher of Boston, a boy tenor, who is said to possess a remarkable voice. A third singer will be secured. According to present plans, motion pictures and illustrated songs will comprise the program, although Mr. Mulford stated that he might consider offering vaudeville.

"CONSPIRACY OF PONTIAC"

Historical Incident Forms Basis for Splendid Kalem Indian Picture

ALL the old schoolboys and girls who used to study Webster's Third Reader, will remember the famous story of the "Conspiracy of Pontiac," in his attempt to capture the English fort at Detroit. It was away back in 1763 during the French and Indian war, when the French and the Indians attempted to drive the English out of America, that old Pontiac began to make trouble in the territory now called Michigan. He laid waste all the settlements and drove the whites, whom his Indians did not kill, into the English post and fort at Detroit.

Pontiac tried to capture this fort, but it was too strongly defended. The Indians wanted to give up and go home, but Old Pontiac induced them to stay and fight, and devised a plan by which he was sure he could capture the fort. His plan was for the Indians to cut off their musket barrels so they could hide them under their blankets. Admission to the fort was to be gained by means of a flag of truce. Once inside the fort the Indians were to kill its unsuspecting defenders.

The plan might have been successful had it not been that an Indian girl, who was in love with one of the English officers, heard the plot and warned the English of their danger. The result was that the English commander was prepared and Pontiac compelled to make peace.

It was the privilege of the writer to witness the taking of several of the scenes of this picture on the Kalem Indian Reservation over in Jersey. As we approached the scene of operations Indians were to be found scattered all along the trail picking blackberries just ripening on the vines. Men, women and children of all ages from the nearby village of Coytesville, to the number of a hundred, were also present; delighted spectators of the picture folk and their work.

As an Indian picture this Kalem subject should be well received. It is not only a good picture but is also one that will give school children a clearer idea of the incident related than can be gotten from the book story. It is well portrayed by an excellent cast and the photography is of the best quality.

The cover page illustration is of the dramatic scene at which Pontiac declares his intentions at the council of chiefs, to continue the fight against the whites. This scene in motion is most exciting.

SCENE FROM KALEM'S HISTORICAL SUBJECT. "CONSPIRACY OF PONTIAC."

KALEM PLAYER GETS OVATION.

On Sunday, Sept. 14, a woman with a baby in her arms called at the City Hall Theatre, 92 Park Row, New York, and explained to the manager that she wanted to see the Kalem picture, "The Borrowed Baby," running in his house that night, because her baby was the one in the picture.

The manager was on his job in a minute. He took the baby up on the platform in front of the screen and introduced him as the leading man in the picture about to be run. The young man (he is just about 18 months old) got an ovation at the start and all through the picture whenever the baby appeared, he was heartily applauded. His name, by the way, is Fred W. Langbein.

THE LITTLE MOTHER.

A Kalem comedy-drama soon to be released entitled "The Little Mother" is a picture that cannot fail to make an impression. The opening scene shows the rear of a New York tenement on wash-day with the little mother taking the clothes from the line. She is the older of an orphaned family of three, with a small brother and sister depending upon her.

A friend provides an opportunity for them to go to the country for a vacation. There the little mother is made love to by the foreman's son who gets her in the end.

But aside from the clever story is the excellent composition of the various scenes. The farmyard scenes with the chickens and ducks, the cows and horses and other paraphernalia and the splendid photography unite to form one of the best of the recent comedies.

MOTION PICTURE GREAT INVENTION

Washington Herald Claims They Give the Nation Most Pleasure.

"No form of entertainment is today giving more pleasure than the motion picture," says the Washington Herald. To continue its praise for this kind of entertainment, the same article goes on to say: "It is the most popular diversion that ever come into vogue, and is still growing in popularity."

In speaking of the business in Washington, the Herald claims that all the first class houses are prosperous. This is true in all large cities, where the pictures are of standard make. At the present time the names of many of the manufacturers have become so popular that patrons of first class houses often call up the box office, of some theatres, and ask, when certain pictures are to be shown at that particular house. Only a few days ago some picture fan, called up the office of the Film Index and asked where she could see the pictures of "Bridges Burned," the story of which is from the pen of Rex Beach.

"Of the business as a whole" claims the Herald, "it may be truthfully said, 'There's millions in it.' "

Continuing the Herald goes on to say:

"This paper looks with decided favor upon this new amusement industry, and is pleased to see it grow. But with its growth the necessity of closer supervision is daily emphasized. The pictures commonly thrown on the screens are harmlessly pleasing and diverting. If not uplifting or especially wholesome. They are like the average novel one reads to while the odd hours away—passably good or indifferently bad, and, therefore, calling for neither praise nor blame. Others stir good impulses, disseminate useful knowledge, quicken the artistic sense, and appeal to our better natures."

LYRIC THEATRE, HOLYOKE, OPENS.

Changes in ownership of moving picture houses in Holyoke, Mass., were effected Aug. 11 that will mean the reopening of the Lyric at 319 High street.

Thomas Marion has sold his theatre in the new Reardon block on Lyman street to West Helmbach and Charles Roberts. Mr. Marion has purchased the Lyric and will at once install a new picture machine and a new piano. He opened Saturday night with a fine grade of pictures and promises to give the best of song and picture entertainments.

WASHINGTON AND PHILADELPHIA

William Wright Reports Hot Weather Conditions Good in Both Cities

During a very recent trip to Washington and Philadelphia, William Wright made an extensive canvass of picture theatres in each city and comes back with an interesting report on the condition of the exhibition business as he found it.

He rather expected to find business light owing to the hot weather that has prevailed in those cities, but found more houses open and doing a good business than he thought to find.

Of the sixty-two licensed houses in Washington very few are closed. Those running "straight pictures" are doing the best business. Many that were vaudeville in the winter have cut it out for the summer and the opinion was quite generally expressed that these houses would not resume vaudeville in the coming season.

Mr. Tom Moore who operates the licensed exchance in Washington, had taken his wife and gone to the Delaware Water Gap for a vacation when Mr. Wright called. The Exchange was being run by Edward Mack in his absence. Of the 62 licensed theatres in Washington Moore's Exchange serves 43. Business has greatly increased with Moore and he is now in larger quarters.

Among other things in Washington Wright reports that when the taxicab man learned he was in the motion picture business, he offered to show him the Washington Monument, turning around. This Wright refused on the ground that he could not afford it.

Mr. Wright spent two days and nights seeing picture theatres in Philadelphia and says that Philadelphia has any city in the United States beat for fine houses. Also, that it has more straight picture houses. There are several seating from 500 to 800 that have been running vaudeville in winter, but have cut it out during the summer and will not restore that feature this coming season. The managers say that they find straight pictures attract a better class of business.

Of the houses closed for the summer practically all were running vaudeville, and all straight picture houses are open and doing good business.

Mr. Wright made special note of the Pekin Theatre run by George Redding, a colored man assisted by his wife. The house was doing a good business and was run on up to date lines. Mr. Redding reads The Index regularly and keeps posted. His house seats about 160 and stands a hundred more. It uses licensed pictures and was packed when Wright called.

Independent business is reported light in both cities. There are very few independent theatres in Washington. In Philadelphia, where comparison was possible with a licensed theatre nearby, the proportion of attendance was about 10 to 1 in favor of the licensed house.

One manager in Frankfort avenue tried unlicensed pictures for two weeks and lost 40 per cent. of his business. Most of the pictures served him were unsuited to the tastes of his patrons and were technically bad. "Spotted as a leopard," he said. He got his license back as quickly as he could, and now says "Never no more."

A CORRECTION.

The Film Index is in receipt of a letter from Mr. A. MacMillan, of Chicago, taking exceptions to a statement in the issue of July 30, regarding the so-called "fake" pictures of the Johnson-Jeffries contest. This is what Mr. MacMillan says:

"In your issue of July 30, 1910, an article was printed which ridiiculed me as a manufacturer of fake films.

"Your Mr. McQuade's statement has its only foundation in the fact that I have a reproduction of the Johnson-Jeffries Fight.

"In order to correct the false impression your article fosters, I wish to state that the advertisements of the Sports Picture Company state distinctly that we do not claim to have the original films, but that Charles Cutler posed as Jeffries, and Cleve Hawkins likewise assumed the character of Johnson.

"To preclude all possibility of mis-apprehension our advertisements mention in prominent type that ours are not the original pictures. In no manner do we mislead the public as to what we have to offer.

"You may with the highest degree of honesty inform the public with as much publicity as you have in the item referred to in this letter, that I am NOT the manufacturer of the "Girl in Blue" that I did not fake the Gans-Nelson or any other fight; that I never was arrested for stealing the Britt-Nelson Fight pictures, and that I did not operate a duping plant in Philadelphia or Peck Court, Chicago, Ill.

"I hereby authorize you to give the fullest publicity as to a single act of mine in or out of the moving picture business that was not warranted by the strictest code of ethics, or governed by the best moral or business integrity.

"A copy of this letter will be sent to the leading trade papers in case this matter is neglected in your next issue."

We are pleased to give Mr. MacMillan's denial the publicity he desires, but cannot make out exactly why he should wish to deny all the various things we did not say about him. For example: Mr. McQuade did not say that he was the manufacturer of the Girl in Blue; that he faked the Gans-Nelson fight; that he was arrested for stealing the Britt-Nelson fight pictures, or that he ran a duping plant in any city. This is what Mr. McQuade did say in the issue of The Index mentioned by Mr. MacMillan:

McMILLAN FAKES RENO CONTEST.

A. W. McMillan, of this city, well known as an "independent" manufacturer of fake film, made fake pictures of the Reno contest at Forest Park, an amusement resort outside of the city limits, on Wednesday, July 13. "Kid" Cutler, now a wrestler and at one time the sparring partner of John L. Sullivan, personated Jeffries, and a colored "pug," called Hawkins, appeared as Johnson.

McMillan makes no effort to conceal the fact that the pictures are spurious; on the contrary, he announces that they are a reproduction of the Jeffries-Johnson mill. He expects to reap a rich harvest from "independent" exhibitors who are ready to extract nickels from the pockets of their patrons at any hazard. McMillan at one time owned the Exclusive Exchange, an "independent" concern, which he sold to the owners of the Precision Exchange, of Pittsburg, several months ago. It takes brazen hardihood to advertise wrong-doing; but nothing in that line is impossible to an "independent."

With all due respect to Mr. MacMillan's desire to have his fight pictures known as "reproductions," he knows that it has long been customary to call such imitations "fakes." The fight from which he made his pictures certainly was a "fake" fight. Any picture that is not a genuine picture of the event it pretends to portray may properly be termed a "fake." While this practice of "faking" events was once common among picture makers, it is a practice that few reputable manufacturers, if any, would resort to these days. With all due respect to Mr. MacMillan's honesty of purpose and clean record, there is a suspicion that the "reproduction" of the Reno contest is an attempt to trade an "imitation," a "counterfeit," upon the reputation of the real thing. The fact that it is advertised as a "reproduction" does not greatly change the situation.

In all other respects we offer our sincere apologies to Mr. MacMillan.

EDISON COMPANY HOME

Stock Players Back From Northwest With Bag Full of Good Pictures

The Edison stock company of picture players which went up into the Canadian provinces of Alberta and British Columbia some weeks ago with a bagful of scenarios especially written for that trip, have returned with those scenarios converted into good motion pictures—all good stories in themselves, but greatly enhanced in interest by the "local color" of the Canadian Northwest.

None of these picture stories are quite ready to be shown, but we have the word of Producing Manager Mr. H. C. Plimpton that the company got a lot of fine stuff, and we have come, in the light of past performances, to respect the word of Mr. Plimpton.

One of the Canadian subjects touches closely farm life in the northwest; another deals with the famous corps of mounted police who keep crooked things straight along the fringe of civilization. Other characteristic industries along the route, through the famous Canadian Rockies and clear away to the coast where fishermen "go down to the sea in ships."

The first of the series will appear about September 20th, and will be reviewed in The Index just prior to release.

A NEW EDISON TRAVELING REPRESENTATIVE.

Mr. F. L. Hough has been appointed special traveling representative and demonstrator of the Edison Model B for the Edison Company. His territory will cover the Middle Western States, and his methods will be similar to those employed by their Eastern agent, Mr. F. H. Stewart. In each city and town on his itinerary Mr. Hough will arrange for a special demonstration of the Model B at one of the local theatres, to which all managers, operators and interested parties will be invited. Mr. Hough left for Chicago on August 20 to begin operation.

FIGHT PICTURES FOR MICHIGAN.

The Michigan Fight Pictures company, of Grand Rapids, with a capital of $10,000, which has filed articles of incorporation with the secretary of state at Lansing, is for the purpose of controlling and exhibiting in this state the moving pictures of the Jeffries-Johnson fight, and will be continued for special purposes such as this. It is expected to show the fight pictures here, either during home-coming week, August 22 to 27, or the week of the West Michigan State fair, September 12 to 17.

ZEITZ TO MANAGE GANE'S THEATRE.

Rodo R. Zeitz, who has been serving as manager of the Palace Theatre, 734-736 Penn street, Reading, Pa., for some months, retired last week having accepted the management of the new Eastern theatre, the Newmeyer, owned by William R. Gane, the New York amusement caterer, handling a string of popular vaudeville houses in the East.

The Newmeyer, which is a $100,000 proposition, opens on August 29, and will be devoted to vaudeville and motion pictures. It is a very handsome playhouse and will run big attractions. Zeitz, who made a great success of the Palace, making it a money winner all through the summer, has the best wishes of a wide circle of friends in his new enterprise.

The Newmeyer is the latest of Mr. Gane's new enterprizes.

ESSANAY CONTEST DRAWING TO A CLOSE

Judges Will Consider Contributions and Select New Name Next Week

One hundred dollars for a name! You will have to hurry if you have not contributed to the Essanay Company's New Name Contest as the contest closes next Thursday, Sept. 1.

Is there still a chance of winning? Yes, there is always a chance but you will have to come on with something classy if you want to win the hundred. There have been hundreds of new names received and many of these are of the real quality kind. However, there is room for improvement in all of them and the winning name may be yet to come.

When the contest closes next week three prominent Chicago film men, representing the three branches of the industry, the manufacturer, film exchange manager, and exhibitor, will begin considering the hundreds of contributions received. These men are well known and will give impartial and authoritative criticism of the contributions and a decision will be rendered as soon as possible thereafter.

The Essanay Company have received many letters from exhibitors all over the country endorsing the Essanay Company's contest and requesting that they also be permitted to offer special prizes if the Essanay contest winner is of their city. The Essanay Company have therefore prepared special printed matter and press notices for the exhibitors' local papers and extended an invitation to all to join in obtaining a suitable new name for the motion picture theatre entertainment. The following press notice from the Essanay Company is for all exhibitors who desire to interest their patrons in the contest. It is undoubtedly a good advertising proposition for all the picture theatres and should be used.

PICTURE THEATRE HAS NOVEL CONTEST.

One Hundred Dollars Offered for New Name.

Manager ————, of the ———— Theatre, has announced a novel contest to be conducted by his theatre in co-operation with the Essanay Film Mfg. Co., of Chicago, for a new name for "moving picture show," and offers a prize of $100 to the winner. "Moving picture show," "Nickelodeon," "Five-cent Theatre" and other names used to describe these entertainments, it is claimed by the picture people, are ante-date and do not do the beautiful entertainment justice in the way of nomenclature.

The contest, which was inaugurated by the Essanay Company, has attracted the interest and attention of picture theatre patrons all over the country, but Manager ———— is making special endeavor that the prize may be won by a ———— citizen. As a further inducement, he has offered another prize if the winner is of this city.

"Our announcement of the contest has already aroused considerable interest," said Mr. ————, "and many of our patrons have contributed to the Essanay Company's Contest Editor. What is wanted is a suitable name, short and to the point, and must comprehensively carry the idea of 'moving picture show.' The name should be euphonious and suggest the real dignity and high quality of the entertainment offered by the motion picture houses.

"The last few years has seen enormous strides in the moving picture field, and millions of dollars are spent each year by the manufacturers of films in producing thoroughly artistic subjects. At first tolerated as a fad that would soon pass away, the motion picture has firmly established itself as an important factor not only in the amusement field, but in the educational as well. The motion picture theatre offers an inexpensive entertainment, but not a 'cheap' one. It has undoubtedly come to stay."

The terms of the contest conducted by the ————. Theatre, in co-operation with the Essanay Film Mfg. Co., are given below.

One hundred dollars is offered for a new name for "moving picture show," which will be used as a new name for the —— Theatre and for shows of that kind all over the country.

The contest is open to anyone, anywhere, to send any number of names, and the first one sending the winning name will surely get the $100. The name will possibly be used all over the country, but the shows at this city will be the first to adopt it.

The word should be typewritten or written plainly in ink on the face of an envelope, while the address of the contributor of the word should be written on a separate slip and sealed within the envelope.

As the envelopes are received, they will be time-stamped, so that in case there is more than one contribution of the prize-winning word the envelope which is received first at the office, address below, will contain the name of the winner of the $100.

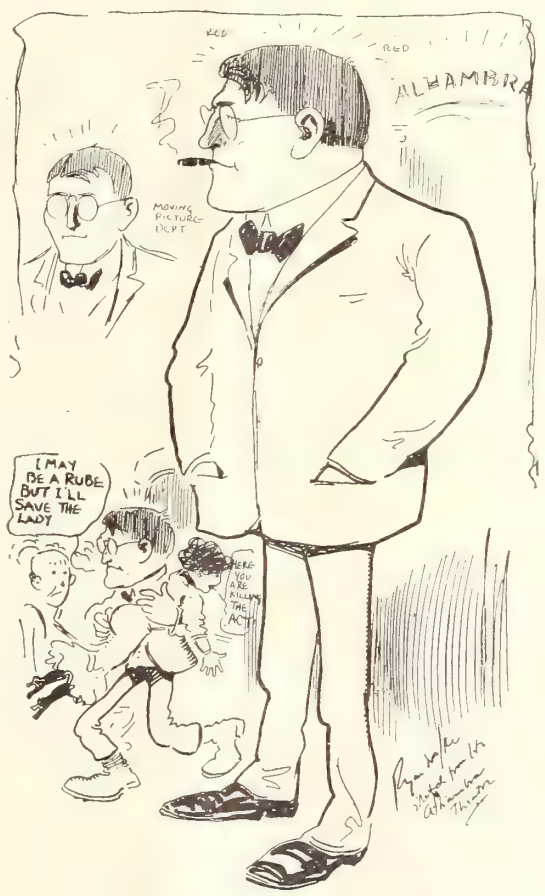
The judges will be appointed and the contest handled by the Essanay Company, of Chicago.

The contest closes September 1, and the winner will be announced as soon as possible thereafter.

All contributions must be sent by the contestants to the Contest Editor, Essanay Film Mfg. Co., 435 N. Clark Street, Chicago, Ill.

WILL OPEN NEW HOUSE SEPT. 5.

Freeport's (Ill.) new place of amusement in the Hall building, which will be known as the Orpheum. A large force of men are at work making the necessary alterations and it is expected that the place will be open to the public by September 5. The bookings will be made through the Western Vaudeville association, assuring high-class attractions for Freeport, as this is the company which books for the Majestic theatre, Chicago. Messrs. Bender & Foster are not sparing any expense in fitting the place up and when the improvement is completed it will be one of the best show houses in this vicinity. The house will also run pictures between the vaudeville acts.



"HEY RUBE."

We have always insisted that a pictureman had no business monkeying with vaudeville. They are certain to get in bad if they do. The above illustration, intended by our cartoonist to be a "true to life" likeness of one of the best known picturemen of New York, really illustrates the "horrible example" of the pictureman in vaudeville, and the incident which marked his downfall. Notwithstanding the fact that this man is a personal friend of the editor, The Index declines to conceal his identity, even upon the ground of friendship, or at the earnest solicitations of his many other friends. He is just the "horrible example" and that's all. Permit us to introduce Mr. Arthur White in his great rescue act, "Saving the Lady," in one; time, 2 min.; on the Percy Williams circuit. Great hit.

SIX NEW HOUSES FOR PHILADELPHIA.

Felix Isman, of Philadelphia, Pa., is said to be heavily interested in a string of six motion picture and vaudeville theatres, which are soon to be erected in the "Quaker City." These houses will be built by the Great Northern Theatrical company, which was recently incorporated at Wilmington, Del. One of the incorporators is Jules Mastbaum, who, for a long time, has been associated with Mr. Isman.

The first house, which will be located at Broad street and Erie avenue, will seat in the neighborhood of 1,000 persons. The other houses will be located in Germantown, Frankford and South Philadelphia. Each of these houses will be built on most modern lines and will be equipped with every motion picture device.

It is expected that the houses will be ready some time during the coming winter.

ROYAL THEATRE TO MOVE.

The proprietors of the Royal theatre in South Range, Mich., announced a few days ago that new quarters would be occupied after the first of September. The popular little playhouse will be moved from its present location to the Kaleva Temple on Trimountain avenue. Carpenters are now completing the building and it will be ready for the opening the first week in September.

The Royal theatre in its new quarters will accommodate twice as many people at one time as now. There will be a larger room in which the picture machine will be installed and operated. The front of the building will be a duplicate of others in the country which answer a similar purpose.

It is intended to purchase an entirely new outfit. Only the seats which are now in use will be used in the new building. The management will then show three films each evening instead of two and a change of program will be given four times a week. Under the present method the reeling is done by hand, but the unwinding will be done electrically with the installation of the new machine.

MINISTERS LIKE JOURNAL'S OFFER.

That generous offer made by the Milwaukee Journal to the school board to provide for ten free motion picture entertainments in the public schools this fall has greatly aroused the clergy of that city, who most heartily endorse the movement. So enthused have some of the Methodist ministers become that the Rev. R. R. McKaig, pastor of the Epworth church, has offered the gymnasium of his church for the use of such entertainments for the factory boys and girls.

The clergyman expressed himself as being in favor of such entertainments, as he thinks they will have a great moral effect on that class of young people, who will get acquainted more with the social problems and will lead to better conditions.

Another enthusiastic citizen is Mayor Emil Sidel, who has favored the Journal's plan all along. In fact it was Mayor Sidel who first introduced the plan of running motion picture and dancing entertainments in public schools. Should the plans be put through, it is expected that there will be a great awakening in Milwaukee within a short time and many of the dance halls, where crime is so abundant, will be put out of business.

WANTED—Management of first class vaudeville and picture theatre; five years' experience; strictly temperate and reliable. Address Manager, 54 So. Russell St., Boston, Mass.

CHICAGO LETTER

By James S. McQuade

AT this writing, the court still reserves its decision in the mandamus suit brought by the Messrs. Jones & Spoor for a permit for the exhibition of the Jeffries-Johnson pictures, the case having been heard a week ago. The delay, which has been caused by Chief of Police Steward's order of several weeks ago, has impaired considerably the value of the Chicago rights to the purchasers, for the reason that desirable theatres, which could have been formerly secured for the exhibitions, are now booked up with regular season attractions, and it would be difficult to make satisfactory arrangements.

The interest in the pictures, however, remains unabated, and numerous theatregoers of the better class, with whom I have conversed on the subject, are still hopeful of the ultimate outcome and eager to witness the Reno contest in pictorial form.

Down at Gary, Ind., last week, an "independent" exhibitor barely escaped being mobbed by angry citizens who had paid their money to see the legitimate pictures of the "mill," and then discovered that they were hoaxed by an exhibition of fake films made in Chicago. The fakers are having a hard time of it, as every "independent" exhibitor is well aware of the fact that the public are thoroughly posted, and that they will resent in a forcible manner any attempt to defraud them. They want the licensed pictures of the Reno affair, or none.

Remarkable Proceedings of Los Angeles Supervisors.

It is amazing to read of some of the practices resorted to in other cities where the authorities, in their action against the Jeffries-Johnson pictures, are actuated by political or other motives. I have just received a clipping of the Los Angeles "Express," of recent date, which gives an account of the remarkable proceedings of the supervisors of that city in the matter of permits for these pictures. The reader can glean for himself the nature of much of the opposition that is made against the pictures and the shameless disregard shown for right and justice by some city officials of brief authority by reading the news article referred to:

FIGHT FILM IMMORAL, BUT PRIZE FIGHT O. K.

With a flourish of attempted oratory, Supervisor "Tus" Eldridge posed as a promoter of public morals to-day by proposing an ordinance to prohibit prize fight pictures in Los Angeles County, but immediately afterwards he objected to the consideration of a proposition to prohibit prize fights themselves when the question was checked up to him by Supervisor Pridham.

His pompous stand against the pictures was so evidently grandstand play when Pridham suggested eliminating prize fights also that it was laughable.

The other two members of the "solid three," however, came to Eldridge's assistance, and Pridham's proposal to put the ban on prize fights also was promptly squelched.

Showing pictures of prize fights is a dreadful crime, according to the "solid three"—Eldridge, McCabe and Nellis—but the prize fights themselves—well, that's different.

Incidentally the flurry in the board of supervisors probably will bring to the front the proposed new license ordinance which has been hidden away in the ordinance committee, of which McCabe is chairman, for months—possibly waiting until the primaries are over.

Shortly before noon Eldridge arose and presented the ordinance prohibiting prize fight pictures, moving its immediate passage.

The clerk began to call the roll, and Manning and Eldridge voted in the affirmative, but when Pridham's name was reached he said:

"Before voting on this ordinance, I would like to ask if the board will not include in it the provisions which have been eliminated from the license ordinance in secret, relating to prize fights themselves."

"That's an altogether different question," asserted Eldridge, "and it should not be allowed to butt in here on this ordinance."

Chairman Nellis said it had nothing to do with the ordinance before the board.

"I am not asking for anything the members of this board are not thoroughly conversant with," said Pridham, "and you cannot plead ignorance of it. I do not see why we should prohibit prize fight pictures and allow the prize fights themselves to continue.

"I move," continued Pridham, "that this matter be deferred and referred to the district attorney to incorporate the other provisions. I am very much in favor of this ordinance, but I think we should prohibit prize fights also."

Eldridge jumped up again.

"The trouble here is that the wrong man got hold of this ordinance and introduced it," he said.

"That is where you are wrong," replied Pridham. "You should have all the credit for introducing this ordinance, but I believe we ought to prohibit prize fights also."

Nellis tried to explain that there is need to rush the picture ordinance because somebody might exhibit some prize fight pictures somewhere out in the country, but there is no immediate call for an anti-prize fight ordinance, and he ruled Pridham's motion out of order, although it had been seconded by Manning.

Pridham promptly appealed from this decision, but the "solid three" stood together against Manning and Pridham.

When the roll call proceeded the vote was unanimous for the anti-picture ordinance, and immediately afterward Pridham gave notice that he would call up the long-deferred license ordinance later in the day. "That is," he added, "if it is in order."

The ordinance just passed, prohibiting moving pictures of prize fights, fixes a penalty of not more than a $50 fine or 50 days imprisonment, or both, for its violation, and will become effective Aug. 23.

The license ordinance as drawn by Deputy District Attorney Shaw did not prohibit prize fights, but put restrictions on the number of rounds that could be fought, the size of the gloves and similar features.

"I would like to have made it stronger," said Mr. Shaw to-day, "but I was afraid the board would not stand for it."

It appears from Pridham's remarks that even the mild restrictions put in by Mr. Shaw have been eliminated by the ordinance committee, but still the ordinance has been held back from passage for many weeks.

Calumet Purchased by General Film Co.

The working forces of the Calumet exchange, this city, were added to those of the General Film Co., at 85 Dearborn Street, Saturday, August 13, that concern having been purchased from J. R. Frueler, former owner, by the latter company.

F. C. Aiken, manager of the General Film Co. here, had made all arrangements for the merging of the Calumet's business with that already under his control, so that the transfer was made without a hitch of any kind. The aspect of the offices at 85 Dearborn is fast assuming the likeness of the general auditing department of a great railroad, and this does not include the workers behind the scenes, who are not in view when a visitor enters. Everything runs with the rhythmic precision of a perfect system, and the needs of exhibitors in this city and in far-away outside points are attended to without a sign of friction or confusion.

Manager Mergener of the Calumet returned to Milwaukee, where he will fill the position formerly held by him in the Western Film Exchange of that city.

Denver Film Exchange Sold to General Film Co.

H. H. Buckwalter, proprietor of the Denver Film Exchange, left for his home city Tuesday, August 16, having stopped over here on the journey from New York to attend to some business matters and to make the customary calls on his numerous friends in the city.

Mr. Buckwalter informed me that, while in New York, he sold the Denver Film Exchange to the General Film Co., and that the business will be transferred to the latter company on August 29.

Mr. Buckwalter stated that summer business in the picture field has kept up to a good paying volume all through the hot weather and that the Fall holds out very promising results.

The Pipe Organ Popular.

A. F. Powers, Mgr., of the Chicago Pipe Organ Co., recently closed a contract for installing a pipe organ in the Castle theatre at Bloomington, Ill., which will reopen Aug. 29.

The success that has followed the installation of pipe organs in many theatres throughout the country by his company induced Mr. Goldberg, the proprietor of the Castle to add this feature to his entertainment.

Among the theatres that have recently installed these pipe-organs are: the Majestic, Memphis, Tenn.; the Princess and Modjeska theatres, Milwaukee; the Orpheum of Indianapolis, and the Fox theatre of Aurora, Ill. All these theatres are enjoying a liberal patronage. The Alcazar theatre, Chicago, which has the distinction of being the first moving picture theatre to use the pipe-organ, owes much of its success to the innovation, as the management is not slow to acknowledge.

The addition of a pipe-organ to the entertainment of moving picture theatres is fast gaining ground, and Mr. Powers predicts that, in the near future, in the best theatres, a pipe-organ will be considered one of the necessities, as much so as the piano and illustrated song.

Birmingham, Ala., Business Greatest Ever.

C. F. Bailey, of the Theatre Film Supply Co., of Birmingham, Ala., was in the city a few days last week and enjoyed himself thoroughly in making the rounds to greet his many friends in Chicago. I caught my first sight of Mr. Bailey in the offices of the Pathe Freres, where he was warmly welcomed by K. W. Linn.

Mr. Bailey is taking a short vacation and after doing Chicago will take a trip through Northern Michigan, in the lake region. Mr. Bailey told me that they have had the best summer business in Birmingham, in the whole history of pictures, and this notwithstanding the rainy season. This he attributes to the better class of theatres springing up and to the greater harmony existing among licensed exchanges in that territory. Mr. Bailey gives Mr. Berst, vice-president of the Pathe Freres, credit for the harmony now existing, as, on his last visit, he brought the exchange men together and showed them the evils of needless opposition.

Exhibit, Columbus, A Model Theatre.

K. W. Linn, Western manager of the Pathe Freres, paid a flying visit recently to Indianapolis, Cincinnati, Columbus, Cleveland, Toledo and Minneapolis. Mr. Linn states that he found everywhere an increasing demand for the licensed product and, incidentally, for Pathe American subjects.

In Columbus, Mr. Linn called on Max Stearn, owner of the Exhibit theatre, and he is somewhat enthusiastic in his praise of the management of that house, its equipment and appointments.

"The operating room is the best I have ever seen," says Mr. Linn. "Not a speck of dust anywhere and everything in its proper place. Well ventilated, too, and the two machines that are constantly used are kept in the finest shape. The Exhibit is a model of comfort and cleanliness and the large patronage shows that all these things are appreciated."

Notwithstanding the street car strike the pic-

"THE BIG SCOOP"

A Newspaper Drama of Unusual Interest by Edison Players

NEWSPAPERMEN who have acquired the "picture habit" will be interested in one of the Edison company's subjects soon to be released under the title "The Big Scoop." In newspaper parlance "scoop" is the term used to designate a story which has been secured exclusively for a certain paper by an alert reporter and which does not appear in any other paper. The reporter who lands the "scoop" is the real hero of the office for the time being.

According to the picture story one number of the staff of a big daily paper had lost his job because he got drunk and could not work when he was wanted. On a subsequent appeal for reinstatement he is coldly turned down. Entering a restaurant he happens to overhear the conversation of two men that causes him to sit up. Watching them as closely as he dares he gets an inkling of their business, which seems to be important. One of them drops a paper as he leaves the place and the reporter picks it up. It gives him the clue he wants and he becomes all action.

"THE BIG SCOOP."

It appears that one of the big financial institutions of the city is in difficulty and a night meeting is to be held with the bank examiner who proposes to close the bank. By great effort and the assistance of the paper picked up in the cafe the reporter manages to penetrate the barriers to the secret meeting where he manages to "fix" the telephone, after which he goes to the switchboard in the building and hears all that is said at the meeting.

Every newspaper reporter will be interested in following the picture reporter's efforts to get his story in the paper. There is a hurried telephone message to the office then a wild rush to get there. A newsroom thrown into confusion by the importance of the news. Presses are stopped in spite of remonstrance; the story rushed through and finally a proof of the form taken and shown—all true to life.

The importance of the "scoop" regains the reporter his job and offers of a big time by his friends. He refuses the latter and returns to his wife who has been anxiously waiting for him to come home.

A private view of this picture was given to a number of newspapermen and this comment was printed in the New York Times:

Patrons of moving picture shows in a few weeks will be able to see a realistic representation of life in a newspaper office. At the Edison Studio, 2826 Decatur avenue, Bedford Park, the Edison Mfg. Co. has just completed a film telling the story of a great "scoop." The scenario, as far as it shows the workings of a newspaper office, is the work of Stephen Chalmers.

The first scene shows the city editor's room. He calls a reporter, but he has dined too freely and is unfit for work. The editor discharges him and he goes home vowing never again to drink. The next day he overhears two men talking of the financial condition of a bank. One drops a paper and the reporter picks it up. He tracks them to Wall Street.

The next scene shows the directors of the institution in consultation. The reporter gains admission by bringing back the paper, and by a trick on the telephone he hears the bank examiner declare that the bank must close its doors. The reporter notifies the office, the presses are stopped until he appears and dictates his story to a typewriter.

When the paper is out the reporter is reinstated and his friends invite him to go out and celebrate, but he refuses. He hastens home to his wife and the film closes with him locked in her arms.

Those who saw the film at a private view expressed considerable skepticism as to the methods and morals of the great scoop, but they were loud in praise of the realism of the scenes in the newspaper office.

"ALICE IN WONDERLAND."

Of course it's all a dream—a picture man's dream, too, but the Edison producers have shown that dreams can become almost true in a camera. The title of this dream picture soon to be released is "The Adventures of Alice in Wonderland." Alice is a very beautiful little girl. One summer afternoon she became very tired picking the petals from the daisy blossoms when a funny rabbit comes along and dodges into a hole in the ground. Alice follows and such a lot of funny things happen to her until she finally wakes up and discovers that she fell asleep and just dreamed it all.

This picture will certainly interest and mystify the little folks, and some grown-ups, too, will have a good time guessing how it was done. The accompanying picture gives an idea of strange things in Wonderland as they really are.

"ALICE IN WONDERLAND."

BLOODY BROOK MASSACRE PORTRAYED

Edison Players Enact Famous Indian Tragedy of 1675 at Whatley, Mass.

Fully 1,000 people gathered at Whately Glen, Mass., July 27, to witness the portrayal by the Edison company of New York, of the scenes incident to the massacre of Captain Lathrop and his men at Bloody Brook in 1675. The second visit of the company attracted fully as great an interest, as did the first at Deerfield last February, auto parties coming from distant towns and cities, besides several electric car loads from Greenfield.

The Bloody Brook scenes were enacted by the Edison company of 32 actors, assisted by 60 local young men, who took the parts of soldiers and Indians. Stage Manager Frank McGlynn was in charge of the acting and J. H. White superintended the photography. There were three scenes presented, the wagon train approaching the ambush, the Indians secreting themselves in the thicket and the massacre.

The massacre was the big scene, and was admirably handled. The train of ox teams loaded with grain were halted as they were crossing the brook, while the drivers and soldiers sat down to rest. Soon the nearby grape vines attracted their attention and leaving their arms on the ground, the soldiers climbed to pick the fruit.

Preliminary to going to the Glen Stage Manager McGlynn called on Historian George Sheldon at Deerfield and with Mr. Sheldon's assistance made a picture which will be used as an introduction to the Bloody Brook pictures. Mr. Sheldon was taken in the doorway of his picturesque home, pointing out to visitors of the present day the direction in which the scene of the massacre lies.

The same tourists were later photographed examining the Bloody Brook monument, at South Deerfield. From these two scenes the picture will dissolve and then be followed by views of the massacre.

Herbert S. Streeter, who interested the Edison company in Deerfield and induced them to come here for a colonial picture expects to exhibit these pictures at his theatre at Greenfield, Mass., early in October.

The foregoing is a local newspaper account of the taking of the final scenes of the Edison Deerfield Massacre picture soon to be released.

GLOBE MOVING PICTURES.

Owing to the extreme heat the management of the Globe Moving pictures, Norwood, Mass., have decided to show on but one day a week during August. The entertainments will take place on Saturday with a matinee at 2 o'clock in the afternoon and two shows in the evening, one at 7.30 and the other at 9, with ten minutes intermission.

Beginning with September 1, the usual three nights a week, Thursday, Friday and Saturday, will be resumed, with the Saturday matinee.

NEW HOUSE A BEAUTY

Columbia, Peoria's New Theatre Will Open With Pictures Soon

Peoria will have another amusement house within a few weeks, when the Columbia theatre opens at 209 South Adams street. This playhouse, which is under the management of the Alhambra Amusement Company, will be first operated as a five-cent picture house, but may later be changed to a ten-cent vaudeville and picture theatre. It has been constructed with this in view, the stage equipment being such that the transition will be easily affected.

The builders have had two objects in mind continually. One has been to construct a theatre that would be well ventilated. A powerful 36-inch fan, situated in the front wall, adjoining the stage will make such a current of air as to change the atmosphere of the theatre completely in but a few minutes. Electric fans placed along the side walls and in the front and rear will also contribute materially to the comfort of the patrons. The other object attained is that the building is as nearly fireproof as such a structure can be made. The construction of the floors, walls, stage and fixtures has been carried on with this in mind. The results are highly gratifying to the management who declare that they now have an amusement house that will be safe as possible and one that can be readily cleared. The building will accommodate 375 patrons. There are two entrances from Adams street, so that congestion will be entirely avoided. The rear exit leads directly back to the alleyway, and is wide, in plain sight and entirely free from obstacles.

The machine booth is made of galvanized iron and is absolutely fireproof.

The interior decorations in yellow and gold are very tasteful and attractive to the eye. A handsomely executed medallion adorns the proscenium arch. The ceiling is brilliantly lighted by clusters set in beautifully executed circles. The woodwork and opera chairs are finished in rich mahogany. The floor will be covered with a heavy linoleum.

The entrance to this new playhouse is one of the most attractive along the street. Indeed, many more pretentious theatres might well be proud of such a lobby. The walls are lined with costly and highly polished marbles that gleam invitingly. This same material is also used for the constructon of the ticket booth. The ceiling is ornately decorated with a chaste design that helps in making the whole structure one of exceeding beauty and attractiveness.

JOHN B. ASHTON INCORPORATES.

The Rex Theatre company, the American Amusement company, the Southern Theatre company and the Edna Theatre company, of Utah, have incorporated with John B. Ashton, of Provo, Utah, as president and general manager. The capital stock is not named, but from the class and amount of business these theatres do, it will run up in the thousands of dollars.

The Ellen and Majestic, of Provo, are under the personal management of Mr. Ashton. The Lyric theatre is located at American Fork and the Edna theatre is located at Spanish Fork.

All the houses are equipped with the latest devices for motion pictures. There are up-to-date picture machines, fireproof booths, orchestras and the latest illustrated songs.

HANK AND LANK

In Breezy Essanay Filmlets

By JAMES S. McQUADE

'WAY back in the early 80's, I recall how eagerly every reader of "Puck" looked forward to the coming Saturday, when the new writing on "Freddie's Slate" would be read with veritable spasms of mirth. Since then Opper has explored numerous other sunny places in the realms of Laughter, the denizens of which have brought blissful tonic to the fagged brains and "edged" nerves of hundreds of thousands. And so with our other great cartoonists, whom Nature has blessed with the gift of seeing the humorous sides of things in life, they have contributed more, perhaps, to the general health and to the preservation of law and order than all the drugs and sworn officers of the law can place to their credit.

Now what do you think of the probability—nay the assurance—that we are going to have in moving pictures what the great dailies have in their cartoons; if, instead of immobile figures in black and white on the printed page, we shall have their living embodiment, in ecstatic and unctuous action, on the screen of the picture theatre? Don't you think that such a consummation would be productive of cachinnations, of the non-hysterical sort, the like of which old Melancholy has not bucked up against since Mother Eve was so foolish as to eat that apple? I think so, and I'll try and tell you why.

I was out at the Essanay factory yesterday to see what I could glean that might be of interest to Film Index readers. And, in passing, I think I owe it to the officials out there to announce that they are a mighty fine bunch, the kind that you cannot help warming up to, because they always take such a hearty interest in trying to help you out. But, back to the story.

While seated in the main office with G. M. Anderson, Geo. K. Spoor's partner in the Essanay Film Manufacturing Company, I was let into the secret that he had been engaged, more or less, for the past week in exploiting a new series of short subjects, of the eccentric comedy type, which will be known as the "Hank and Lank" film series. The idea has been swirling through his brain for the past six months, but the stress of work, as the Western producer, prevented him from giving it such attention as would enable him to reduce it to practical form. The opportunity, however, was offered during Mr. Anderson's summer stay at the factory, where he has had charge of the producing department since his return from the West.

"I have long been impressed that we could produce in pictures the short exploits or doings of two eccentric characters, somewhat akin to the cartoon types seen in the leading papers," said Mr. Anderson. "Of course each subject in the series will have its very obvious plot, and great care will be exercised to keep the enaction of the story away from the slapstick variety of comedy. Each story of the escapades of Hank and Lank will be legitimate in its way, and the producing of each will aim at giving point to the humor of a situation without resorting to horse play or vulgarity. Our aim is to invest this series of short films with a snap and humorous action that will appeal to every picture lover—young, middle aged and old. Every one likes to indulge in a good hearty laugh and it is the mission of Hank and Lank to make them laugh.

"After formulating my plan and fixing in my mind the two character types required for the pictures, I set out to find the men who would be suited to assume the characters. The shorter man, Hank, I found in Augustus Carney, one of the members of our stock company here; the other, Lank, gave me some trouble to find. One day, quite accidentally, while walking in the street, I spied a young man who immediately appealed to my judgment as being the man I wanted. He is six feet two inches in height and weighs 122 pounds, quite a contrast with Mr. Carney, who measures a little over five feet. Victor Potel is his name, and he had no stage training whatever when I employed him. How he has acquitted himself, under my supervision, in the role of Lank, you can judge for yourself."

The matter of judging for myself meant quite a lot to the man in charge of the Hank and Lank films then negatived, as he had to put the major portion of them together on short notice, so that they could be exhibited for the first time. Even Mr. Anderson, himself, had not a chance to see and judge of the results of his labors, and so the private projecting room was well filled by the official staff and the members of the stock company, not then engaged, when the word was passed that the films were ready.

I want to impress on readers, right here, that all the Hank and Lank series of subjects will be filmlets—short films. Of the four that were completed when I witnessed the first exhibition, viz., "Joy Riding," "Getting some Eats." "Making a Mash" and "Duding Up Some," the lengths in order were: 234, 539, 325 and 320 feet. And I learned from Mr. Anderson that, in the future, the length will seldom exceed 300 or 320 feet. The intention is to make these filmlets a supplement to the regular Wednesday release comedies, the two combined making up 1,000 feet, approximately. These short, racy, exhilarating Hank and Lank films will form the pousse cafe of the Essanay comedy treats every Wednesday, and are bound to win for the Indian Head trade mark a halo setting that will stand for real, clean, joyous laughter. But I am going ahead of the story.

Joy Riding.

"Joy Riding" was the first of the series produced, and will be released with the Western subject, "The Pony Express," on September 17. After that date a Hank and Lank filmlet will be released every Wednesday with a comedy.

Here we catch the first glimpse of the short and tall cronies, who have decided to taste the joys of an automobile ride. The owners of the car are in a residence near by, making a call. As they appear in the doorway, about to board the vehicle, Lank falls into a timely fit. He is squirming around in the dust at a lively rate, when Hank has rushed to the travelers and brought them to the scene. Sympathetic, they agree to take the afflicted Lank to a hospital in the city many miles away. He is lifted and placed in the back seat. The owners take the front seat, one of them acting as driver. Engrossed with the subject of their conversation, the two gentlemen are unaware that Lank has miraculously recovered and that he sits puffing a cigar and enjoying the scenery as it flits by. When the car approaches the city and has slowed down while rounding a curve, Lank jumps out briskly and doffs his hat politely to the good Samaritans, who are all unconscious of his movements.

Next we see Lank join Hank at an appointed meeting place, and they set out in quest of another automobile to give Hank a taste of high life. Unluckily for the latter, the machine selected this time belongs to a physician. The short hobo sinks into a series of knots and curves as the medical man and his assistant come up, and Lank explains things. The doctor seizes the stricken's man's wrist and feels his pulse. Then he gets his assistant to hold the patient while he pours two large spoonsful of black draught down his throat. Hank, all unconscious of the discerning eye of science, lies passive and allows the loathsome liquid to trickle down his gullet. But he is rudely awakened. The doctor has returned to the attack, armed with a huge pair of forceps that might have served to extract the tooth of a mastodon. As the cold steel of the frightsome implement touches Hank's lips, he opens his eyes. With a whoop and a galvanic spring he is on his feet and in wild panic he charges through a clump of bushes. In the meantime, Lank, who has assumed that the game is sure and who has attributed Hank's yell to the clever playing of his part, has been examining the mechanism of the car. When the physician approaches him menacingly he learns the truth and there is another repetition of a mirthful getaway.

Space forbids a description of the other three filmlets viewed by me, but I assure the reader that I laughed still more heartily at "Getting Some Eats" and again still more heartily at "Making a Mash" and "Duding Up Some." "Making a Mash" is one of the most mirthful incidents I have ever witnessed, on the stage or off, and I am glad to be able to say that I saw it in a moving picture.

Hurrah! for Hank and Lank.

CLARK BUYS VALUABLE PROPERTY.

J. E. Clark, of the Pittsburg Calcium Light and Film Company, of Pittsburg, Pa., has purchased from George N. Newmeyer, master of the Connehen estate, a valuable piece of property, located at Homewood avenue and Bennett street, for which he paid the neat sum of twenty-two thousand dollars.

It is the intention of Mr. Clark of erecting one of the most up-to-date and novel motion picture vaudeville houses in that city. What the cost of the new house will be has not been given out, but it is expected that it will rival the cost of any house of its kind in Pittsburg.

PATHE FRERES.

"A MISCALCULATION."—An eminent astronomer, pursuing his studies of Halley's comet, after rapid calculations, comes to the conclusion that it is impossible for this universe to escape destruction, and that the 18th of May is the date when the end will come. Philosophically resigning himself to fate, he apprises his friends of the coming catastrophe, and suggests that they all join with him in making merry on their last day on earth. They all agree and after a round of gaiety await in the professor's observatory the end with that wonderful calmness which is closely affiliated with Dutch courage. The rising of the sun on the 19th, however, dispels not only all fears, but also all confidence in the professor's powers of prediction, and his friends fall upon him and belabor him with blows for having induced them to neglect their businesses and spend their money.

"BUTTER-MAKING IN NORMANDY."—An educational industrial film, beautifully colored, and depicting picturesque scenes of keen interest.

"SCENES IN NORWAY."—A pretty picture portraying one of the principal waterfalls and various scenes among the Laplanders.

"THE TROUBLES OF A POLICEMAN."—Clancy was a policeman and he always thought that his berth in the police station was one of the softest things an Irishman ever had, until he ran up against the Mulligan boys. These Mulligans numbered several and were a terror to the neighborhod in many ways, and when the territory in which they lived got too warm to hold them, they wandered off on Clancy's beat and played crap on the street in the vacant lots.

One fine Spring morning Clancy spied the aforementioned tribe of Mulligans gleefully losing their mother's hard-earned pennies in a game of crap. Clancy is wild with righteous indignation and succeeds in administering a hearty reproof in a way of a paternal drubbing with his club on that part of the boys' anatomy built for it. The boys swear revenge, and Patrolman Glancy suffers a series of hardships at the hands of these youngsters such as never before befell a simple-minded, kind-hearted policeman.

In the course of his difficulties he runs across Mrs. Mulligan, with terrible results. He dives into the noble Hudson to rescue a drowning lad, only finding that the youngster can swim better than he can, and gets out first.

Finally his many trials get him mixed up with the roundsman, and he is held before the desk sergeant and roundly scored, and so severely is he reprimanded that the next day our fat friend on seeing the self-same Mulligan crew at the self-same game, stealthily approaches in order to break up the band, but on second thought (the troubles of yesterday being fresh in his mind) he sheathes his club and steals quietly away, leaving the Mulligan five undisturbed at their recreation.

"THE LOVERS' WELL."—

"If a maid would her future husband see,
On Hallowe'en night, between twelve and three;
She should go alone if the moon is bright,
And look down in the well on Condon's Heights."

"The troth once plighted,
Let the lovers beware,
Lest some false-hearted maiden
Bring sorrow and care."

The above two verses from an old legend form the basis of the plot of this picture. Theodore, a private soldier, is using his furlough to press his suit with Sadie, and in the opening scene, as they bid farewell, she gives him a daisy, which he places in his pocketbook. The next day Sadie, while reading, comes across the first verse quoted above and that evening goes to the well. Bending over she sees the reflection of Theodore's face, as he has followed her unawares. Delighted to find that he is to be her future husband, she opens the volume and they refer to the poem together. Duty calls him back, however, to his regiment, and a year has elapsed during which he has been promoted to sergeant. He has also fallen madly in love with a flashily dressed girl, who urges him to buy jewelry for her, and who, when he pleads poverty, suggests that he use the regimental funds for that purpose. Left alone in the commander's office one day with the safe unlocked he is tempted, and is about to help himself to the money, when two of his chums enter and persuade him to replace the money and point out to him that he is only the dupe of this girl. Returning to his room he finds the dried daisy in his pocket, which recalls old memories, and he sees a vision of Sadie and himself at the well. Thinking things over he sees what a fool he has been and determines to go and ask her pardon for his neglect and foolishness. He finds her looking into the well again with the poem in her hand, and she is delighted to see again the reflection of his face in the water.

Turning toward him it takes but a few minutes for the young couple to explain and forgive.

"THE CASTAWAY'S RETURN."—A shipwrecked man is sighted and rescued from a barren island by the crew of a small vessel. His appearance is wild, his clothes in rags, and he is apparently demented, inasmuch as he does not appear to be able to talk or understand. From a broken spar found with him it appears that he comes from the same village as his rescuers, and on their return the sailors summon one of the old inhabitants in the hope that he may recognize the waif. He does recognize him as his son-in-law, who has been missing very many years, and the man's wife is summoned, and she tries to bring memory back to her husband. It is without avail, the man's mind is a blank. At last she conceives the idea of arranging their home as it was in the old days. A little child helps by taking her place on the mariner's knee, and it is this that makes the experiment successful. The floodgates of memory are opened, and in a last and very effective scene, the mariner clasps his wife in his arms, whilst the rough sailors and villagers look on delightedly through the open door.

"HOW JACK WON HIS BRIDE."—Jack is desperately in love with Irene, but her parents have determined that she shall marry a man of position and wealth. The disconsolate Jack is thinking over matters, when he comes across an advertisement of a quack offering to change the color of a man's race by means of a serum. Jack purchases a quantity of the black serum and surreptitiously operates on his rival, whose hue immediately deepens to the color of a pure blooded African. Consternation greets the metamorphosis, and the parents and friends of Irene having imprudently tested the wonderful serum are in their turn changed to darkies. Jack and Irene alone escape, and without wasting time get married.

SELIG POLYSCOPE CO.

"DORA THORNE."—The beautiful story of "Dora Thorne" is so well known it hardly needs to be outlined, yet as one never tires of hearing it and for the benefit of the few, we will repeat it.

William Thorne is a gardener, but there is no flower in his care that can compare with the beauty of his daughter, Dora. This, of course, does not pass unnoticed, and as Dora chances to meet Roland, son of the Earl Westley, in the garden, it is a case of love at first sight. They meet frequently thereafter, thus causing the jealousy of Holt, another admirer or Dora, who hastens to inform her father of the meetings. Fearing that nothing good could come of this and also having arranged another marriage for Dora, her father notifies Lord Westley of his son's attention to Dora.

In spite of his father, Roland continues his attentions to the girl of his choice, and while walking with her is wounded by Holt, his rival. Roland and Dora are separated and, thinking she is lost to him, he is about to be engaged to another, when he again meets Dora, who tries to escape, believing that he had cast her aside for another woman. Roland's encounter with Holt—Dora jumps into the river—Roland to the rescue, and at last reconciliation follows. Roland finally succeeds in winning for his wife Dora Thorne, the gardener's daughter.

"THE INDIAN RAIDERS."—The West has never been presented with its absolute fidelity and freshness when transplanted from the actual fields on which the scenes it depicts occurred. One of the most picturesque pages of the world's history would now exist in a hazy cloud of relation through pen and pencil, and would suffer from the doubt due to what might be called the artist's imagination. The embodiment of actual occurrence which thousands of

Dear Sir: Several months ago I bought one of your "HALLBERG" Economizers and the MOTIOGRAPH M. P. machine, and wish to state right here that I am more than pleased with both of them.

The reason I am writing you is that I think you will be interested to hear what happened at my place last Monday night. Two inspectors called on me, and after inspecting the booth, looking after the operator's license, etc., called me over to them and told me that I have the BEST pictures and machine in the Bronx, so you can readily imagine how proud I felt when praise like that came from people who know.

All my patrons are well satisfied with the pictures, as they are flickerless, and don't hurt the eyes, and for that reason I am playing to a full house daily.

Wishing you much success, I remain, Very respectfully yours,, plainsmen can corroborate, procured for Selig the reputation of an indelible brand of conformity to fact and history. The status of Selig's Western pictures defined long ago, their career has given justification for existence on account of ability to present the genuine characters that time will soon exhaust and render year by year a certainty of its future short existence. His rugged method of giving a picture story is as unique as its composition and absolutely true as regards the character of its personalities and participants and faithfulness to a historic realism.

As a picture of romanitc history, savage and singular customs and amusements, and strangely mystical equitation transferred from the then almost mystical land of origin to the metropolitan centers, it was recognized that an innovation of a startling character has entered the field of pictures devoid of all the restrictions of artificiality and clothed in the virility of realism.

Such is the story of the "Indian Raiders." Cal Dempster, a local bad man of the Niobrarra River Country, quarrels with a ranch owner over the sheriff's daughter, and getting the worst of the argument proceeds to instigate a raid on the ranch owners and drives off the horses. He is assisted by a band of outlaw Sioux. Indians, herds of range stock and a general air of Selig makes this the kind of picture that keeps your patrons coming.

VITAGRAPH CO.

"THE THREE CHERRY PITS."—An old French veteran who has distinguished himself in active service under the command of Napoleon Bonaparte and been decorated with "The Cross of the Legion of Honor" for bravery, is proud of his distinction with the old school of gentlemen heroes and bears himself with that hauteur which is noticeable in one of his class.

In search of refreshment, as is his custom, he seats himself at a table in one of the Parisian gardens where, seated at a table opposite, are three young men, who pass remarks about the veteran's odd dress and manners, disrespectfully imitating his actions and casing innuendos upon his peculiarities. Growing bolder in their behavior, one of the young chaps takes a pit from one of the cherries which they are eating and flips it at the veteran. They all laugh as the cherry pit strikes him in the arm.

The old gentleman picks up the pit and ties it in one corner of his handkerchief. Another one of the young men flips a cherry pit at the old soldier and again they laugh as it strikes him in the ear. Quietly the old veteran picks up the second pit and ties it in another corner of his handkerchief. This he repeats with the third cherry, which strikes him over the heart. The youths cannot imagine what the "old codger" means by tying the three pits in the corners of his handkerchief. They laugh heartily as the dignified gentleman leaves the place, and the incident is dismissed from their minds as one of their many pranks.

Some weeks later the young fellows are attending a reception at which they are introduced to the veteran as the most expert duelist in all France. The veteran makes himself known and decides to teach the flippant young men a lesson for their insolence to him at the gardens, challenges each of them to fight him a duel, which they feel honor-bound to accept.

The first youth is wounded in the arm by the old officer, who presents the young man with the cherry pit with which he struck him in the arm, and thus he learns why the pit was tied in the corner of the veteran's handkerchief.

The second youth meets the veteran on the field of honor and is wounded in the ear where his cherry pit struck the veteran while at the restaurant, and the second young man learns why the pit was tied in the corner of the handkerchief. It is now the turn of the young man whose cherry pit struck the veteran over the heart to meet him, and he awaits in fear and trembling when he thinks of the unerring aim of the old warrior. He is almost a wreck when he receives a note to meet him where the bearer will lead him, which is directly to the veteran's home, where the old man is seriously ill.

Lying upon his bed he calls the young man to him and tells him that his honor does not demand that he needlessly take life, therefore he returns the cherry pit which struck him over the heart to the young man who threw it, with his forgiveness.

The closing scene is a very impressive one as the three young men stand about the veteran's bed with bowed heads and hearts filled with profound sorrow and regret for having shown any disrespect for one whom they now honor and revere.

"THE MEN HATERS' CLUB."—It starts with a quarrel between Nell and Dick, who immediately break off their engagement. Nell at once seeks consolation in telling her troubles to some girls, who form themselves in a "Men Haters' Club," call an indignation meeting under a tree and decide to go camping unattended by the sterner sex and thus assert their independence of all mankind. Dick, who has climbed up into a tree, overhears their plans and imparts this news to his friends, and they resolve to form themselves into a "Follow the Girls Club."

The girls engage the necessary chaperone, an angular old maid, and start for the country and camp life, pitch their tent after much trouble in a secluded spot and start in to rough it. The boys follow the girls and locate their camp about a half mile away from the female establishment, enjoyably passing the time awaiting developments.

They soon come in the shape of a storm, which soon blows down the poorly adjusted D. O. M. C.'s tents and leave all the girls unprotected from the drenching rain, and they are obliged to get out of their beds and hustle. Securing the services of a near-by farmer, a real man, things are soon put in shape and they start all over again. The next night they are attacked by a swarm of mosquitos, and, altogether, their D. O. M. Club is not a success. The boys play pranks on the girls by dropping fake spiders through openings in the tent and enjoy their discomfiture.

Last, but not least, of their troubles comes in the form of a couple of tramps, who eat up the camp provisions and then break into their tent. The girls' screams are heard by Dick and his friends, who happen to be strolling in the neighborhood, and they run to the protection of the girls, knocking down the tramps and putting them to flight. The girls are obliged, and only too willing to acknowledge the gallantry of the young men and their graciousness of their deliverance from the "hoboes."

The boys tell them the pleasure is all theirs. The girls and boys begin to pear off arm-and-arm, following the example of Dick and Nell, who are very happy in their reconciliation. The chaperone feels so mad that she has no one to love her that she feels like eating worms—but, behold, a man appears before her, the old farmer, who is cordially welcomed by the "goo-gooish" old "left-over," and soon they are stirring up the flickering sparks of love.

"ROSE LEAVES."—Mrs. Strong, sitting under the rose bushes with her baby, Helen, on her knee, is approached lovingly by her husband, who lovingly speaks to his family and then shakes the rose bushes over their heads, causing the white leaves to fall upon their heads in a shower of rarest sun tints.

Again we see Helen a grown-up girl, fresh from the graduation exercises, happy in possessing her cherished diploma. Just as she is passing with some of her schoolmates under the rose bushes, her father, with the remembrance of his daughter's babyhood in his mind, shakes the bushes, while the white petals of the roses drop down upon Helen and her friends.

Four years later, Helen's father having died, she sees a magazine article on the country girl's opportunities in the city. She decides to venture forth on her own responsibility to test her own independence and ability by securing employment in the metropolis. It is with difficulty, after much pleading, she gains the consent of her mother to go, and it is with some hesitancy on her own part that she summons up courage enough to leave; particularly is this so when the white rose leaves from the garden come fluttering through the window of her room where she is putting on her wraps for departure.

Located in the city in a cheap, poorly furnished room. Helen is trying to keep up her courage and content herself with her meager fare and depleted purse. Hearing a knock at the door, Helen opens it, and one of her newly formed acquaintances, a chorus girl, enters. She calls Helen's attention to the fine clothing she is wearing and tells her to get out and hustle as she does and she will be well cared for when she has succeeded in making herself agreeable to the gentlemen.

She induces Helen to go to dinner with her. The poor child, conscious of her inferior wardrobe, enters the gilded halls of revelry like a timid fawn. Surrounded by the revelers, who are fast becoming intoxicated, Helen wishes for a chance to escape from the trap which has been set for her. One of the party, a young man named Howard, makes advances to Helen. One of the women takes a bouquet of roses from the vase on the table and shakes the rose leaves over the young man and Helen. Like magic they remind Helen of home and mother, and she casts off the spell which has been thrown about her, denounces Howard and his companions, and seizes her wraps and leaves the place.

Howard is nonplussed and offers to bet he will follow Helen and bring her back. He goes, but she will not listen to his invitation to re-visit the restaurant, and tells him to leave her presence. He feels ashamed and avows that he loves her and will prove worthy of her love. Howard returns to the dinner and declares himself a changed man with a fixed purpose to lead a better life, and bids them all goodbye.

BIOGRAPH CO.

"THE SORROWS OF THE UNFAITHFUL."—Oh! deliver us from the fickle woman. No person can spread such woe, disaster and sorrow even unto their ownselves as such a one; and such a one is the leading character of this Biograph subject. In a quaint fishing village we see the childhood sweethearts, Bill and Mary, a boy and girl of about ten or eleven years. Constant companions, they hold for each other a regard beyond their understanding. Ten years roll by, and the boy, now a young man, with a ring approaches the girl and the sweethearts of childhood now renew their vows. They are both very happy, until fate interferes, it seems, to test the girl's sincerity. Bill, while strolling on the shore, which to him since the bethrothal is a Utopia, espies a raft with an object on it that looks like a human being, far out at sea. Dashing into the surf, he swims to the raft and finds the almost exhausted form of a fisherman lying prone upon it. Pushing the raft to the shore, he with the aid of others revives the man, who is a stranger to them all, having put out from a far distant shore. Bill and Joe, the stranger, become staunch friends, and through this Joe meets Mary. She is at once smitten with the stranger and cruelly casts Bill aside for him. Joe, of course, knowing nothing of Bill's love for Mary, reciprocates her affection until he learns the truth. The horror of the situation is vivid. He finds himself the successful rival of the man to whom he owes his life. No, it cannot be, and so repulsing the impetuous Mary he rushes from the place, but not before Bill has seen enough to make him believe Joe has proved himself an ingrate. Joe makes a stenuous effort to reject Mary's advances, but she is persistent. Finally managing to elude her, he sends her the following note: "Mary—Bill saved my life. I will not rob him of his love. I see the raft on the shore. I shall go back to the sea on it. If the sea claims me it is my fate. Joe." She is amazed at this and rushes madly to the shore in view of staying his determination. In the meantime, Bill overtakes Joe at the shore, and ignorant of his purpose, with a blow sends him into the sea, never to return. At this moment Mary rushes up, she, of course, not aware of Joe's fate, and shows Bill the note. He is driven mad upon learning that his deed was entirely unnecessary, so bidding Mary to wait, he wanders out, out into the sea, with an insane idea of recovering his victim.

"WILFUL PEGGY."—There is in the Irish the most commendable of traits, candor. They are truthful in the extreme, and hence pugnacious, for he who has the courage of his convictions must have grit to back it up. This is even so with the fair lasses of the Emerald Isle, for they scorn the art of dissembling, and pretty little Peggy is an example. It was in the early days of this land of poetry and romance that the lord of the manor started out for a stroll. Proceeding quite a distance, it being one of those warm days when everyone and everything, even vegetation, suffers indolence, and not a breath of air is stiring, he was overcome with fatigue and thirst. Approaching the home of Peggy, he finds her napping on the stoop. Arousing her, he commands her to bring him a drink. Commands, mind you. Well, this is surely rubbing Peggy the wrong way. At first she positively refuses to budge, and he then becomes more suppliant and begs her to please favor him with a drink, so she condescends. The lord is deeply impressed by the artless, wilful colleen, and resolves to pay her another visit. At the time of his next call he sees her vanquish a forward admirer who became so bold as to try to kiss her. This indiscreet lad is glad to get out of her reach with nothing more than a few bumps on the head. The lord witnesses this scrimmage from a distance, and reasoning the time inopportune, leaves deeply infatuated with this rough diamond. When next he calls it is to propose marriage. Whee! How Peggy does storm at his proposition until finally induced by her mother to accept this honor. They are married immediately and Peggy meets for the first time the lord's nephew, a handsome, though conceited, chap, who at once imagines he has made an impression upon the peasant bride. During the lawn party which followed the wedding, Peggy finds court manners and etiquette a bit intricate, and while returning the courtesy of some of the ladies trips over her train and goes sprawling. This is viewed with ill-concealed amusement, and Peggy flying into a rage would annihilate the whole party. Rushing into the mansion, she sends the servants flying out of her way. The nephew now appears and attempts to console her. He does this by proposing a horseback ride, but she has no riding costume, and when the nephew suggests her wearing a suit of his, in the spirit of deviltry she consents and rides with him to the inn. The lord, heart-crushed, follows on vengeance bent. However, when he arrives he finds Peggy about to brain the nephew with a stool for daring to attempt to kiss her. One glance at the scene, and the lord realizes she can well take care of herself, for there is his nephew crouched under the table and Peggy with upraised stool daring him to come out. The lord at once mounts his horse, and by a short cut arrives home much ahead of Peggy, who, upon her arrival, shows abject contrition, for she really loves the lord.

EDISON MFG. CO.

"LOVE AND THE LAW."—Adapted from a portion of "David Copperfield," by Charles Dickens. The works of Dickens are so prolific in character and in wonderful characterizations that it is impossible to portray in one film any of his lengthy stories. "David Copperfield" is no exception to this rule. Therefore, the story of this film is not an attempt to relate the entire history of "David Copperfield" or to involve all of the characters of that fascinating tale.

The love story of David and Agnes Wickfield, the daughter of the old lawyer, over whom Uriah Heep holds an influence, is the theme involved in this picture. Certain liberties have been taken with the actual story of "David Copperfield" in order to come within the limits of the reel. The delightful character of Betsy Trotwood is a prominent one, and also our old friend Wilkins Micawber. Wickfield and Heep, the two lawyers, are shown after Uriah becomes a partner of Mr. Wickfield. David is brought by Miss Trotwood, his aunt, and introduced to Mr. Wickfield, her attorney, who agrees to accept David as a student in his office. At the time of the introduction Agnes Wickfield is on the scene and there is a very pretty mutual attraction between the young people. Miss Trotwood surprises David by presenting him with two thousand pounds in Bank of England notes, so that in the pursuit of his studies he will have ample funds to carry him along. As the story progresses we see that Uriah Heep, the oily hypocrite of Dickens' story, is very much in love with Agnes Wickfield. His method of love making however, is very disagreeable to Agnes for two reasons, first, she dislikes the man and his manner; second, we see that she is gradually falling in love with the handsome young student in her father's office. Uriah Heep, in order to get upper hand of the situation, suggests to Mr. Wickfield, who is a man of weak character, that he hypothecate some securities belonging to Betsy Trotwood in order to relieve his, Wickfield's financial embarrassment. Mr. Wickfield abstracts the securities from the strong box of Miss Trotwood and borrows money on them at a bond broker's. Wilkins Micawber who, in his anxiety to get a loan of a few pounds, happens to be in the bond broker's office, discovers the fact that Mr. Wickfield is there borrowing money, on what, however, he does not know, but later developments make Micawber a saving element in this story. In order to force Agnes to consent to his suit, Uriah Heep tells her that he has the power to ruin her father. Just as the scene has reached its dramatic height David enters the room and Uriah cringingly retires. Agnes makes a confidant of David and tells him the great trouble that is racking her heart. David bids her to have courage and he proceeds to try to help her father out of the ugly situation. While he is rummaging about the office and assuring himself that Heep's tale is true, Micawber comes in and finds David with Miss Trotwood's strong box in his hand. The box is empty. Micawber has an inspiration. From some little talk of David's and from seeing the empty box, he arrives at the conclusion that Mr. Wickfield had disposed of the securities on the day he saw him in the bond broker's. Telling David what he believes, the two men leave for the bond broker's. While David and Micawber are in the bond broker's office Betsy Trotwood calls on the Wickfields. Miss Agnes brings her into the office, and while Miss Trotwood is awaiting the coming of Mr. Wickfield, Uriah Heep greets her. We see by Uriah's actions in this scene and many others where we have watched his hypocritical machination that he is in high glee. Mr. Wickfield is brought in by Agnes, who is in a tremulous state of mind that something be said of the bonds. Miss Trotwood begins to speak of financial investment and is evidently going to ask Mr. Wickfield for her securities when Heep steps over to Agnes and tells her that she must give him her answer to his proposal. At this critical juncture David enters the room accompanied by Micawber. Just as Miss Trotwood asks for the bonds and Heep expects the great bomb he has prepared to burst, David calmly steps forward with the strong box in which he has placed the securities after having refunded the money to the bond broker. This is the big dramatic situation of the picture. Heep shows himself now in his true colors, and after Miss Trotwood has left the room and David and Agnes are in conversation, he gives vent to all the vituperation in his nature. He is cowed, however, by David's manly attitude, and leaves the room. It is now Agnes' turn to thank David for the great kindness which he has done her. We witness a very pretty end to the picture, which ends, as all love stories should, happily for the two young people, whose natural attraction we have watched from the beginning.

The characters involved in this story are splendidly characterized by the Edison players.

This picture is fully in line with other Edison representations of Dickens' stories, and cannot fail to receive as great approbation.

"THE VALET'S VINDICATION."—This latest picture play from the pen of Mr. Townsend is, like "Their Social Education," a society comedy, in this case with a love story interwoven.

The action begins in the apartment of Howard Beeckman, a young society bachelor. He leaves his handsome apartment in the charge of Kirby, his valet de chambre, and enjoins upon the said Kirby the strictest good behavior during his month's absence. The scene ends by showing how Kirby intends to observe his injunction. He goes to the telephone and apparently sends an invitation to some of his pals. Then the scene shifts to a handsome suite at the Waldorf where Mr. and Mrs. Bradley and their pretty daughter are stopping, and from which place they are scouring the city in search of a handsome furnished apartment. The pretty daughter appears while her tired out father and mother are disconsolately rehearsing their futile attempts to find anything that would do. She, too, is tired, but she has an inspiration, and sitting at the table writes an advertisement for an apartment such as they want. And then we travel to the morning after Kirby's party and find him asleep at the table, littered with cigars, poker chips, cards, etc., and considerably the worse for wear. When the boy brings the paper Kirby discovers that he is without money, the game of the night before having taken all of his wages. In the midst of his quandary as to what to do his eye lights upon the advertisement of the Bradley's and he resolves to answer it and rent them his master's apartment. The plan succeeds. They are charmed with the place and take it, though somewhat suspicious of the young man who rented it to them. Then Kirby disappears with the advanced rental in his pocket and goes out to "see the town." But Beeckman unexpectedly returns in the middle of the night, soon after the Bradley's are settled, and is confronted by Papa Bradley and other members of the family en-dishabille. After explanations have been made Beeckman's eye lights upon the pretty daughter. The sight of her arouses all the chivalry in his New York nature and he promptly offers to take himself off and leave them in possession of his apartment. But he does not stay away evidently, for we see him a few days later at the piano with the girl, and something in the way they behave and look at each other suggests that a love story is in progress. This is proved in the next scene, for we find the pretty daughter dressed as a bride and Beeckman showing her the ring which is to wed them. But while they are out of the room Kirby, whose money has vanished, and whose good clothes have gone into pawn, steals in, letting himself in with his latch key, and evidently hoping that things have been straightened out in his absence and that he can take a chance at getting back again to his good position. Beeckman discovers him, and would throw him out but for the girl's plea, and when Kirby sees her in bridal array it dawns upon him that a wedding is about to take place and that she is the bride. She confirms his suspicions and tells him that Beeckman is the groom. This is enough for the resourceful Kirby, and he realizes that he has been an unsuspected Cupid. He now declines to be thrown out by Beeckman, and insists that he has been the cause of bringing them together, and is therefore responsible for the match, and should be retained as a reward for his virtues. His impudence rather pleases the girl, and of course what she says is little less than law to Beeckman, consequently the scene ends by his shaking hands with Kirby and assuring him that all that is past is past. There is a little epilogue scene which shows their first home breakfast together, and Kirby as a sort of a guardian angel of the household.

COMEDY SCENE FROM EDISON'S "THE VALET'S VINDICATION."

It is a good feeling, jolly, wholesome sore of comedy, and the cast is one specially engaged, and one which plays it to the limit of perfection. There are some new faces, but there are also some that will be recognized by every lover of motion pictures in the country. The film is one of the few full-reel comedies which the Edison Company have produced of late. That is surely good evidence of its exceptional value and charm.

call on him. When the clock strikes twelve Blink seizes his hat, slams down his desk and tells his stenographer that he is gone for the day.

Blink hurries home and gets his wife busy with the dinner. She is curious to know why he is in such a hurry and finally, between bites, he tells her he is going to the ball game. Fanny expresses her desire to go also, and insists on her husband waiting for her to dress.

Minutes crawl by like hours to Blink as his wife arrays herself for the game and when she finally appears, leading Jack, the bull pup, he seizes her by the arm and drags her out of the house.

They board a car, but the conductor objects to the dog. Fanny pushes the conductor into a corner, and Jack makes short work of the seat hogs.

However, the ball park is reached at last, and Blink goes to get the tickets. When he comes back with the necessary paper he is in such a hurry and so happily excited as to grab the arm of another woman, a large, fat, colored "mammy," and does not discover his mistake until they are inside.

Now he has to buy another ticket, and after he has located Fanny and the dog they hurry into the gate and to the bleachers.

The game is an exciting one, but not for Fanny. She sees nothing in it at all, and finally dozes off to sleep with her head resting on a fat man's shoulder. Jack, the pup, becomes excited or angered at a rather shady decision by the umpire, and freeing himself from his chain chases the luckless referee all over the diamond.

The home team wins, of course, which makes Blink so happy that he goes off, forgetting Fanny. He follows the band and the players on their triumphal procession downtown and arrives at his home before he thinks of his missing spouse.

In the meantime Fanny has slept peacefully through the game, and is deserted by her fat man. She is finally the only one left on the bleachers, but is soon awakened by a ball park guard.

She meets Blink half way home, and there is the usual family row, which ends peacefully, however, at the close of the film.

"THE DEPUTY'S LOVE."—Bob Dean, the deputy sheriff of Tonopah County, has fallen in love with Nance O'Brien, a bewitching little Western maid, whose brother, as he supposes, works a claim on a neighboring hillside.

Previous to a love scene between the sheriff and the maid a strange incident has happened which will arouse a suspicious thought in our minds as to whether or not Nance is as innocent of evil doing as her frank face and guiltless eyes would suggest. In the first place, Nance, dressed in her brother's clothes, and Walt, her brother, ride up to their house. dismount and enter. Nance is seen for a brief moment removing her masculine make-up, which reveals her identity as a very beautiful Western girl.

Later Bob Dean rides up, and after a love scene with Nance, presents her with a pair of riding gloves. Finally he kisses her and rides away.

Next we are shown Nance and her brother preparing for another mysterious journey. Nance again done the man's clothes and both ride cautiously away.

In a lonesome place on the mountain trail they pull up their horses and listen. Down the canyon is heard the rumbling approach of the mail stage coach. A moment later the two are in ambush with their horses pulled well out of sight. A few moments pass and the coach, with the driver flipping his whip, comes into view.

The holdup is successful, as all the occupants are taken unaware, and scramble out at the robbers' commands and are relieved of their jewelry. A strong box, suggestive of a quantity of bullion, is also removed and the driver is ordered to go on.

Further down the road the excited crowd of tourists insist on the driver cutting loose one of the lead horses and sending for help, and some time later Dean, the deputy, is notified of the robbery.

A posse is organized and the trail of the escaping duo is found. Nance and her brother hear the sound of the hurrying hoofs and decide to separate, and thus throw the party off their trail.

The girl arrives home, having safely eluded pursuit, but her brother is not so lucky. Dean traces him to the door of the stable, enters and covers the man with his gun. It is then that Dean obtains evidence of Nance's guilt when he finds the suit of men's clothes and the gloves with which he had presented her.

Desiring to test her further, Dean, covertly empties the shells from his revolver and replacing it in his holster drags O'Brien into the house, where Nance is waiting for her brother to return. The incident that follows is highly dramatic. Nance wrests Dean's pistol from his belt, aims it at him and pulls the trigger. It is empty, of course, and Dean, seizing his former sweetheart's wrist, locks her to her brother and leads them out.

"FOUR LITTLE TAILORS."—The opening scene is in the tailor's shop, showing the four assistants more or less in love with their employer's daughter. After some time the tailor says he will give his daughter to the one who shows himself to be the cleverest. Some very amusing incidents follow.

In keen competition we see them all trying to perform the most difficult tasks, in order to win the much-cherished reward. They attempt to sew without thread, and without a needle, and also to sew the wing of a fly. The last man, however, fulfills the desired tasks and is duly accepted by the daughter.

The Man Who Learned

The Story of the Milk Supply of a Great City Produced in Cooperation with the New York Milk Committee.

An intensely dramatic and interesting story, showing the contrasting methods of preparing and distributing milk for great cities. The so called "old fashioned way," now considered most unsanitary, starts the picture, and also the story in which the favorite grandson of a farmer who refuses to adopt new and sanitary methods, becomes ill by impure milk from his grandfather's farm. The child recovers, however, and the old farmer changes the methods and conditions on his farm with a happy ending for the family.

The various feats accomplished during the contest are clever examples of trick photography. The sewing without thread and without needle, both being shown greatly magnified.

"The man who leaves fancy devices and useless tricks alone, sticking to his trade, wins the bride," is the moral tacked to this story.

"NEIGHBORS."—This pathetic story is remarkable for the beautiful backgrounds which are used, as well as for acting of rare dignity.

Yvonne, a fair maiden, and her widowed mother, find lodging in cosy rooms among the middle class people of Paris, and soon become well acquainted with the people of the neighborhood.

Mother and daughter both fall in love with an elderly gentleman living in the apartment next to their's, but unfortunately for Yvonne it is her mother whom the elderly gentleman loves. After we watch the progress of the courtship as carried on in several beautiful nooks of that great city, the mother writes telling her daughter that she has made up her mind to marry her neighbor. Yvonne is overcome with grief, and after a time makes up her mind to leave them and spend the rest of her life in a convent. After writing a short note of farewell to her mother we see her bravely packing up her few treasures and leaving her home.

"IN THE PRYENEES."—A combination of scenic and spectacular subjects most unusually and originally set forth.

Romantic scenes on the banks of mountain streams, revealing fresh beauties of majestic nature at every turn.

The chiselling and modeling of rain and frost continuously presented in wonderful arched and fantastic designs.

Nestling among the trees at the foot of great hills are the picturesque huts of peasants and ruins of old castles.

"THE VOW, OR JEPHTHA'S DAUGHTER."—The ministers of the Gospel have no more excuse to keep the moving pictures out of their churches, as the manufacturers are working very hard to bring out subjects suitable for church work.

Mr. George Kleine, who has lately issued a very interesting catalogue of the greatest collection known of educational films, is pushing his foreign manufacturers to produce more and more of the Biblical subjects.

"The Vow, or Jephtha's Daughter," a new Gaumont production to be released in August, is another masterpiece. Jephtha, the ninth judge of the Israelites, a natural son of Gilead, of the tribe of Manasseh, was expelled from his house by his brothers, at the death of his father, on account of his illegitimate birth. He withdrew to the land of Tob, where he became the chief of a band of brigands. Later on, when the Israelites resolved to oppose the Ammonites, they invited Jephtha to become their commander. He accepted the invitation on condition that he should remain their ruler if he defeated the Ammonites. When setting forth against the enemy, Jephtha, who, perhaps, feared that the Lord would not favor him on account of his past, made a solemn vow to the Lord that if he returned victorious he would offer up for a burnt offering whatsoever first "came forth from the doors of his house" to meet him. When Jephtha's daughter, an only child, heard of her father's victory and return she rushed to meet him, and was the first person to "come forth from Jephtha's house."

The story is rendered in the very best manner, and is a new addition to the collection of historical productions and a worthy successor to "Judith and Holofernes," "Esther," "Fall of Babylon," etc., etc. The acting is irreproachable; every move and expression is as true as if we had witnessed the life story of Jephtha some 1,100 years B. C.

The details are nursed with the greatest care and the settings are of this opulent richness of old times. The photography is of a rare beauty, while the coloring is rich in tints and greatly adds to the splendor of the production. In other words, it is a perfect old painting, and while the eye is feasting on the beauty of the scenes the mind seems to be diverted from the sadness of the subject.

The morbid class, always looking for something sensational to arouse their senses, will perhaps turn to "Jephtha's Daughter" in the hope of seeing the beautiful girl burned as an offering. They will be sadly disappointed, as the producers stop at the door of the sacrifice. We see the girl surrender and enter the place where she is to be sacrificed, and no more. Well, we do not ask for more, as a human sacrifice would destroy the good impression left by much a master production.

URBAN-ECLIPSE.

"ESCAPE OF THE ROYALISTS."—Croche, a revolutionary spy, surprises a party of noblemen, who are planning flight. Overhearing their arrangements, he follows them unseen to the seashore. A beautiful daughter of the Revolutionist, gives her jewels to the fugitives to assist their escape. Failing to arrest either of the men, Croche seizes the girl, compelling a young officer to take her as prisoner to a neighboring inn. Impressed by her beauty, the officer assists her to escape. Followed by a crowd of excited Revolutionists, Croche gives chase, captures the girl and drags her to prison. Her protector tells his story to the chief of police, imploring him to grant her freedom. He obtains a signed pardon and permission to marry his protege. Returning to the prison, the officer finds our hero leading forth his captive in triumph.

Clean and convincing.

"SHIPBUILDERS OF TOULON, FRANCE."—A series of perfectly photographed pictures, comprehensively dealing with the routine employed in the making and launching of great ships of the line.

A graphic illustration is afforded of the mighty task of building and launching a battleship, details which have never before been recorded by bioscope are here presented, and the series forms a technical and industrial subject of great importance.

The ship is shown in several stages of its development, each of which is plainly presented in such a general way as to give a clear knowledge of shipbuilding to the layman.

A strikingly successful and artistic photographic series of events supposed to be purely commercial.

"THE ROMANY WIFE."—The romance of gypsy life offers one of the most alluring themes to the moving picture operator, and the Kalem actors have been particularly successful in their portrayals of the Romany type. The latest subject to be announced is called "The Romany Wife," and was secured by the Kalem people with the co-operation of a genuine gypsy band. The heroine, a beautiful gypsy girl, is shown in the peculiar rogue life of her father's caravan, in which she is the favorite member. However, the young gypsy men are her suitors and plead their cases eloquently. The girl thinks she is tired of the roving life and when a chance meeting brings her the friendship of a stalwart young farmer, she falls in love with him, and in spite of the pleadings of the tribe, marries him. She finds, however, that the prosaic married life her husband brings her is far different from the roving life of the gypsies, and after the birth of her first child the longing for the old life is so strong that she leaves him, taking the baby with her, and returns to her father's tribe. There her former suitors renew their attentions, and it looks as if the gypsy girl had altogether forgotten her own husband, but the husband wants both his wife and baby back again, and starts on a long search and finally locates the tribe, and then when the mother realizes how great his love is, both for her and her child, she once more turns her back on the gypsy life and goes back with her husband.

"The Romany Wife" is notable in its photographic and scenic embellishments, and as it is a pure romance with none of the melodramatic features which usually characterize gypsy pictures, will doubtless find great favor with exhibitors.

"THE CANADIAN MOONSHINERS."—Following the line in which the Kalem trade mark has blazed new paths, another French Canadian story is announced by the Kalem Company, "The Canadian Moonshiners." The title of this production is a little misleading and is questionable whether the makers of illicit whiskey in Canada are ever known as moonshiners. However, the term is so generally understood that it is probably the best that could be used under the circumstances. The Kalem artists have endeavored to show the great damage to the primitive Indian by the illicit traffic in whiskey, the selling of which to the aborigines is prohibited by the laws of both the United States and Canada. In this production we are shown how a moonshiner came under the suspicion of the Canadian mounted police. The moonshiner's daughter attempted to save her father from his richly deserved fate, and how the mounted police finally rounded up and captured the moonshiners.

The story is full of spirited action and a film of beautiful photographic quality.

"COWBOY CHIVALRY."—Percy Condon announces his intention of visiting his old chum, Ernest Langdon, at the latter's ranch. Percy was the weight lifting champion in his college days, and Langdon tells the cowmen that there will be some fun. Percy comes and creates an impression at the start by lifting from the rig the trunk that taxes the strength of two of the punchers. The trunk contains dumb bells and other training apparatus, and it is not long before Percy puts on the gloves with the boys. Joe Haines, the foreman, makes but a poor showing as a boxer, and Rita, Langdon's sister, is attracted by Percy's skill, and rather inclined to forget that there was a pretty good understanding between herself and Joe. She and Percy ride the range together and he is fast winning her love. But the Indians are out and Joe discovers them. He rides back to Rita and Percy. Indian fighting differs from weight lifting and boxing, and in a panic of terror Percy mounts his horse and rides off, leaving Rita with her lame mare. Joe mounts her on his own pony and forces her to ride after Percy. He makes his way after them to where they have entrenched themselves behind some rocks, and here Percy still further shows the white feather by refusing to go for water when the canteen is found to be empty. Joe gets the water for Rita, but is wounded as he does so. The sound of shots bring Langdon and his men to the relief and at the last Percy redeems himself. The story abounds in thrills and is splendidly played; one of the most vivid stories we have produced.

"THE ANARCHISTIC GRIP."—It's a simple start to a whole lot of trouble. A clock salesman sets out from the store with his stock in a bag. A tramp steals the goods while the salesman is waiting for a car and makes off with his plunder. He is tickled at the thought of winning a prize, but the ticking of the clocks suggests the workings of an infernal machine, and the tramp is so scared that he almost is willing to go to work. He enlists the aid of a police officer and the latter decides to arrest the bag and take it to the station house. It does not take long for the story to get around and soon there is a crowd following, enjoying the thrills that come with the thought that any moment something may happen that will leave only a large hole as a souvenir of their late residence on earth. At the station house the sergeant is no more willing to welcome the terrible instrument of destruction and advises the policeman to take it out in the back yard and open it to see what it contains. The policeman has a large family and a sick wife dependent upon him and he points out these facts with earnestness. Of course there is the police pension fund, but that will not help the policeman himself much, and there might have been charges of insubordination had not the salesman called to report the theft of his bag.

"THE DREAM PILL."—Professor Swank has at last succeeded in crowning his career as an inventor by giving to the world a dream pill that will prove a positive antidote to nightmares. Having made the pills, the next thing is to find some one to try them on, and Swank's friends are not willing. They've been the goat on other inventions and they fight shy of new preparations. The advent of a tramp who wants something to eat solves the problem and Swank offers him a five spot to be the pioneer dream pillist. The tramp is almost afraid to tackle the pills, but Swank raises the ante and the tramp decides that it is better to die rich than to starve to death. He takes the pill and in a flash there is a bountifully spread table before him and when his appetite has been satisfied he finds that he is wearing good clothes. Lighting a cigar he starts in to see the town, and almost immediately is captured by a most attractive young woman, who invites him for an automobile ride. They go to a restaurant, where the tramp finds that he is good for another meal, and makes the interesting discovery that he has a pocket full of money. He finds a damsel even more to his liking and he promptly makes a switch, discovering the new charmer to be a queen. She elects him king and he is about to claim his first kiss after the wedding ceremony when the pill's power fades and he wakes up. A spirited half reel story with many funny trick effects.

G. MELIES.

"THE ROMANCE OF CIRCLE RANCH."—Getting his laundry fro mthe Chinaman, "Honest Jim" spruces himself up in preparation to make a call on "Bess," with whom he is in love. Calling at Circle Ranch, her home, he finds Jack Rance making overtures to her father for "Bess'" hand. She greets Jim pleasantly, but she dislikes Jack; there is something about him which is distasteful to her, and when her father intercedes for him she leaves the porch and hurries into the house.

She does not have to wait very long to see "Jim" and "Jack" in their true colors, and make a choice between the two. The clergyman of Ranch settlement and the surrounding country comes to the post office where a crowd of cowboys are gathered to receive their mail. Jack approaches him, saying, "Dance, d——n you, dance!" The minister refuses and Jack shoots a revolver at his feet and the godly man is obliged to do the light fantastic to the great amusement of the rest of the boys.

The next victim of the bully's pranks is the Chinese laundryman, whom Jack taunts, kicking over his basket of laundry, and, when the "chink" resents the insult, Jack makes a lunge at him, which is intercepted by "Honest Jim," who knocks the bully down. Bess is a witness of these doings, and then and there selects the better man.

Jack receives a letter announcing that he has won out in a claim for a mine and is now a rich man. At once he goes to Bess' father, shows him the letter. The father calls Bess into the room and Jack shows her the letter. She throws it upon the floor in disgust. Bess tells her father that she has made up her choice and will marry Jim. He tells her he will not consent to the match; she must marry Jack; then commands her to go to her room.

She decides to elope with Jim; sees the Chinaman passing the window and gives him a note telling Jim to meet her at the three-mile turn of the road, bring a clergyman and they will get married, despite every opposition. The note is delivered. Jim goets "Sam Sing" to go for the clergyman. Glad to get square with Jack for his insults, Sam and the clergymen are only too glad to offer their services to the happy pair. All hands meet at the appointed place, the ceremony is nearly completed when Jack and Bess' father, who have discovered the girl's flight, are seen approaching in hot pursuit.

The eloping party jump on their horses and the marriage is consummated by the minister as they are riding at full gallop. The ride is a hot one and full of excitement. You can't help urging on the horses and you find yourself moving up and down with the motion of their pace; it is some ride you must admit. When the horses are brought to a halt the father and Jack learn that Jim and Bess are one. The father after all is not displeased, forgives his daughter, welcomes Jim as his son-in-law, while Jack slinks off, vanquished and smarting under the derisive laugh of the Chinaman and the smile of satisfaction beaming from the placid features of the parson.

AGAINST OPERATORS' UNION

Baltimore Picture Men Claim Boys Are Competent Operators—Licensed Operators Expensive.

Proprietors of moving picture exhibitions, Baltimore, Md., are protesting against the provisions of the new law which, they say, imposes burdensome conditions upon them and causes losses to their business.

The chief provisions of the law against which complaint is made are those which demand that all operators shall be 21 years of age and that a year's experience is necessary before being eligible for a license.

It was stated that a movement is afoot for the proprietors to take the matter to court, with the idea of having the law declared unconstitutional.

Mr. Edward L. Anzmann, owner of a parlor at 314 North Broadway, complained to Governor Crothers for some redress from the refusal of the examining board to give him a license. Mr. Anzmann has been in the business ten months, and said he had invested $6,000 in his business. The trade does not justify the employment of an operator in the summer, and in the past Mr. Anzmann has operated his own machine.

He told Governor Crothers he was competent to run the machine, but that unless he was given a license he would have to go out of business. Governor Crothers replied that he could not go beyond the law, and that the Board of Examiners was the court to appeal to.

"This age restriction of 21 years will prevent many young men who are thoroughly capable from earning a livelihood," said Mr. John C. Weidman, manager of a theater company, 412 East Baltimore street. "Many of the young men ranging from 17 to 20 years old are thoroughly competent, well-trained and responsible operators, and know better how to protect the public than those older than themselves. Unless we can start men in at an early age, how can we obtain competent operators for this business, because the proprietors cannot afford to pay grown men while they are learning the business for a whole year, and no man will undertake to learn unless he is paid during the apprenticeship. I think a responsible age should be insisted upon, say 17 years old, but such harsh provisions should not be necessary."

"The truth of the matter is," said Mr. Anzmann, "that the board of examiners is endeavoring to build up in this state an operators' union. The interest of the proprietors whose money is invested is neglected entirely. As a matter of fact, however, the operators will also suffer by losing their jobs. Here is one operator 20 years old who has been running a machine for five years, and he must now give up his place, although he has shown himself thoroughly responsible."

GILLETTE THEATRE A MOTION PICTURE HOUSE.

The Gillette theatre, Findlay, Ohio, which was opened August 15 by Manager Gabel Sachs, will in the future run motion pictures and vaudeville. All pictures, which will be licensed films and approved by the New York board of censorship. By this it means that there should be cause for adverse comment on the part of the citizens of Findlay.

For a long time the Gillette was the only independent dramatic house in that section of Ohio, and whenever such artists as Mrs. Fiske and other well known independent stars came there, it drew large audiences from all near by towns in Western Ohio.

Besides running pictures and first-class vaudeville, there will be a large orchestra and a well-known singer to render the illustrated songs.

ture theatres are doing a fair business in Columbus, but it is as much as a man's life is worth to ride on the cars and this, of course, injures business of all kinds.

White Palace, Mendota, Booms.

F. L. Fraser, formerly of Kankakee and recently owner of the Theatorium at Momence, Ill., has purchased the lease of the White Palace theatre, at Mendota, Ill., and has already placed it on the high road to success, although all his predecessors made failures there.

The White Palace has a capacity of 280 and it is a rare occasion when the theatre is not taxed to entertain the best people in the town. Mr. Fraser is redecorating the house at present, but does not permit this to keep him from giving his nightly show.

The following extract from a Mendota paper, shows what his fellow townsmen think of Manager Freser:

The White Palace moving pictures theatre is under new management; Mr. F. L. Fraser of Kankakee has taken charge of this popular amusement resort and is making good. He is sustaining his past record of giving the people first class shows and also treating them with every courtesy.

Mr. Fraser has had an extensive experience in this line of work. He believes that every business should be given thorough attention and he can be found at almost any hour of the day at the theatre, planning some new and attractive feature to best entertain and amuse the many who visit his White Palace each night. He has been presenting exceptional vaudeville every night, except Sunday, and that, with the high class and excellence of the moving pictures that are being shown, make one feel that one has certainly at least received the benefit of the price of admission, everytime.

Mr. Fraser is personally known to the editor of this paper, and the latter vouches for his gentlemanliness and the cleanliness of his shows. He is a clean fellow and will make a very desirable Mendota citizen and it is hoped that our people will give the White Palace the generous support which we know the performance and pictures merit.

Power's Salesmanager Reports Big Business.

H. B. Coles, traveling sales manager of the Nicholas Power Co. of New York, stopped over in Chicago last week, on his way to the home office, after a trip which embraced the entire country, excepting the New England and Southeastern states.

Mr. Coles left New York on May 8 and has rolled up a large volume of business for his company with Power's Cameragraph No. 6. He told me that this machine is in high favor in every section visited, and especially so on the Pacific coast. In Seattle and San Francisco, he states, the machine is largely in the majority. "The moving picture business was booming all along my route," said Mr. Coles.

Pictures and the Legitimate.

Joseph G. Rhode, manager of the Rhode Opera House, Kenosha, Wis., was a visitor at the Film Index office last week. The Opera House is a legitimate theatre which plays road attractions during the season. Manager Rhode has decided on a new policy, however, after his experience this summer in running moving pictures. Henceforth, throughout the regular season, certain days will be set apart for the exhibition of pictures, the bookings being arranged with traveling attractions accordingly.

"Our business has been really remarkable during the summer, and owing to the marked success made by us no less than three new houses are in the course of erection," said Mr. Rhode. "Of course, the town is really too small to support that many, although licensed pictures are popular there."

The regular season of the Rhode will open August 14.

Manager Rhode gets his service from the General Film Co. of this city.

Chicago Film Brevities.

R. H. Hammer, of the Biograph Co. paid a short visit to Chicago last week. He returned to New York on the Twentieth Century, Monday, Aug. 15.

The Selig Knights Templar film of the grand parade and commandery drills will be released Aug. 30. It will be about 1,000 feet in length and the photography is pronounced excellent.

Misses Ethel Groener and Maud Peterson, members of the clerical force of the General Film Co. of this city, are enjoying a vacation on a farm. Riding, fishing, etc., will be indulged in during their outing.

"Bill" Liberty, shipping clerk of the General Flm Co. was struck by an automobile on West Madison street, Saturday, Aug. 13, his side and leg being badly bruised. Nothing serious however will result from the accident, and "Bill" is heartily congratulated by his many friends over his escape from permanent injuries.

Miss L. Schneider, cashier and bookkeeper of the American Film Service, has returned from a two weeks' vacation, during which Kilburn Dells, Baraboo, Devil's Lake, Madison, Fort Athens, and other points in Wisconsin were visited.

Wm. E. Keen, manager of the Oxford theatre, Oxford, O., was a visitor at the Film Index office last week. Mr. Keen has closed his house for two weeks and is spending that time in Chicago and other large cities in gleaning all the information possible about the exhibiting business Mr. Keen depends largely on students for his patronage, as Oxford is a college town. His service is furnished by the Magnetic Film Service of Cincinnati, O., and he states that he was about the first customer on Abe Dresner's books.

cost of $15,000. The house seats 500 persons and has a standing room capacity of nearly the same number. The program consists of three reels of licensed pictures and illustrated songs. The price of admission is 5 cents.

MINISTER PREACHES FROM PICTURE SUBJECT.

Licensed pictures at the Liberty theatre, Park City, Utah, are certainly winning popular favor in that section of the great South West. The people see the best that there is in the pictures and from the manner in which they are received the subjects are applied towards making the community better not only morally, but spiritually as well.

Manager H. T. Moore, of the Liberty, in a letter to The Film Index, tells us of the great reception "The Way of the World" that well known Biograph subject created among his patrons. He also states that the Rev. Mr. George, of the Mission church was so impressed with the film that he used the subject for the theme of his sermon on the following Sunday evening. Mr. George is a great believer in motion pictures and is a regular patron of the theatre.

During the time the film was shown in Park City, Mr. Moore had an organ installed and a set of chimes put in to give the effects to the pictures.

BY SPECIAL ARRANGEMENT with the AMERICAN PRESS ASSOCIATION we will reproduce on slides all events of special interest to the world. Every enterprising exhibitor should place a standing order, as the price is within reach of all. With each set flaming display posters are given free.

"THE CELEBRATION IN HONOR OF THE LANDING OF THE PILGRIMS, AT PROVINCETOWN, MASS.," August 6, 1910.
The set covers the event and is of great educational value, with speeches by President Taft, Senator Lodge and Governor Draper.

WAS MUYBRIDGE FIRST?

As a bone for the motion picture "sharps" to gnaw we reprint the following communication to The Hartford Courant written by a former reporter of The Boston Globe who has a long memory. Does anyone know differently?

A recent review of the moving picture industry made brief mention of Mr. Edward Muybridge, who died a few months ago, as the first man to project the moving picture upon a screen. While serving the Boston Globe as a reporter in the fall of 1882, I met Mr. Muybridge and saw his moving pictures and was greatly interested in the man and his peculiar work. There had been much discussion in sporting and scientific circles as well, as to the manner of the operation of four-footed animals in their various gaits, and the late Leland Sanford at his Palo Alta ranch on the Pacific coast had given to Mr. Muybridge opportunity to settle the discussion by photograph of some of his noted horses.

Mr. Muybridge, working long before the quickly sensitive lens and the thousand of a second shutter, ranged twenty-four cameras in line at a suitable distance from each other, the distance representing the movement of the horse at a single step. The shutter invented by Mr. Muybridge was moved by connecting pieces of string which the animal broke as he passed down the line, the break releasing it from the exposure. The result was a series of pictures showing the steps of the horse, in various gaits, walk, trot, pace, canter, etc. This was interesting, merely looking at the pictures, but the problem the scientist had in mind was to present these pictures (which were hardly more than silhouettes, the lenses not being sharp) in motion.

To do this Mr. Muybridge copied the method familiar to those who remember the toy known as the "zoetrope." This toy was a pasteboard cylinder with "slits" in the upper section, and when it revolved rapidly it reproduced drawings apparently in motion, the effect resulting from a series, for instance, representing a man chopping wood, each movement of the man, from lifting the ax until its descent, having been drawn separately, but acting as a whole when the zeotrope revolved.

To reproduce the effect upon the screen was a mechanical feat which was finally conquered and the pictures moved, the entire series having been devoted to showing movements of animals and men in motion, with no background whatever. These pictures attracted a great deal of attention among scientific and sporting men and among artists. Mr. Muybridge proved by them that the conventional drawing of the horse in motion was altogether wrong, as the horse did not use his feet and legs in the way artists had represented them, that dogs did not travel exactly as horses in the succession of steps with their feet, and that, except in jumping, no animal ever had all his feet off the ground at one time. The artists made fun of his ideas and tried to draw their horses "after Muybridge," but soon became convinced that he was right, and the horse has been drawn on Muybridge lines ever since. These experiments were before the introduction of the flexible film for the camera and before rapid photography had been developed. Mr. Muybridge lived to see the motion picture a wonderful thing, and I have often thought how much he must have enjoyed the development of his crude ideas in general lines, rather than confined to the study of the gaits of animals. THOS. S. WEAVER.

OPERATORS GET MANY EXAMINATIONS.

A way to learn how to operate moving picture machines at the expense of the State of Massachusetts, was suggested by Chief Whitney of the State police during his testimony on factory inspection conditions before the special State factory inspection commission at the State house. He stated that the duties of the State police inspectors in examining motion picture operators interfere with their factory inspection to such an extent that it has been found impossible for an inspector to inspect every factory and mercantile establishment in his district once a year.

According to Chief Whitney, motion picture operators have to take a State examination. If they fail, they may appeal and have a second try. Some get as many as three examinations and three more chances on appeals, and thus come pretty near learning the trade at the State house, where the State police, in connection with their supervision of motion picture films, have one of the most complete motion picture theatres in the State, except for facilities to handle crowds.

The commission had before it factory inspectors of the inspection department of the State police, assigned to the Boston districts. It developed that the inspectors have to devote one day a week to examining applicants for licenses as operators on motion picture machines. This takes their time from their factory inspection duties.

TRURO, N. S., HAS NEW PICTURE HOUSE.

Truro's new motion picture theatre, "The Royal," opened its doors, July 29, to a crowded house, and has continued to draw the crowds ever since.

The house is modern in every respect: electric fans have been installed, but it is doubtful if they will be needed, as the building is built of stone. In winter the house will be heated with hot water. The picture machine is installed in a new fireproof booth.

As to the pictures, they will be the best on the market. There will also be a first-class orchestra to provide suitable music for the pictures and illustrated songs.

WALDEN LIKES LICENSED PICTURES.

The Star Motion Picture Company, which has been exhibiting its high class licensed films at Walden, N. Y., is said to be the only real attraction that has hit that "burg" during the hot weather season. This statement came from a newspaper man, who has been stopping in that locality.

Every night the picture people have been in town, the popular little Dinsbury theatre has been crowded to the doors. In fact the house has drawn better audiences than any performance that came there last winter. The pictures that have created the most interest have been those pertaining to comedy and travel.

Synopsis of Production Issued by the Leading Song and Novelty Slide Makers.

SCOTT & VAN ALTENA.

"UNDER THE YUM YUM TREE."—Words by Sterling; music by Harry Von Tilzer; published by Von Tilzer Music Co. We have all been there—under the yum yum tree—gazing into loving eyes, and whispering soft foolishness, etc. The song surely is a good one, one of Von Tilzer's best, which is saying a good deal. Each slide in this fine set has the stamp of quality, the quality which gives the work of Scott & Van Altena a certain character which we all know.

"MY DIXIE DREAM."—Published by Harry Von Tilzer Music Pub. Co., New York; words and music by Earle Taylor, writer of "My Southern Rose." Another Southern song by this author that bids fair to have the same popularity as his preceding one. The slides for this song are in typical Ssott & Van Altena style—Cleverly posed, more than excellentiy colored and containing novelties galore. The models, too, are good looking and very graceful.

"LITTLE STAR WONT YOU TWINKLE."—Lyrics by Tell Taylor; melody by Chas. L. Johnson; published by Harold Rossiter Music Co. A beautiful ballad by Chas. Johnson, writer of "Iola," "Dill Pickles" and other hits. Most of the pictures are moonlight scenes, and are extremely well executed, considering that it is so difficult to imitate moonlight scenes. The set is well supplied with novelties, which are striking and original. The models are exceptionally good looking. Taking all in all the set is really unique.

"LOVE DREAMS."—Words and music by Luella Lockwood Moore; published by Jos. W. Stern & Co. This is a beautiful little love ballad that tells of a young Venetian couple who fall desperately in love with one another. The illustrations show the pair on the canals of Venice, beautiful gondolas, pomp and gaiety. The pretty little model in this instance is she who posed for the slides of Scott & Van Altena's "Espanolia Sprance." She is dark and beautiful, fitting well the part of a Venetian daughter. The male model, too, is just the one for this kind of a song. Coloring is beautiful and the scenic effects charming and wonderful.

"DEAR MAYME, I LOVE YOU."—Words by Irving Berlin; music by Ted Snyder; published by the Ted Snyder Co., New York. These two authors need no recommendation. Their many successes have been heard by all and any new composition by them is looked for eagerly. Slides by Scott & Van Altena form another of their many novelty sets. They are new and interesting, illustrating well this little love waltz.

"I'LL BUILD A CASTLE IN LOVELAND."—Music by Arthur W. Lange; published by the Royal Music Publishing Co., New York. A very pretty ballad illustrated by very beautiful pictures. The novel and color effects are unique and characteristic of the Scott & Van Altena kind and seen in but few other slides. Who wouldn't build a castle in Loveland for a little girl like this one.

"YOU'RE MINE, ALL MINE."—Lyrics by Richard H. Buck; music by Theodore Morse; published by The Theodore Morse Publishing Co. A fine set of lyrics set to a catchy tune such as Theodore Morse usually writes. The slides are without doubt some of Scott & Van Altena's best. They contain beautiful moonlight effects, rare coloring, beautiful scenery and handsome models—all that could be desired in a set of slides. If the song lacked anything to make a success the slides themselves would certainly make it a hit.

"I'M BUGS, ABOUT YOU."—Words by Victor Smalley and Jack Drislane; music by Geo. W. Meyer; published by Haviland Publishing Co. A novelty song, using a popular slang phrase as the title. A cute little girl and boy are the principals in the fine set of illustrations. Decidedly novel "bug effects" here and there make the set a very unique one. The slides ending each chorus are most cleverly carried out and show what this firm can do in the novelty line.

DE WITT C. WHEELER.

"SPOONLIGHT."—Words by Earle Clinton; music by Charlotte Blake; published by Jerome H. Remick & Co. This is a true spooning song, and Mr. Clinton has taken full advantage of his subject and produced an exceptionally good set of lyrics. The melody has a clever swing which cannot fail to become popular. The slides do full justice to the song and are posed by good looking models who fall into natural poses. The moonlight effects reflect credit on the Wheeler slides, and the last slide is a girl surrounded with spoons which produces a novel effect. An exceptionally good set of slides.

"IT'S MOONLIGHT ALL THE TIME ON BROADWAY."—Words by Ren Shields; music by Percy Weurich; published by F. B. Haviland Publishing Co., New York. It would be useless to criticize either the lyrics or melody of this song, as these writers can always be depended upon to produce the goods, and they certainly have not failed in this instance. Mr. Wheeler has produced a set of slides every one of which is a novelty, and the effects of the Great White Way illuminated by night reproduced in a small lantern slide are truly wonderful. This set is without doubt the best set released by any slide maker this summer, and reflects great credit on the maker, and shows what vast improvements are constantly being added to the productions of this house.

"I'M A LUCKY BOY TO HAVE A GIRL LIKE YOU."—Words by Stanley Murphy; music by Percy Wenrich; published by Jerome H. Remick, New York. It is a pretty story. Not only at the wedding nuptials, but after many happy years of married life the husband feels ever lucky to have for a wife the one he posseses. The slides tell the story in a quaint way, giving many phases of country life and true love upon the farm.

"WHEN THE SUMMER DAYS ARE GONE."—Words by Leo Curley; music by Geo. Christie; published by Witmark & Sons. While the summer days are not yet gone, this song may seem unseasonable, but it was so good the publishers couldn't wait, so published it ahead of time. The slides by Wheeler certainly do show some fine selections of scenery by him. It would seem that all the beauties of nature full bloom in the summertime are pent up in this little set. Seashore, mountains, rivers, lakes and woods are all here, beautifully colored and charming to look at.

"BAND, BAND, BAND."—Words by Seymour Brown; music by Nat. D. Ayer; published by J. H. Remick & Co. As the name implies, this is a novelty song, written in a novel way to a novel idea, and shows progressive ideas in song writing. The slides are one of Wheeler's best comedy sets. He shows us a very beautiful girl leading a band around the streets. The costumes of the players are, of course, brilliant and dazzling. The coloring is exquisite, and there are plenty of novelties. But best of all is the model. It is worth getting the set to see her.

"I LOVE YOU, DEAR."—Words by Blair Leyton; composed and published by Sydney P. Harris, Detroit, N. Y. A beautiful set of lyrics in the true love strain, set to a fine melody. This is one of the love ballads that are so difficult to illustrate. But Wheeler makes the slides interesting, no matter what the song is. This is an example.

"WHAT IS THE WORLD WITHOUT YOU."—Words and music by J. Hayden Clarendon; published by J. H. Remick & Co. A semi-high class love ballad, which is written in a popular vein and is sure to please any class of audience. The illustrations are a well thought out series of poses, which, executed with the well known skill of De Witt Wheeler, form a very pleasing set of slides. Scenic effects, rich in nature, are also present in numbers.

ALFRED L. SIMPSON.

"THE BARBER SHOP CHORD."—Words by William Tracey; music by Lewis F. Muir; published by J. Fred Helf Publishing Co. This song is the feature song of the Lew Dockstadter show this season, and is also being sung with great success by Bert Williams. Simpson has made a great set of pictures; each slide of artistic merit. Two really clever artists posed for this song, and Simpson was right there with that wonderful camera of his to reproduce with such rare fidelity to nature just the exact expression that would best convey the spirit of the song. The two models are Miss Carlotta Freeman, late of the Pekin Stock Co., and Lawrence Chenault, of the Smart Set Co. This set of slides is a distinct addition to any program.

"AMO."—Words and music by Herbert H. Ingraham; published by Shapiro. This is an exquisitely beautiful love song with a tender haunting melody such as is characteristic of all of the compositions of the versatile author of such world-famous hits as "You Are the Ideal of My Dreams," "Roses Bring Dreams of You," "Hoo, Hoo, Ain't You Coming Out To-Night," etc. Simpson has made a set of slides that do full justice to this song. The models are a dark-eyed senorita and her toreodor lover in the national costumes of Spain. The scenery is typically Spanish, with rich and glorious tropical coloring.

"I'M LONGING FOR THE OLD DAYS, MARGUERITE."—Words by Arthur Lamb; music by J. Fred Helf; published by Helf Pub. Co. In verses of more than ordinary poetical merit, a lover is dwelling upon scenes of the past ere he parted from the ones he loved. The melody is a sweet, plaintive air that is bound to become popular. Simpson has made slides quite out of the ordinary that do justice to this very beautiful ballad.

"WHEN YOU AND I WERE COURTING."—Melody and lyric by Kenneth S. Clark; published by Chas. K. Harris. That the author of "After the Ball" knows quite as well how to select a good song as he does to write one is the conclusion of all after hearing this beautiful love ballad. Simpson has produced for this subject a very beautiful set of slides, showing the "maiden fair and lover true" from youth to old age. These are not the usual grease-paint old folk, but "sure enough" ones, with all the charm a dear motherly old lady should have.

"THE CHINATOWN RAG."—By Jack Drislane and Geo. W. Meyer; F. B. Haviland, publisher. This is a great set of slides for anyone looking for a novelty. The only Chinese slides we have ever seen. To say they are in Simpson's best style tells the whole story. The scenery and posing are truly Oriental, and the coloring exquisite.

"TOO MANY EYES ARE MAKING EYES AT YOU."—Words by Jos. McKeon; music by W. Raymond Walker and Harry M. Piano; F. B. Haviland, New York City, publisher. Simpson has cleverly depicted the troubles of the jealous lover in a rare bit of acting in the illustrations of this song. If the song was not already a big hit the slides would make it so.

"ALL THAT I ASK OF YOU IS LOVE."—By Edgar Seldon and Herbert H. Ingraham, authors of "Roses Bring Dreams of You," "You're the Ideal of My Dreams," "Let Me Waltz Home, Sweet Home with You Just for Old Times' Sake;" published by Shapiro. This is going to be one of the ballad hits of the year. After all, heart interest is the thing; and no one can escape the touch of sentiment conveyed by this delightful song as sung by Frank Morrel at Hammerstein's Theatre. The slides Simpson has sent out for this song are beautiful. His models are well chosen and extremely good looking, the photography is excellent and the coloring beyond criticism.

"WHISTLE AND I'LL WAIT FOR YOU."—Words by Earle C. Jones; music by George W. Meyers; published by Shapiro. A bright, snappy song introduced by the clever little English comedienne, Daisy Lloyd. Simpson has produced for this song a most pleasing set of illustrations, clever in conception with plenty of variety and novel effects.

LEVI COMPANY.

"ANY LITTLE GIRL, THAT'S A NICE LITTLE GIRL, IS THE RIGHT LITTLE GIRL FOR ME."—Words by Thomas J. Gray; music by Fred Fischer; published by M. Shapiro. This is the biggest hit published by M. Shapiro within the last three years, and the melody is being whistled by almost every street urchin. The slides are good.

"JUST FOR A GIRL."—Published by M. Witmark & Sons. This song is the biggest number that the Witmark concern has put out in some time and is an absolute hit. Slides are first class in every particular and are beautiful. The demand will be heavy owing to the extreme popularity of the song, and you should place your order immediately.

"JESSAMINE."—Words and music by Frank B. Williams; published by Shapiro. A pretty love ballad surpassing many of its kind published heretofore. A set of slides by Levi that delight the audience.

"BYE BYE, SWEETHEART."—Words and music by Will Wood. A little gem of a song, refined and melodious. The slides contain many bright and snappy novelties and illustrate well this love song.

"WHEN THE OLD OAKEN BUCKET WAS NEW."—Words by Geo. Moriarity; music by Joe Cooper, writers of the big song hit, "I Can't Miss That Ball Game." Published by Harry Cooper, of the Empire City Quartette. The melody is very sweet and worthy of a pronounced success. Slides in typical Levi style illustrate the lyrics in an interesting fashion.

"AS THE TRAIN ROLLED AWAY."—Words by Arthur A. Myers; music by Sidney T. Wilson. This song is above the average in many ways. Slides by Levi tell the story in a simple manner, and together with the novelties.

"VALLEY FLOWER."—Words and music by Kerry Mills; published by F. A. Mills, New York. An Indian song of merit, as are most of the songs exploited by these publishers. The posing is typical Indian style and shows many new phases of Indian life. For those fond of Indian pictures this set should appeal.

"A LITTLE GAME OF LOVE."—Words by E. Soloman; music by B. Osias. This song when demonstrated in a large New York department store is said to have made a big hit. The slides are worthy of Levi.

VITAGRAPH CHANGES.

New Building None too Big to Meet the Demand for Space.

The rental bureau of the Vitagraph Company, for years at 116 Nassau street, New York, has been sold to the General Film Company and consolidated with the Kleine branch at 19 East 21st street, New York.

The accounting department has been installed at the big plant in Flatbush, Brooklyn, but the New York offices of the Vitagraph Company will remain at the old address.

There are now thirty members in the Vitagraph stock company of actors and actresses, besides seven directors, and it requires a big space to keep them and the camera men in operation.

The new building which has just been finished is none too large to meet requirements. The "extras" which are employed daily sometimes run as high as one hundred and fifty to two hundred. Generally fifty or sixty are employed in many of the pictures.

With the accountant department established in Brooklyn, and the already large mechanical, scenic and photographic departments housed under the same roof, the entire square block will present an imposing monument of Vitagraph success.

HAPPENINGS IN LUBINVILLE.

"The Man Who Died" is the unusual title of the Lubin release for Sept. 1. The man who died doesn't die, but he experiences many unusual adventures, and altogether the story is novel from every point of view.

An actual hair cut is one of the striking features of "The Stronger Sex." the Lubin offering for Aug. 29, unusual because it is a woman who enters a barber shop and submits her head to the shears. It adds convincingness to a cleverly told story of a girl who discovers that in business men have all the best of the salary question.

Although the rehearsal season for dramatic productions is now well under way, and some companies are already taking to the road, the Lubin stock company has lost but three of the players added when the last dramatic season closed. Some of those who turned to pictures merely as a "summer snap" find the work so much more interesting that they have elected to become permanent members of the company, the absence of study the monotony of repeating the same lines for from eight to fourteen performances a week, the avoidance of the discomforts of travel and the possibilities of having a real home are points in favor of picture work, and it is growing increasingly easy to draw from the dramatic field players of repute.

Plans are already being made for the winter work of the Lubin companies, and the cold weather program will follow out the lines laid down this summer. It is planned to send divisions of the company south and west, while the other two will remain in the studio to utilize the dramas which are played mostly in interiors. The studio plans included a most comprehensive heating system that will keep the studio as warm in winter as the spray system keeps it cool in summer.

The Lubin Company has in preparation a gripping story dealing in dramatic fashion with one of the most important issues of the day. It will form one of the early September releases and will attract wide attention. It is the sort of a story local houses can do press work, for unlike the majority of these it is not at all unpleasant and is provided with a legitimate "happy ending."

TO PROTECT EDISON MACHINES.

To protect owners of Edison Projecting Machines from unscrupulous manufacturers who advertise bogus parts as of genuine Edison manufacture, the Edison Company recently took the precaution of stamping every part manufactured by them with the familiar trade-mark which appears somewhere upon all their films and must now be known to every licensed exhibitor in the United States. To prevent as far as possible future misrepresentation they sent out the following bulletin to the trade:

TO THE TRADE.

"We have received numerous complaints from exhibitors that their machines do not operate properly, although they have recently purchased new parts.

"Upon investigation we have found in a number of instances that they were not genuine Edison parts.

"As these imitation parts are not made from our jigs and dies, accuracy cannot be expected.

"In order that exhibitors may determine that such parts as they obtain for Edison Kinetoscopes are of genuine Edison manufacture, we have arranged to stamp all our parts with out trade-mark 'E.'

"This is a guarantee that parts so stamped are accurate and will insure satisfactory results in the use of our machines."

Much machine trouble may be attributed to the substitution of cheap parts of miscellaneous make when manufacturer's parts should be used. Don't do it.

Miner's New Third Avenue Theatre Puts in "Hallberg" Machines and Economizers

J. H. Hallberg, of 36 East 23d St., New York City, has secured the order for the Moving Picture machine and electrical equipment of Miner's new theatre, which occupies one-half a block on Third Avenue, near 156th Street, New York. This theatre has a seating capacity of about 2,000 and is one of the handsomest in Greater New York. Regular plays will be produced as well as vaudeville and motion pictures.

There will be installed two "Hallberg" spot lights with economizers in the second balcony, which are claimed to be the most powerful ever produced. The motion picture equipment will consist of Motiograph No. 1, 1910 model machines and the "Hallberg" Automatic Electric Economizer will control the arc lamps. The stage pockets will also be equipped with "Hallberg" Automatic Electric Economizers, one for each spot light, of which eight (8) will be required. The use of the economizer on the spot light increases the brilliancy almost 100% over rheostat control, reducing the noise to the minimum on alternating current and saves between 60 to 70% on the current bill. There has also been installed an electric sign reading "Miner's" on both sides, which will be controlled by an automatic flasher to light first one side then the other and so on. This sign is equipped with the "Hallberg" incandescent lighting system, and there are two "Hallberg" Economizers, one for each side of the sign. This system is guaranteed to save two-thirds on the current bill for the illumination of the sign. The current is alternating 104-volt, 2-phase, 60 cycles, and is supplied by the New York Edison Company.

This installation includes the most modern and up-to-date equipment in every detail and is in charge of Mr. Baker, Chief Electrician for the theatre.

"ASSASSINATION" PICTURES WITHDRAWN.

Because of pressure brought to bear by Acting Mayor John Purroy Mitchel and other officials of the city of New York, the Levi Company, song slide manufacturers, has consented to discontinue the sale in New York City of slides illustrating the attempted assassination of Mayor Gaynor, and to postpone the sale outside the City of New York until the Mayor is out of danger. This action on the part of the city officials was taken because of the fear that the illustrations, if shown in New York, where the sentiment for the invalid Mayor is very strong, would arouse anew bitter feeling and hatred against the assassin and incite disorder.

The slides of the attempted assassination are one of the new features of the Levi Company, which concern, by special arrangement with the American Press Association, makes illustrations for all the big news events of the day.

Late Saturday night, August 13, Mr. Levi was awakened from slumber by a friend, who informed him that City Hall officials had been endeavoring to reach him for several days. A few minutes later Capt. Waldron, of the Mayor's office, drove to the house and requested Mr. Levi to appear before Acting Mayor Mitchel next morning.

Gathered in the Mayor's office were Acting Mayor Mitchel, Police Capt. Waldron, Secretary Waldron, Mr. Levi, his partner—Mr. Applebaum—his lawyer and several detectives. It was decided that no action could be taken against Mr. Levi other than to appeal to his patriotism. This they did, and obtained his promise to restrict the sale. Mr. Levi is in high spirits, for what looked on Saturday night like an arrest turned out to be a friendly meeting, settled amicably and satisfactory to all.

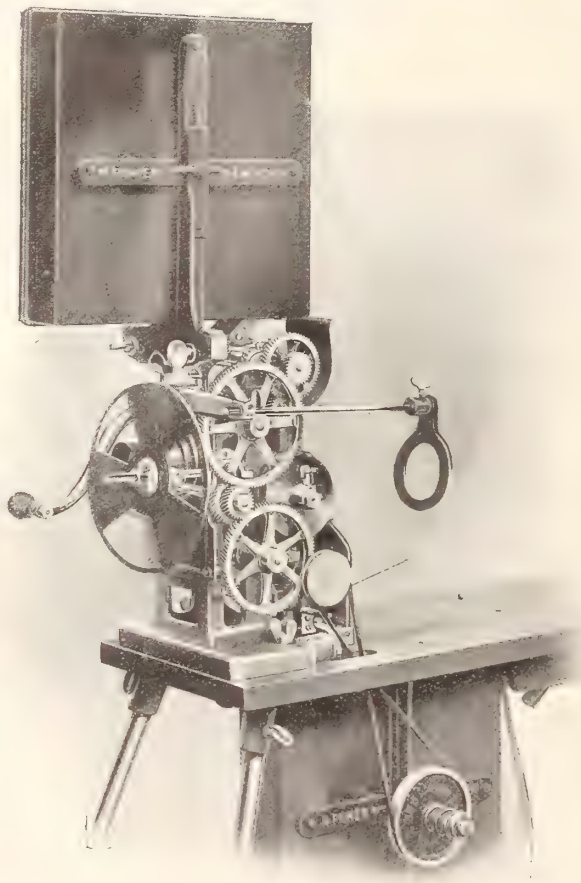
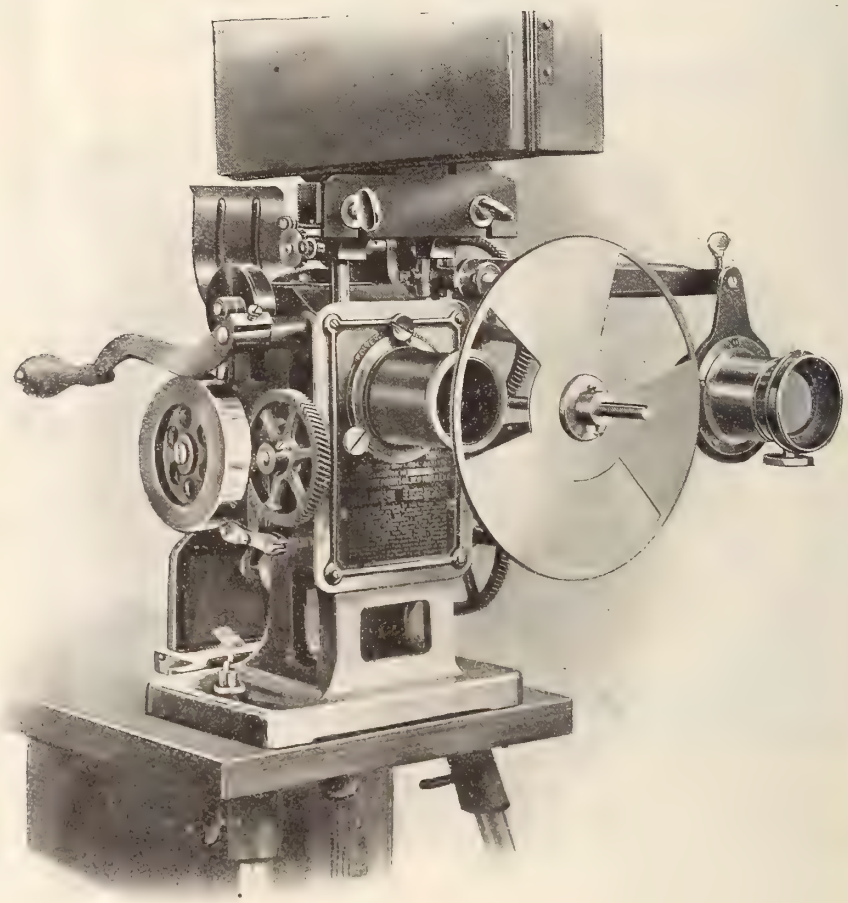
POWER'S
CAMERAGRAPH No. 6





A Few of the Necessary Features of a SUCCESSFUL Moving Picture Machine are:

Flickerless Pictures
Steady Pictures — Guard against injuring or tiring the eyes of of your patrons.

Heavy Gears
Thick Spindles
Wide Bearings — Insure long wear. Buy a machine which will stand a steady grind of many hours daily.

Rugged Intermittent Movement — Do away with your delicate star and pin wheel which requires such close, careful adjustment and wears out so fast.

Accessibility of All Parts — There is a distinct advantage in having all the parts on the outside of your mechanism where they can be instantly gotten at.

Absence of Noise — Don't give your patrons the idea you are running a thrashing machine.

Evenly Balanced Movement — This will prevent pounding, undue wear and strain.

Ease of Operation — Indicating absence of undue friction.

All of These and Many Other Excellent Features are Contained in

CAUSUAL COMMENT

ELSEWHERE is published the full text of the opinion of Attorney General O'Malley of the State of New York on the legality of exhibiting the motion pictures of the boxing contest between Johnson and Jeffries at Reno, Nev., on July 4.

Read it.

Briefly the learned counsel for the state admits that even the very comprehensive penal code of New York state is not violated by the exhibition of such pictures.

This will be sad news indeed for the Hysterical Hearstlican Reformers all over the country, and it will be interesting to note the general change of official opinion throughout the country following this opinion and that of Mayor Gaynor previously announced.

Thought everybody was going "bughouse" at one time, but seems now that not everyone was crazy on the "fight picture" question. Getting that sober second thought. Yes?

GOT another letter this week on the subject of "Revivals"; quite enthusiastic, too. Writer is an exhibitor in Indiana; read what he says in another column, but his list of candidates for revival hasn't quite hit the little spot on the target that rings the bell. Do not say that his selections are not good, and we have entered them for final consideration, but they do not seem to be up to the mark.

This contest is not closed, though, and will not be for some time; so come on boys with your suggestions. Haven't all got "writer's cramp," have you?

What's happened to all the old timers who remember the good old subjects that used to get business when you gave but one reel for a 5 cent show. Remember Melies "Trip to the Moon?" 'Course you do. As our correspondents say "and there are others," though some of them would never get by the Board of Censors to-day, not to mention the Chicago police department. We tremble to think what that Chicago bunch would do to the old "Train Robbers" or the "Moonshiners." But "there are others, there are others."

Come to think of it, someone has asked for Lubin's "Meet Me at the Fountain." 'Member that one?

As a matter of fact, in the light of the present excellent photography and acting that prevails among the licensed manufacturers, there are scores of subjects which might be "done over" with good results.

But, let's have your suggestions; your preferences.

IT is especially gratifying to The Film Index to be able to offer to its readers the initial installment of Mr. J. H. Hallberg's "Electrical Talks" in this number. While the first "talk" is largely in the nature of an introduction—breaking ground, as it were—it gives an inkling of the good things that are to follow. From what we know of Mr. Hallberg's ability, and knowledge of electricity we feel quite safe in making the assertion that the pictureman, who reads his series of "talks" in The Index, whether he be owner, manager or operator, he will know more about the uses of electricity as applied to pictures than he ever knew before.

We also believe that these "talks" will mark an era of improvement in the important matters of projecting pictures and of lighting, heating and ventilating picture theatres.

PICTURES FOR BUFFALO HEALTH DEPARTMENT

The Health Department, of Buffalo, N. Y., is going into the picture business. It will open a theatre, hire men to operate the equipment, and flash pictures from films and slides on a canvas just like an ordinary dollar-chasing human being.

But it won't be for the gate receipts that the department will do this revolutionary thing. It will be to present object lessons in the preservation of health and the prevention of disease.

"I am endeavoring," said Acting Commissioner Schaefer, "to secure, through Genesee street business men, a store or hall where pictures can be examined during the carnival which they are preparing for on that street.

"We have a large collection of slides and are getting more. They will cover typhoid fever, general sanitation and hygiene, milk and its relation to the public health, tuberculosis, and general health problems. Interspersed among these slides will be films with motion pictures, for variety. We ought to pack a good sized hall on Genesee street every night during the carnival.

"Since we began to show slides in the motion picture shows of the city, we have noticed good results. We regard it as the very best method yet devised to bring home to people the necessity of simple precautions against disease, and the danger of some of the things that they do every day or that they regard with indifference.

"If we cannot make arrangements for the Genesee street carnival we will get space downtown. Next week in the picture houses there will be slides calling attention to the danger from whooping cough. We intend to continue this distributing of slides to the various picture theatres."

"THE GREENHORN AND THE GIRL"

The first page gives a reproduction of a characteristic scene from the Lubin comedy, "The Greenhorn and the Girl," scheduled for release Monday, September 12. The Greenhorn is the joke of the camp and when the cowboys think that the boss' old maid sister is to pay a visit to the camp they agree to let the greenhorn drive over to town for her. It's the pretty niece who arrives and the cowboys wonder at the greenhorn's attentiveness until a fake Indian attack, in which the greenhorn behaves with real courage, brings about the denouement and an engagement.

MORE REVIVAL SUGGESTIONS

An Indiana Exhibitor Says the Idea is Great and Names Favorites—Lynn Exhibitor Heard From

Two more communications from exhibitors who are interested in the revival of the old favorites have been received. Mr. G. Campbell, of Sullivan, Ind., is enthusiastic over the plan and suggests a few titles. Mr. E. H. Horstman, of Lynn, Mass., has more suggestions to offer. Looks as though the idea would become a popular one. The letters are published in full below:

Sullivan, Ind., Aug. 22, 1910.

The Film Index:

Gentlemen—It is with a great deal of interest that we read your article "Why Not Picture Revivals," which appeared in The Index under dater of Aug. 20, and in which you invite exhibitors to write in their opinion regarding same. That is what we have been hammering at ourselves for the past year, and when we note that The Index has also taken up this subject—well, The Index has scored several points in our estimation, and here's hoping this idea will be realized.

We have talked with many exhibitors regarding what they thought of running some of the fine headliners again that they ran three or four years ago, and every one of them would be tickled to death if the manufacturers would only get busy and commence making new positives off the negatives of the old headliners. Why not? Everyone has forgotten them. They would be new again; they would make a big hit.

We have been trying and trying [redacted] changes to make a demand for them. They say the exhibitors do not want them. They are "clean off their trolley." They are speaking on a subject they are not familiar with. The exhibitors DO want them. They will be new again, and I will venture the assertion that if a vote could be taken all over the Union it would show that the exhibitors will welcome the old headliners again.

Here are some of the films that we certainly would be glad to run again:

"The Red Spectre"—Pathe,
"The Miller's Daughter"—Edison,
"On His Mother's Grave,"
"Pay Day at the Light House,"
"A Slave's Love"—Pathe,
"The Watchmaker's Secret"—Pathe,
"Mephisto"—Pathe,
"Harlequin's Story,"

and many others. They would all make a big hit again. Keep up the good work. Let us have all the old time favorites again. It will give the manufacturers a chance to catch their breath on new ideas. It will be a good thing all round. Old plays are brought to life and score a second triumph, so why not the fine old pictures? The "live" wires in the picture business will welcome them. It may be there is a few ex-butchers, bakers, etc., who will make a kick, but then they speak their own sentiments and NOT what the public wants.

We also would like to see the censorship board "take a reef." They do not stop to think if they cut out the very heart and soul and gizzard of the pictures interest, why, what is there to attract? Let the films have strong moral endings; THAT'S WHAT COUNTS.

Keep up the good work; give us the old films again.

Respectfully, G. CAMPBELL.

Lynn, Mass., Aug. 22, 1910.

The Film Index:

Gentlemen—Replying to yours in The Film Index regarding reissues of old subjects, would state that there are a number of them which would be well worth repetition as they, in their time, caused considerable merriment and comment. Among them I might mention:

"Terrible Ted." "Old Isaac," "The Pawnbroker," "Cowboy and Schoolmarm." "Cowboy Millionaire," "Why Girls Leave Home," "Dr. Dipple's Sanitarium," "Parlay vou Francais," "Mrs. Henpeck's Husband," "Bad Boy's Joke at a Wedding Party," "Battle Royal," "Mrs. Jones' Birthday Present," "Mr. Inquisitive," "Dr. Skinham's Beauty Parlor."

I think that the whole or any of these subjects, especially those dealing with comedy, would well bear repetition. Very truly yours,

E. H. HORSTMANN.

NOT ILLEGAL IN NEW YORK

Attorney General O'Malley Holds that Johnson-Jefferies Contest Pictures Violate No Law.

Not an Offense to Public Morals.

Says There Is a Difference Between a Fight and a Visual Representation of Such a Contest—Opinion Should Stop Opposition In New York State.

ATTORNEY GENERAL O'MALLEY, of New York state, handed his opinion regarding the legality of the Johnson-Jeffries fight pictures to Governor Hughes on Saturday, August 20. He reviews the matter at some length, giving as his opinion that there is nothing in the penal code of the State of New York to prevent the exhibition of such a contest. The opinion follows:

"As requested by you in your communication of the 3d inst., I have examined the the question whether the exhibition in this State of moving pictures of the Jeffries-Johnson prize fight, recently held at Reno, Nev., violates the penal law. As a result of the investigation it is my opinion that, except in unusual cases, it does not.

"The only provisions which it could be claimed were violated by this exhibition are 1530, 1140a, and 43 of the penal law. The first of these sections defines a public nuisance as a crime against the order and economy of the State which consists in unlawfully committing an act which 'annoys, injures or endangers the comfort, repose, health or safety of any considerable number of persons,' or 'offends public decency.'

"Sec. 1140a of the penal law makes it a misdemeanor to advertise, present or participate in any 'indecent, immoral or impure exhibition, show or entertainment, which would tend to the corruption of the morals of young or others.'

"Sec. 43 of the penal law provides penalties for acts offending against public decency, not specifically prohibited by other sections of the law, by making it a misdemeanor to commit any act which seriously disturbs or endangers the public peace or health or which openly outrages public decency.'

"There are no crimes in this State except those defined by statute (section 22, penal law) unless the statute expressly and clearly prohibits certain acts, the doing thereof will not be held to be prohibited under the rules of construction and applicable to penal statutes. In other words, by a fair interpretation on the terms of the statute it must be clear that the act or acts were intended to be prohibited. I am of the opinion that the exhibitions to which you call my attention do not offend public decency in the sense in which those words are used in section 1054 and section 43 of the penal law above mentioned.

"It is also my opinion that they do not constitute an immoral exhibition or 'show which would tend to the corruption of the morals of youth or others,' as those words are used in section 1140a of the penal law. It would follow from this, therefore, that the mere giving of these exhibitions does not in itself constitute a violation of the penal law.

"If, however, such exhibitions, as a matter of fact, tended to arouse race prejudice or to instigate any considerable number of persons to deeds of violence, they would, of course, become public nuisances as endangering the comfort, repose and safety of the community and would be violations of section 1530 of the penal law.

"I have not overlooked the public policy of this State as declared in section 1710 of the penal law, prohibiting the holding of prize fights within this State, nor those decisions in several other States in which it is held that the giving of a prize fight could be enjoined on the ground that it is a public nuisance. But in my opinion there is a difference in the effect upon spectators of an actual prize fight and of the mere visual representation of such a contest."

NEW YORK COMMERICAL REVIEW'S OPINION.

Regarding the opinion of Attorney General O'Malley the New York Commercial ventures the following editorial comment:

PRIZE FIGHT PICTURES LAWFUL.

Attorney-General O'Malley's official opinion on the legal status of exhibitions of prize fight pictures, as submitted at the request of Governor Hughes, is about what was to have been expected—he holds that such exhibitions cannot be stopped under any provision of the criminal code in New York State. The only three sections of the code under which it could possibly be claimed that they are prohibited are numbers forty-three, eleven hundred and forty-"a" and fifteen hundred and thirty. The first makes it a misdemeanor to commit any act that "seriously disturbs or endangers the public peace or health or which openly outrages public decency." The second makes it a misdemeanor to advertise, present or participate in any "indecent, immoral or impure exhibition, show or entertainment which would tend to the corruption of the morals of the young or others." And the last-named section defines a public nuisance as a crime against the order and economy of the State, which consists in unlawfully committing an act which "annoys, injures or endangers the comfort, repose, health or safety of any considerable number of persons" or "offends public decency." The attorney-general's analysis of these provisions as they might be possibly construed to apply to moving pictures of prize fights is very clear and conclusive. He holds that such exhibitions do not offend "public decency" in the sense contemplated by the statute, and that they do not constitute an "immoral exhibition" in themselves. He is careful, however, to show how they might become violations of the law, saying:

"If, however, such exhibitions as a matter of fact tended to arouse race prejudice or instigate any considerable number of persons to deeds of violence, they would, of course, become public nuisances as endangering the comfort, repose and safety of the community and would be violations of section one thousand five hundred and thirty of the penal law.

"I have not overlooked the public policy of this State as declared in section one thousand seven hundred and ten of the penal law, prohibiting the holding of prize fights within this State, nor those decisions in several other States in which it is held that the giving of a prize fight could be enjoined on the ground that it is a public nuisance. But in my opinion there is a difference in the effect upon spectators of an actual prize fight and of the mere visual representation of such a contest."

This latter point is the all-important one. A prize fight itself is an act of violence, almost always involves physical wounds or injuries and not infrequently results in death—there was a death over in Philadelphia only last Saturday night caused by a boxer's blow on his opponent's jaw; but the mere picture of such a fight cannot inflict physical injury, nor is it likely to corrupt the morals of anybody; indeed, where the picture is a "moving" one, the entertainment provided by it is in large part afforded by the fact of the wonderful scientific achievement presented by it; and there are people in plenty who will pay money to witness an exhibition of prize fight moving pictures but who could not be hired to go to a real "live" prize fight.

In view of this opinion by the attorney-general, it would be interesting to learn how he would rule in the matter of an exhibition of moving pictures depicting the perpetration of a crime of violence—such, for instance, as the attack on Mayor Gaynor with the intention of murdering him. Both prize fighting and an assault with a pistol are violations of law punishable under the code. But it is easy to understand how exhibiting pictures of the former may be perfectly legitimate while exhibiting a picture of a murderous assault might offend "public decency" or constitute an "immoral exhibition." There is certainly a difference. And the courts would no doubt sustain the legality of the recent police order in this city forbidding the showing of pictures of the Gaynor assault.

FIGHT SLIDES UNPOPULAR.

Turned Down by Audience in Coffeyville, Kas., Which Yelled "Fake."

Makers of slide views of the Johnson-Jeffries contest have not been meeting with unbounded success in their venture. In a number of instances the audiences have expressed their dislike for this class of fight pictures in terms that could not be mistaken.

Out in Coffeyville, Kas., an indepnedent theatre called The Pastime put fight slides on during the evening of Aug. 17. What happened is told by the following story published in The Earth, of that city:

WOULDN'T STAND FOR IT.

Crowd at Princess Airdome Rebelled and Ask foi Refund of Money.

Considerable excitement prevailed at the Princess Airdome, opposite the City Hall, last night and the police were called upon to take part in assisting the crowd which had assembled there in securing their money back because of an alleged fake picture production.

A reproduction of the Johnston-Jeffries fight had been heavily advertised to be shown in motion pictures last night. The house was well filled at two-bits a head. The crowd waited in anxious expectancy for the curtain to go up when they would see what they had long wished for, a reproduction of the heavyweight championship contest between Jeffries and Johnson at Reno, July 4.

The curtain went up, but instead of what was expected it is claimed that the pictures had been taken from a specially prepared scene in which the arena was represented by about a ten foot ring, drawn with a piece of chalk, and the crowd represented by about thirty men and small boys around the ring waving their hats in the air at the command of a prompter. The participants of the fight are said to have been represented by a colored man and a white man, neitber one comparing in appearance to the least degree with the men the pictures were supposed to portray.

A yell of "fake" immediately went up from the audience and a rush made for the door. A demand for their money back was registered at the gate by a large number. The demand increased but there was apparently nothing doing along the line of giving anything back. The anger of the disappointed crowd increased. The police were called and finally things began to look so warm for the gay deceivers that it was decided best to return the money to all who demanded, which number comprised practically everyone who had paid.

UP-TO-DATE USE FOR PICTURES.

Rev. R. B. Dunlap, an evangelist, of Atlanta, Ga., is introducing motion pictures and illustrated songs, of the catchy popular variety as a drawing card for a series of revival meetings. The motion pictures are not on religious subjects, but are just like the best that may be seen in the refined motion picture theatres, nor are the songs hymns. Some of them are love songs. Mr. Dunlap wants to reach the young people, and doesn't believe there is anything wrong in attracting them to church by pleasant, harmless amusements.

"THE SEPOY'S WIFE"

A Vitagraph Life Portrayal

WHAT strikes us in this picture is not the fact that the heroine is a Sepoy's wife, it is the woman herself and the heroic chances she takes in showing her gratitude in return for the services rendered by a young English doctor in saving her child from the fatal effects of the dreadful Indian fever.

The story is historical and human, two strong points in its favor. The Sepoy end of it gives an idea of what they were like and some of the difficulties the English government had in handling their adopted aliens in India. They were fanatics, their treachery and rebellious natures kept the English soldiers in a constant state of uncertaiity as to what would be the next outbreak.

The woman's husband is a fiend incarnate when Englishmen are concerned and he doesn't fail to show his hatred when the army physician calls to attend the child. He views the doctor with suspicious jealousy and is bent on venting it when he gets the chance. He starts a rebellion against the English and induces the Sepoys to desert from the army and declare their independence. At their head he leads the rebels direct to the home of the army surgeon.

The Sepoy's wife has overheard the plans of the deserters and hastens to warn the doctor's family. She is fleet of foot and she glides through the brush and grasses like a serpent. There's a gleam of fire in her eyes that shows that the cunning of her race is infused by a hallowed desire to save her friends and outwit the treachery and baseness of her husband. She succeeds, but none too soon. Disappointed in his purpose the villainous Sepoy and his allies burn the doctor's house to the ground and wildly dash onward in their madness.

The Sepoy's wife leads the doctor's family to a place of security, but not without many narrow escapes from the enemy and here is where we get some real thrilling situations and some strong acting. While the Sepoys pass closely by the hiding place of the fugitives we feel like helping things along and experience a sense of relief when the suspense is over.

Now the tawny insurgents commence to do things and so do the English soldiers of the garrison, fighting back the attack of the marauders. Shot, smoke and shell fill the air and the action that makes you know there is something going on is getting in some good strokes of real dramatic value. The little wife of the Sepoy adds to the action and interest by notifying the British Highlanders, who swing through the foot hills and beaten paths to the tune of "The Campbells Are Coming." Then with a flank movement, fall upon the rear of the Sepoys with sword and musketry until every mother's son of them is dead or wishes he were.

The rebellion is put down—the doctor and his family saved and the Sepoy's wife triumphant in her devotion to her friends.

The variety of interest in this film is very broad—the central thought is emphasized by climax and concentration, the change from scenes of home to the field of battle, the contrasting characteristics of the Sepoys, English, soldiers and the coloring given by the "Kiltie" keep things moving fast enough to reach any but dead audiences.

SCENES FROM VITAGRAPH SUBJECT "THE SEPOY'S WIFE."

NEW THEATRE FOR PARK SQUARE

American Music Hall to Become Once More "The Orpheum"

William Morris, Inc., which for the past two years has held the lease of the American Music Hall, of Boston, Mass., operating there high class vaudeville, has transferred the lease to the Motion Picture Co., of Massachusetts, which will operate popular vaudeville beginning Aug. 29. William Morris, Inc., still retains large interests in the American Music Hall, for most of the men in the new company are also directors in the William Morris, Inc.

In a way it is a family arrangement, brought about by the fact that William Morris, Inc., presents only high class vaudeville, while the new company confines itself to popular vaudeville, operating palatial houses of this kind in several of the largest cities of the country. The name of the theater will be changed back to "The Orpheum," by which name it was known up to a year ago, while the name "American Music Hall" is retained exclusively by William Morris, Inc., for a new theater which is to be built here at once.

In fact the controlling feature of the transfer is that William Morris, Inc., has just closed a deal of the greatest importance for a new first-class theater, to be built on the point of the Park Square Trust Company property. This is the strategical point of the big Park square estate, the development of which will mean so much to the retail business interests of Boston. The land alone cost $700,000, while the theater is to cost $350,000, It will seat 2,600 people.

A big feature will be a summer theater on the roof, which will have 1,700 seats. The architects have been instructed to spare no expense in making this theater, the newest Boston playhouse, the very finest place of amusement in the country. The negotiations for William Morris Inc., were carried on here by M. Douglass Flattery. The old Orpheum Theater will be under the personal direction of William J. Gane, general manager of the Moving Picture Company of America, and the resident manager will be James R. Cowan.—(Boston Journal.)

BUSINESS GOOD AT HARTFORD.

The Happy Hour theatre, Hartford, Conn., is one of the picture theatres in that city, that has been most prosperous during the summer. Straight pictures and illustrated songs make up the bill of that popular resort and every afternoon and night the theatre is crowded.

Manager Harrison Harries, who was a visitor to the offices of The Film Index, last Saturday, says: "Its straight pictures for me and my patrons. They come to see good pictures and I provide them with the best the licensed companies can give. I think that's enough said."

ELECTRICAL TALKS

On Electricity in Its Relation to the Motion Picture Theatre

INTRODUCTION.

DO you realize that you are conducting one of the most beneficial and educational institutions of the country. Every motion picture theatre, properly conducted, is as I might say, a recreation and resting place for the over-worked brain and from an educational and amusement point of view, it has no parallel because you teach without language through the eye to the brain by means of motion and acting making everybody, foreigner or native, understand alike. Therefore, you must do your part to make this transmission of intelligence without words as clear, easy and restful as possible by making your picture stand out bold, steady and clear on your screen.

Electricity.

That magnificent and most wonderful force or power, which almost runs the world, has in no little measure contributed to the phenomenal success of the motion picture industry. In justice to yourself, to your business and to your patrons, you must become more familiar with the functions and the general application of electricity in your theatre so that you may economize and improve the results to the greatest possible extent.

There is no substitute, at the present moment ing ast, for the electric current as a means for advertising your place of business, illuminate your theatre and for projecting brilliant pictures.

The economical application and most practical selection of the many different kinds of current and appliances for motion picture theatres, is not so thoroughly and generally understood by the average electrician as one would believe. Experience in all branches of the electrical business including designing and manufacturing electrical apparatus, electric wiring, installation of electrical machines, ventilating systems and fittings of all kinds, generating and distributing electric current, and last but not least, thorough knowledge of the requirements of motion picture theatres in particular, must be the accomplishments of your electrical advisor.

The Editor of The Film Index, has retained my services to give you a series of "Electrical Talks" through the columns of The Film Index. Before going any further I want to openly thank him for the confidence he has placed in my ability, and also to express to you the fact that I feel highly honored in doing this work and any good which I can do by these "Electrical Talks" will benefit exhibitors by the thousands and patrons of theatres by the millions.

The most difficult part of my problem will be to make everything clear and plain to you, but I am sure that if you will carefully read each line you will understand; read it again and again so that you will remember it.

Before discussing the Electrical Equipment in detail, we will first become familiar with the meaning of electrical terms and names.

"ELECTRICAL TALK." No. 1.

Voltage.

Voltage is the word which signifies the pressure of the electric current on or in an electric circuit.

Voltage is also represented by any of the following words which practically mean the same thing: Potential, Electro-Motive-Force, Electric Pressure. These are the most common.

As already stated, voltage represents the pressure of an electric system or service just the same as pounds per square inch represents the pressure in a water, steam or compressed air pipe.

To give you a practical illustration by which you may judge voltage, I may say that an ordinary electric battery such as used for telegraph and fire alarm systems, gives a pressure of just about one volt. Now if we take 110 such batteries and connect them in series one after the other, we will have between the first and the last wire a potential or voltage of 110 volts.

You will understand that electric batteries which produce electric current by means of chemical action are not practical for heavy or continuous work, therefore electric dynamos or generators, which produce almost any desired voltage and current by the use of mechanical power to drive such generators are necessary and are universally used for the supply of current on a large scale.

Voltage is measured by a volt meter, which may be attached to the two wires to be tested. Another method of testing voltage roughly, is to connect two incandescent lamps of the same candle power, each one of 110 volts, in series. If both lamps burn bright, that is, giving the normal candle power, you know that the circuit delivers about 220 volts. If the lamps burn very dim giving only one quarter of the normal candle power, the circuit delivers about 110 volts. This method of testing with lamps is not recommended as being accurate or final, but may be used by the traveling exhibitor in determining for himself before he connects his machine circuit, whether the 110 or 220 volt rheostat should be used.

Suppose you have a water pipe one mile long and at the end of it there is a faucet and just ahead of the faucet a water pressure gauge is connected to the pipe, and the gauge indicates 110 lbs. Now open the faucet and you will see that the pressure gauge needle will fall back, depending upon how wide you open the faucet and the size of the pipe. If the pipe is very small, the friction which the water creates in flowing against the wall of the pipe will cause the pressure at the end to drop very low.

Just so is the voltage of a circuit affected. If you have two small wires running a distance of a mile and at the end of the wires we connect an arc lamp, a quantity of incandescent lamps, or a motor, the voltage, when the arc lamp is not burning, is 110; when it is switched on the voltage may drop very low if the wires are not large enough, due to the friction or resistance offered by the wire to the flow of current; and it is evident that the arc lamp, the incandescent lamps, or the motor at the end of your wires will not operate properly. I believe that the foregoing explanation will give you a good idea of the word or term voltage.

Ampere.

Ampere is the word which signifies the quantity or volume of electricity flowing through an electric circuit, arc lamp, incandescent lamp, motor or other machine, connected to the circuit.

The measurement called "gallon" in the water system, or cubic foot for gas, designates quantity or volume. So does the ampere in the electric system.

Remember, at the end of the water pipe referred to under the heading VOLTAGE we had a pressure of 110 lbs. on the gauge when no water was flowing and also at the end of the electric circuit we had 110 volts when the wires were not connected to the arc lamp, or other load. The reason why the water gauge showed full 110 lbs. or the volt meter 110 volts, at the end of the pipe line or the electric circuit was, that the faucet was closed or the electric wires were not connected to a load. There were no gallons of water flowing through the pipe and there were no amperes flowing through the electric wires, consequently no work was done and there simply remained the pressure at the end of the pipe or at the end of the wires ready to do work.

As the diameter of the pipe has to be larger in order to carry more gallons of water, so does the electric wire have to be larger in order to carry more amperes. Otherwise the friction in the pipe or the resistance in the wire will use up the pressure or voltage before we get to the faucet or to the arc lamp, making the flow of gallons very low or the flow of amperes much less than it ought to be. From the above, you can make up your mind that the size of the wire required for an electric circuit depends entirely upon the number of amperes required for the electric installation.

To give you an idea of the general amount or volume of an ampere I might tell you that one-sixteen candle power lamp on 110 volts requires about one-half ampere; one regular enclosed arc lamp, such as usually furnished by the electric lighting companies requires about five amperes on 110 volts; one direct current arc lamp for motion picture machine requires about thirty amperes.

Our next talk will begin with a discussion of the words "OHM," "RESISTANCE" and the "WATT."

NEW MANAGER FOR MANHATTAN THEATRE.

Mr. William Walsh, formerly manager of the Circle theatre, Fifty-ninth street, New York city, has been transferred by Proprietor W. J. Gane, to the Manhattan motion picture theatre at the southwest corner of Broadway and Thirty-first street.

Mr. Walsh is one of the pioneers in the motion picture game, having been in the business since it was first started. During that time, he has always been interested in the business and has shown a keen interest in choosing the latest pictures. His long experience as a manager renders him competent of being one of the best judges in film line.

The transfer of Mr. Walsh to the Manhattan theatre assures the patrons of receiving the best kind of treatment.

At the Circle theatre Mr. James Simpson has been made the manager.

"FROM THE ARCTICS TO THE TROPICS."

BACK FROM A LONG CHASE

Sales Manager Coles of Nicholas Power Co. Completes 10,000 Mile Trip

Mr. Howard B. Coles, Sales Manager of the Nicholas Power Co. of New York, returned last week from a 10,000 mile business trip around the country. He left New York May 8 last, and during the three months and more that the trip consumed has visited exchanges and exhibitors in the middle states, the western, the southern, and the extreme northern parts of this country.

The primary object of the tour was to introduce the perfected Power's No. 6 Cameragraph. But wherever Mr. Coles went he discovered that it was already well known. Exhibitors throughout the country took a great deal of interest in its new and original features, and those who had been able to watch it in operation for several months, gave this new machine their unqualified approval.

The busy little sales manager is modest about the results of his journeys, but it was learned from a member of the Nicholas Power Co., that orders for the new machine had so increased of late that it was only with great difficulty and by overtime work that they were able to fill them.

On his jaunt Mr. Coles, of course, met many well known men in the trade, observed many things of interest, and had many odd experiences. He tells us in the following interesting manner of his trip.

"Starting out from New York on the 8th of May I touched a few of the high spots between here and Chicago and had several pleasant automobile rides, luncheons and dinners with the film exchange men in the various cities I stopped at. Business seemed to be prospering with all.

"In Chicago I spent 10 days getting acquainted with members of the trade whom I had not previously met in New York. Next to New York, Chicago of course is the most important moving picture headquarters in this country and in spite of the length of time I spent there I left feeling that there were still many whom I should liked to have seen and become personally acquainted with.

"I found St. Louis going crazy over open air shows. Up to the time I left, which was early in June, the City License Bureau had received 112 applications for licenses for "Airdomes." This demand had practically wiped out every stock of machines in that city. There was a stiff fight going on between the independents and the licensed exchanges but the licensees were holding their own in good shape.

"If any one in the moving picture trade visits New Orleans and does not say that Jean Pearce, of the Imported Film & Supply Co. is not one of the most genial fellows he has ever met, there is something wrong with him. Two baseball games, a prize fight and a fishing trip on Lake Ponchartrain were only a few of the pastimes indulged in and Mr. Pearce insisted upon acting as host for dinner on various occasions at some of the quaint old French restaurants which have helped to make New Orleans famous.

"In Texas, with the exception of Dallas and Houston, the towns are pretty small and the exhibitors are making only a fair living but with good crops this summer business there should be excellent during the coming season.

"Mr. Vance Fulkerson and Mr. Will Winch who have the three licensed theatres in El Paso made my visit there a very pleasant one and properly introduced me on the border so that after crossing into Mexico I was able to come back through quarantine and the customs without any trouble. My only disappointment in El Paso was that I reached there the only Sunday in the year when they did not have a bull fight in Juarez, which is across the border. On account of its being election day in Mexico the bull fight had to be called off by order of the Government.

"I found Mr. W. H. Clune of Los Angeles very enthusiastic about the fight at Reno and anxious to have me go up there with him. Mr. Clune has two moving picture theatres which are models of their kind and do a capacity business every night. Mr. Tally of the Tally Film Exchange had just completed a beautiful theatre and reports a most excellent exchange business.

"The most striking feature of the moving picture business in San Francisco is the high wage scale paid to the operators. The minimum wage is $30. and the maximum $35. per week. The results is that the operators in that city are high class mechanics and electricians who put on expert shows and keep their machines in the best of condition. Many of the Eastern cities could profit by the example of San Francisco in this respect. The exhibitors cannot attach too much importance to the operating room, their machines and the men who operate same. This, aside from the films, is the heart and soul of the business and often is the one place of the business which is most neglected.

"In Portland and Seattle the Amalgamated Film Exchange has the situation well in hand and their Seattle office does quite an export business with Canada in the line of machines and supplies.
